SATISFACTION DOUBLY ASSURED

HERE in the heart of Filmdom—practically at the front door of the vast majority of the studios of America—is Standard Film Laboratories.

It is one of the most completely equipped, thoroughly organized and highly efficient laboratories in the world.

Here the developing and processing of the negative are done in close co-operation with director and cinematographer. And because, in Standard Film Laboratories such detailed attention is paid to the expression of the story and the tempo of the play, satisfactory Release Prints are assured Exhibitors and Exchange Managers.

Standard Prints stand up a hundred percent under hard usage. These are reasons why Exchange Managers are glad to receive Release Prints "Made in Hollywood—the Standard Way."

The Exhibitor's Mornings Mean MONEY!

HOW DO YOU spend your mornings, Mr. Exhibitor? Do you kill time around your office under the stairs waiting for box-office time to arrive and the carbons to begin purring in the projection booth over your head? Or are you booking films so rich in exploitation stunts that every forenoon is a sporting challenge—finding out how many of those exploitation stunts you can launch to a clean-up, bringing in the patrons at 2:15 o'clock?

The first thought that hops in my head when I have a plot is: What can the Exhibitor do with it? Is it rich in exploitation material? Does it lend itself to startling lobby display, local tie-ups, stunning street stuff, newspaper ads that leap from the page?

I did it in "Ladies to Board," Tom Mix's new picture. I did it in "Torment," just finished by Maurice Tourneur. I did it in "Courtin' Calamity," which brings Hoot Gibson to the front as a star of the first magnitude. I've done it in "Moral Dynamite!" and "The Fair Unknown" and "Riot!" and "The Stolen Lady!" Look at the business done by my story, "The Shock," Lon Chaney's earthquake picture—something like 4,000 bookings to date!

I'm not making work for you, Mr. Exhibitor. I'm trying to take it away. When you book my pictures you'll get films that make your mornings a joy because the material is there to work with. You don't have to scratch the old head and do a lot of cussing trying to make exploitation stuff out of film stories as dry of material as King Tut's mummy.

The time is not far distant when you're going to hunt through your daily deluge of advertising matter for press-sheets proclaiming a new PELLEY story ready for booking. That magic line: "Story by William Dudley Pelley," is going to turn your mornings into money. I'm spending thousands of dollars to convince you of it. And when you've booked one of my pictures you're going to find a different story—startling in its theme, originality and treatment.

"When a Man's a Man" Surprise of Last Week on Coast—Westerns Picking Up Out There of Late —"Tiger Rose" Didn't Do Any Too Well

San Francisco, Feb. 12. Business continues better than usual in the big downtown picture theatres despite a spell of very bad weather. The surprise last week was the Warfield's feature "When a Man's a Man," based on a Hard Bell Wright novel. The management had hoped for a good week, but not runaway business.

The consensus of opinion is that the public has sort of staled on the sex stuff fed them for so long and are eagerly seizing the Western features as a distinct change. Two weeks ago the Granada piled up a record week with Tom Mix in "The Lone Star Ranger," and a month or so ago "The Virginian" also scored heavily.

On page 7, you get the meaning of how a director's force makes itself felt in putting over one of the most successful comedy series known to the film public.

On page 29 the reader is taken behind the scenes of both author's and director's brain, so to speak, and what he sees is a climatic revelation in giving selling appeal to a film.

In "What Makes Mary and Mickey Buy Your Tickets" a prominent author tells how he arranges his plots in order to clinch a selling argument for the showman.

He defines the broadest problem in the simplest terms. For real, forceful, contagious, selling ideas, you'll find Mr. Schauer a golden source of advice and information.

Advertising Aids is the name of the next issue. It might as well have been named Modern Merchandising Methods, for that's exactly what its considerations embrace. Industry Honors Thomas A. Edison

at Notable Luncheon

Great Inventor's Lifework Praised Without Stint by Men of National Prominence

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

THE motion picture industry declared a half-holiday on the afternoon of February 15 to pay its respects to Thomas Alva Edison. The testimonial, which was in celebration of the seventy-seventh birthday of the inventor, took the form of a luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton.

Will H. Hays was toastmaster. President Coolidge sent a most cordial letter of congratulation for the guest of honor. David Lloyd George, former prime minister of England, sent greetings from across the ocean. A hundred other messages came from men prominent in the walks of life.

George Eastman, who was seated beside Mr. Edison; Senators Robert L. Owen, of Oklahoma, and Edward I. Edwards, of New Jersey, addressed the diners. So, too, did Rupert Hughes, Dr. Lee De Forrest, Professor Hudson Maxim, Terry Ramsaye and M. J. O'Toole.

Then at the close of the scheduled speaking came a bit of a surprise when Mr. Hays called upon "that very great actor, Douglas and Mary Pickford."

Just prior to that Senator Owen, in giving point to a casual reference to a fifty-fifty arrangement, had told the story of the sausage-maker, who in explaining the ingredients of his product had said they were fifty-fifty, horse and rabbit, and in further explanation had said "One horse, one rabbit."

As the toastmaster called upon the two players, who were seated at opposite ends of the speakers' table, they both arose. The diners stood up with them, vigorously clapping their hands. As the applause subsided Mr. Fairbanks was left alone on his feet.

"I don't know whether this is fifty-fifty," he remarked, "but I think it is. I am the rabbit."

Prolonged laughter greeted the sally. Mr. Fairbanks conveyed to the guest of honor the regard of the west coast colony. He was followed by Miss Pickford in one of the most effective speeches of the afternoon. As she concluded her brief talk Mr. Edison arose and went over to Miss Pickford. To President and Mr. Lloyd George the toastmaster said:

Greatest of Americans

"It is with a genuine sense of deference that I join in this gathering to honor one of the greatest of Americans.

"This is in fact an unusual assemblage, hardly paralleled in any other industry in the world—for here in this room we have the three ages of the motion picture—the past, the present and the future. And the remarkable fact is that these three ages are, after all, only one.

"Not from some half-forgotten ancestors, not from some semi-mythical personages of a remote past, has this amazing thing, the picture in motion, come to us. No! Seated here in the place of honor and to be seated in places of honor for many years, we hope, is our friend and fellow American who made the largest contribution to this instrument of entertainment and enlightenment which daily serves the leisure hours of nearly one-tenth of our entire population—Thomas Alva Edison.

"Seated about the tables are some of those pioneers—and real pioneers they were—who labored with him a quarter of a century and more ago in the developing of means whereby persons and objects in motion might be photographed.

"Here, too, we have the man who provided for Mr. Edison the one thing that was imperatively needed for the proper photographing of objects in movement—George L. Eastman, who developed and perfected the celluloid film, for which there was then and is now no fitting substitute. Another real pioneer, indeed, is Mr. Eastman—a great, a very great contributor to the industry's progress.

Pioneers Present

"Among us are pioneers in the art of bringing out in the laboratories the images impressed upon the film; pioneers in the art of projecting those images upon the screen; pioneers in the art of adapting pictures that move to the use of drama, of romance, of story-telling; pioneers in the business of showing these stories to the public in proper settings; pioneers in the distribution of film from the producers to the exhibitors.

"These are not legendary characters. These are not men of whom you have read in dull history books. These are not vague personalities of whom it is impossible to conjure up mental photographs. They are living. They are here and they have come together to pay rightful tribute to the dean of them all—Mr. Edison.

"Many elements, indeed, are represented the onlookers it seemed Mr. Edison fully reciprocated the high regard of the player.

The luncheon was set for 1 o'clock, but it was nearly an hour later before the 348 representatives of the industry and their guests were seated at the small tables in the grand ballroom. It was close upon 3 o'clock before Mr. Hays rapped for attention.

After reading the messages from the

From President Coolidge

My dear Mr. Tichenor:

Thank you for letting me know of the plan for the testimonial dinner your committee is giving in honor of Thomas A. Edison. On Mr. Edison's birthday I wired him my congratulations and added: "I assume that as always you are merely doing the day's work. I hope for your sake and that of your clientele, which is all humanity, that you will have very many more anniversaries of the same kind to spend in the same way."

Please renew my assurances of felicitation to Mr. Edison, with every kind hope for himself, his great work, and his further happiness.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

in this gathering. But though their activities in connection with pictures may be varied, there is a complete unity in the purpose of their presence. Their purpose is to express their admiration, their gratitude, their appreciation and their real affection for Thomas A. Edison.

A Stimulating Story

"As engrossing and as stimulating as any story which might be written for the screen is the story of Mr. Edison's career. Our biographical filming of him might show him as a child at his birthplace in Milan, Ohio, in 1847. But there was to be little of real childhood for Thomas Edison.

"At the age of twelve he was a wage earner, and our picture would portray him as a newsboy selling his papers and fruit and candy up and down the trains of the Grand Trunk Railway. We might film him a few years later learning telegraphy at odd moments and odd places, and then in many a lonely station, always studying; might show him as an operator at the key always thinking, always trying to make a little better that instrument of communication, the telegraph.

"You and I may not know what the directors of this medium for the interchange of information do know, the enormous value of some of his inventions having to do with that form of word-transmission—for example, the automatic repeater, the quadruplex and then the sextuplex telegraph, and the printing telegraph.

"The electric pen and mimeograph came from his mind, the carbon telephone transmitter with which you are all familiar, the megaphone to magnify sound, the phonograph, now in almost every home, and, more familiar yet, the incandescent lamp and light system which brought illumination and cheerfulness to a world of semi-darkness.

Servants of the Public

"Sir, the motion picture industry, for the very creation of which we feel you to be more responsible than any other living man, is proud to congratulate you upon the completion of seventy-seven years of life, and to speak our full appreciation and gratitude for your adaptation of this instrument, whose servants we are, to the uses of everyone, everywhere. We believe the motion picture will go on forever, and with it, as with other creatures of your brain, we are sure will live forever the name of Edison. We greet you now and we wish for you many more years of life and happiness and service."

Mr. Edison Responds

"A tendency toward stage fright, which has prevented me from becoming a dangerous rival of Fairbanks or Valentino, coupled with my extreme deafness, makes it impossible for me to speak in public. I have therefore asked Mr. Kleine to read these few lines in appreciation of the honor you do me.

"I believe, as I have always believed, that you control the most powerful instrument in the world for good and evil. Whatever part I may have played in its development was mainly along mechanical lines. The far more important development of the motion picture as a medium for artistic effort and as an educational factor is in your hands.

"Because I was working before most of you were born I am going to bore you with a little advice. Remember that you are servants of the public, and never let a desire for money or power prevent you from giving the public the best work of which you are capable. It is not the quantity of riches that counts; it's

GEORGE EASTMAN

Captain of industry whose products first made possible and then contributed materially to the advancement of motion pictures.

the quality which produces happiness, where that is possible.

"I thank you for your kindness in remembering me, and wish you a prosperous, useful and honorable future."

George Eastman made the shortest speech of the day.

"I am most happy to be here on this occasion," he said, "to assist in honoring this marvelous, this miraculous, man."

Terry Ramsaye, introduced as the historian of the industry, reviewed the beginnings of the motion picture in an entertaining way.

Mr. Ramsaye said three years ago he was asked who invented the motion picture. He replied that he didn't know, but that he would take a walk over to the public library and let his inquirer know in the morning.

"I have been three years at that work, and the story is not yet told," said the speaker. "Back in 1887 Mr. Edison got tired and bored of doing big things, like inventing the electric light. He wanted to take a rest.

"His idea of taking a rest is going out and inventing something of no importance. The first thing he did was to invent the phonograph and no one has had any rest since."

The speaker then traced the steps leading up to the motion picture, and of the difficulties encountered until the production of the film by Mr. Eastman.

In spite of the skepticism of Mr. Edison

From David Lloyd George

London, February 15, 1924.

I take the greatest possible pleasure in adding my quota to the tribute of gratitude and praise you are laying today at the feet of Thomas Edison. His contribution to the progress and welfare of humanity is alike wonderful in its variety and amazing in its range. I rejoice especially that in a green and vigorous old age he is himself a witness of the hold he has on the esteem, admiration and gratitude not only of his own country but of the whole world.

D. LLOYD GEORGE.

he permitted the Edison company to plunge to the extent of spending $500 on the erection of a studio.

"There have been a great many stories to the effect that the motion picture originated in Europe," said Mr. Ramsaye, "but I have made it a point to enter into correspondence regarding this matter and to check up on European endeavors.

"All information is to the effect that on or about a certain date the different ones got hold of an Edison Kinetoscope and went to work. I don't think there is any doubt Mr. Edison did it."

O'Toole Talks on Public Service

Mr. O'Toole spoke on the public service of the screen and as a representative of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners. He reviewed the work that is being done to co-operate with the Federal departments in the way of giving service to the citizens of the country and declared the screen should receive the same support that is being given the newspaper and magazine. He closed with a tribute to Mr. Edison.

Professor Maxim, part of whose address was a poem dedicated to Mr. Edison, praised the guest of honor, arousing enthusiasm when he declared that through his inventions "Edison turned off the dark!"

Dr. Lee De Forrest, introduced as a pioneer in the development of wireless telegraphy and an inventor of the first rank, said that the present status of electron-communication had been made possible by a seemingly minor invention of Edison back in 1888. He declared Mr. Edison was the world's greatest single living benefactor.

Senator Edwards spoke for the state of New Jersey and for the residents of the state paid their respects to its greatest citizen. "And the greatest citizen of the world," he added.

"You must remember," said the Senator, "that Mr. Edison had the foresight to see that you men and women of the motion picture industry were going to get all the money in the world, and the first invention he next made was the stock ticker, to take it away from you.

"Imagine in the places where there is no oil—I shouldn't talk about oil, because that is bad. There's rather too much oil around now, anyway. (Laughter.) But Mr. Edison developed the light, and then he developed the waterpower. That gave the men who went to bed with the chickens and got up with the sun (a chuckle)—I meant chickens (laughter)

The Directing Force Behind 'Our Gang' Comedies

NEW ideas are invaluable in any field of commercial effort; in the business of entertaining the public, they are absolutely indispensable. This axiom, as applied to the motion picture, holds a special significance for the short subject. The feature may sometimes succeed through sheer splendor of setting, magnificence of costuming, or magnitude of cast personnel. The short subject must stand or fall by the degree of originality worked into its story or action; its restricted length prohibits the substitution of any of the stock expedients available to the feature director.

The pursuit of originality has always been the gravest task confronting the producer of the short-subject comedy. Probably in no other department of the motion picture industry has the search for new ideas been prosecuted more diligently. The "gag" or "idea" man has assumed an importance, of first magnitude on the studio lot in view of this fact. The new stunt, the original situation is the ever present concern of director, players, and every other human factor associated with the production of the one and two-reel comedy.

Two years ago Hal Roach, the Pathe producer, was struck more forcibly than ever with the need for a distinctively new type of screen comedy. Hollywood had its quota of noisy, irrepressible, mischievous youngsters. Besides children, like animals, have an intrinsic appeal of their own.

Roach reasoned in this wise: Why not make the "kids" amuse others while amusing themselves? And so the "Our Gang" comedy idea was conceived. But who was to nurture and develop the idea and give it fullest expression as a medium of entertainment? That brings the hero of our story on the screen.

Two years ago, Bob left the Christie lot and interviewed Hal Roach with a view to becoming a member of the Hal Roach directorial staff. Mr. Roach had already tried out two directors on his new "kid" comedy idea; both had fallen down on the assignment. McGowan was acquainted with the idea and was asked if he could fill the post. Bob knew youngsters and said he was sure he could handle them successfully. The first "Our Gang" comedy made under McGowan's direction, titled "One Terrible Day," was released by Pathe on September 10, 1922. The latest, "Big Business," was released on February 10, 1924. In between is a list of twenty-two "Our Gang" comedies. Their success leaves no doubt that Bob's expression of confidence in being able to handle the youngsters was not overestimated. His studio associates on the Hal Roach lot, without exception, declare his management of the "Our Gang" players is one of the marvels of Hollywood.

His method is the acme of simplicity. "Teach the youngsters to be their own natural selves." He explains to them what the general action or situation is to be. He religiously eschews all detailed demonstrations of the parts they are to play and how they are to conduct themselves. He avoids any laborious rehearsals. Repeatedly, the natural acting of these youngsters, their freedom from self-consciousness and affectation, have been commented upon by leading photoplay critics, who in more than one instance have recommended the "Our Gang" players for the emulation of their older and more experienced fellow-actors of the screen.

It is seldom, however, the scrutiny and analysis of the critic penetrate behind the screen presence of the children to the marvelous personality, that is largely responsible for the success of these comedies.

Old Lady Astor Says

THE Edison luncheon is now history—and it is safe to say it will live many a day in trade annals. As Toastmaster Will Hays remarked, the gathering contained the three ages of the motion picture—the past, the present and the future. Getting down to the historical stage just note the names of those at Table 3: J. J. Kennedy, H. N. Marvin, Robert S. Marvin, Herman Casler, Thomas Armat, W. E. Gilmore, Charles Urban and Percy Waters.

SAM ROTHAFEL, the "doctor" at Broadway's big Capitol, was seated at the table with the editors. As the lecturer or the entertainer on the air—he's the works, anyway—"Roxy" gets many letters. One of these last week was from an inquisitive male person who was anxious to know if there is any chance of a man leading a Christian life in New York on $10 a week, who I promptly informed there wasn't a chance in the world that under those circumstances he would do anything else.

SO we are again to have "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," this time with Blanche Sweet as Tess. Marshall Neilan is directing the picture. The first Tess was played by Minnie Maddern Fiske for Famous Players, being one of the initial productions to be made by that company. While the star of that first picture was not aided—was handicapped, if you will—by her absence of youth, nevertheless it was a strong picture and a good picture. With a player like Miss Sweet and a director like "Micky" Neilan the result should be powerful drama. As a screen subject the book is "there."

OSCAR HANSON, who for two years has been manager of the Pathe branch at Omaha, has been transferred to Detroit. The vacancy makes way for the promotion of T. G. Meyers, who for over seven years has been a salesman in the Chicago office of Pathe. The changes are effective immediately.

FRED B. WARREN, it is announced officially by Famous Players-Lasky, has been seated at the conference table of the sales board of that company at the head of which sits Sidney R. Kent, general manager of distribution. Mr. Warren will serve in a consulting capacity in the merchandising end of the company's business. He was one of the vice president of Goldwyn at the time of its formation and later was the chief operating executive of Associated Producers. He is an expert in advertising matters as well as in salesmanship. Before entering the motion picture field Mr. Warren was a newspaper publisher, having to his credit the transformation of some weak properties into strong ones.

VINCENT TROTTER, art manager of Famous Players and a well-known member of the Ampas, and Miss Rose Rispoli, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Rispoli of New Rochelle, will be married February 28 at the Reformed Church, Flushing, L. I. Following the ceremony there will be a reception at the Flushing League Building. Our best!

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, making good on his recent threat or promise or something to remove his production to Los Angeles, started for the west coast Sunday, February 17. In that country, as a result of the success of the "Potash and Perlmutter" released last fall, he will put in the works "Potash and Perlmutter in Hollywood," which is an adaptation of "Business Before Pleasure," Montague Glass' play which shows Abe and Mawruss engaged in the picture business. There should be large opportunities for the incorporation of local color into the film that never had a look-in in the play. Mr. Goldwyn is prepared to be away a month.

LISTENERS-IN on the radio on the afternoon of February 15 got a real treat during the unfolding of the speaker's program at the Edison luncheon. It was a marvelous and a dramatic hour for those who were gathered in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton, as they followed the stirring addresses from that of Will Hays down to that of Mary Pickford. But in looking over that deeply absorbed throng we saw another picture and one, if anything, even more dramatic: Of some old-time exhibitor, a thousand miles away in some little town, with his ears glued to the headpiece, chuckling over the satire of Rupert Hughes or the quips of Douglas Fairbanks or stirred by the eloquence of Senator Owen. Distant that listener-in may have been, but it was all home stuff to him. He knew the people who were being directly talked to were his own people.

AS a result of conferences between B. P. Schulberg and J. G. Bachmann of Preferred Pictures and Al Lichtman, formerly president of the company and now general manager of exchanges for Universal, arrangements have been entered into providing for the disposition of the latter's interests in Preferred. The settlement was entirely amicable and is reported satisfactory to all parties concerned.

GETTING away from Hollywood is George Walsh, who arrived in New York on a Thursday and sailed the following Wednesday for Rome, where he will take the title part in "Ben-Hur." Mr. Walsh has been brushing up on his athletics and finds he is close to his collegiate form. The role of Ben-Hur is strenuous, the player being called upon to perform in galley and chariot races.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, who will play Messala in "Ben Hur," also is on his way to Rome, having left Los Angeles and is slated to sail from New York March 8. Incidentally the coming production will be the 405th in which Mr. Bushman has played and the first in which he has carried the role of the villain.

RICHARD WALTON TULLY, accompanied by Mrs. Tully, has arrived in New York with "Flowing Gold." We rise to remark right here that's a happy combination. That has "Back Home and Broke" beaten forty ways. However, if the Tullys take in all the shows in town, as it is a fair assumption they will, by the time they have made the rounds of the theatre agencies it is possible that flowing gold will be just ain't. Oh, but it's a picture? Yes, a Rex Beach story, featuring Anna Q. Nilsson and Milton Sills, and slated for First National release. And Richard Walton while here is to talk about "The Bird of Paradise," which adaptation of his own play he plans to film in the Hawaiian Islands. If you ask us as to our choice of the respective scenery, H. I. or N. Y., whether grass skirts or turned down goloshes, we'll give you a quick answer.

FRANK HARRIS, formerly Pathe's branch manager in St. Louis, has been promoted to be a special representative. He entered upon his new duties February 18.

THE First National Club, composed of boys young and near young and girls always young, will dance at the Hotel Astor on the evening of Friday, February 29. George R. Bilson, president of this organization of First National workers, assures us there is no reason why any male person thinking of going should hesitate on account of the more or less sinister date—that all of the girls who still are eligible to drop large hints on a fateful day like that have promised no undue advantage will be taken. In other words, the men will have just as much chance as they have on 365 days in the year, be the same more or less.

Originality Is Key to Lubitsch's Success

Master of Mob Scenes Shows Equal Skill With Simple Subjects

WHAT are the film antecedents of this master-mind among directors, Ernst Lubitsch, whose name stands for a number of highly interesting qualities, and who bids fair to stamp his impression on the history and development of motion pictures.

The man who can make stars of international repute!

Who flashed Pola Negri through the cinematic heavens!

Whose reputation for massive mob scenes is second to none, and who none the less has achieved, by his production of "The Marriage Circle," an equally enviable reputation for uncanny effects by the antipodal technique of simplicity, diminutive casts and the elimination of everything but the skeletal structure.

The man, finally who can give the movie fan as no else can the illusion of real life on the screen.

The career of Ernst Lubitsch in motion pictures dates from the year 1913, but prefacing that period were years of the thorough training demanded of those who take up the foreign stage for a career. One would scarcely realize, after seeing a Lubitsch production, that this master of screencraft entered filmland via the comedy route, but it is a fact.

He was a comedian touring the European continent with a number of other actors and actresses, some of whom have since become famous among their own people. While in Berlin he was seen on the stage by a motion picture director and offered a part in a one-reel comedy film. He accepted the engagement, and today he is world famous as a director of the unusual, of the picture that is totally different in content and construction.

As an actor, Lubitsch spent seven years touring Europe. During his theatrical career he has been on the Paris, London and Berlin stage, in addition to touring throughout the breadth and scope of Germany. His acting experience laid the groundwork for his present success as a director. Despite the fact that acting before the silent camera held a great fascination for him, he continued to appear on the legitimate stage while still engaged in motion picture production.

The production vogue in Europe at that time was one and two reel comedies. Lubitsch saw great possibilities in the motion picture, and in 1913, he directed his first one-reel comedy. His success with comedies continued throughout the year; he then decided to make them longer. He thereupon inaugurated the standard of three reel comedy pictures in 1915, definitely decided to leave the stage and seriously took up the work of direction.

One of Lubitsch's big regrets is that the American public has never seen any of his comedy efforts. However, in 1918-19 he brought forth his first great production which was destined to place him permanently among the directors of both America and Europe. This was the picturization of "Gypsy Blood," with Pola Negri. The film was acclaimed a masterpiece the world over, and shortly thereafter he made "Passion," the historical epic which placed Miss Negri in the limelight.

With the showing of "Passion" in this country, Lubitsch became a very prominent figure in directorial circles. His ability was in demand by the American producers, but he paid no attention to many tempting offers. Instead, he kept on producing abroad and during the past few years he directed "One Arabian Night," "Deception," "The Loves of Pharaoh."

TEMPTING offers of American producers, and the knowledge that the American producers' methods were far in advance of those carried on in Europe, caused Lubitsch to come to this country. And his first American effort was the direction of Mary Pickford in "Rosita." The completion of this picture brought him a contract with the Warner Brothers, who realizing the vast skill of the man, allowed him absolutely free rein for his first production. To the surprise of everyone Lubitsch chose a modern story, with a fairly small cast and the element of the spectacular absolutely absent. The result is the same, however, in "The Marriage Circle."

It is in the latter picture that Lubitsch steps out as an innovator. Here he has thrown all his old technique into the discard, reversed every known procedure and turned filmdom topsy turvy in one magnificent gesture.

INSTEAD of his mobs of people, we find a cast consisting of exactly six principals, with no "extras" to speak of; in place of his massive settings one or two modest "sets." The story is of the present minute and, although the plot would indicate drama, the picture is a comedy.

Not a comedy of the "gag" type like the Mack Sennett formula, but one such as Clyde Fitch or Pinero might have written. Not only that, but he has taken Marie Prevost, former "bathing beauty," and transformed her into a brilliant actress, cut all captions or subtitles down to an irreducible minimum, developed the "close up" to a stage not dreamed of, and last, but best of all, left something for the imagination to work on. "They" all said it could not be done, so Lubitsch ran true to form and did it.

The Warner Brothers, who are considerable innovators themselves, and who have more than once "started something" in the film business, gave the eccentric director his own way. They feel their confidence was more than justified. Lubitsch himself says he is content to stand or fall on "The Marriage Circle," as he personally selected the story, the cast and the sets, handled the direction and technical details and the picture himself.

Lubitsch believes the American field offers him the opportunity he has long sought to attain, and he looks forward to the day when he can bring out a new era in motion picture making. Just what this new era will be not even Lubitsch knows, but he feels certain that Old Man Time, plus hard work, will open new vistas in the realm of filmland. Now, having completed "The Marriage Circle" he is busily sifting through a mass of material,—plays, novels, scripts—and will shortly announce his second picture.

Rock Named Vitagraph's General Manager

To Fill Vacancy Caused by the Death of John M. Quinn

JOHAN B. ROCK has been appointed General Manager of Vitagraph Inc., to succeed the late John M. Quinn, according to an announcement made by President Albert E. Smith at the executive offices in Brooklyn last week. The announcement was in the form of a telegram addressed to all members of the Vitagraph organization by the president. It read:

"The history of Vitagraph is well known to all. Started a quarter of a century ago by Mr. William T. Rock, Mr. J. Stuart Blackton and myself, Vitagraph for many years stood at the head of the industry. The death of Mr. Rock in 1916, plus the loss of Mr.

zation and fair and equitable dealings with exhibitors, will undergo no change, under Mr. Rock's management. Mr. Rock personally is known to every branch manager of the organization almost of all whom have long years of service to their credit in Vitagraph.

At the time of the announcement of Mr. Rock's appointment, President Smith also announced that A. Victor Smith would return to active service as assistant to Mr. Rock. A. Victor Smith is well known to the trade as well as in the production field of pictures. He served as general sales representative and as assistant to the president and production manager at the Brooklyn Studios. He left that office to enlist with the Motor Transport Corps in 1917, where he served as Adjutant in the Chief Purchasing Office, A. E. F., after which he returned as special sales representative in the home office.

"I am sure Vitagraph men all over the world will welcome the return to active service of the son of one of the founders," said President Smith before his return to Los Angeles last week. "There is hardly a picturemaking unit in the United States that has not within its membership at least one 'Vitagrapher.' For many years our own staff has been as of one family. For that reason, and because Vitagraph has an established reputation for stability in personnel, I am more than happy that Mr. Rock returns to active duty.

"My short visit East in spite of the sad mission which brought me to New York has given me no little gratification in my review of the business progress Vitagraph is enjoying. I find that every man in the organization is on his toes and the business prosperity for the year which I predicted last December seems more than assured to our industry by the returns and reports of Vitagraph salesmen during the first month and a half of 1924."

Son of the late William T. Rock, one of the founders of Vitagraph, who has been chosen as general manager of Vitagraph to succeed the late John M. Quinn.

Rock will try and fill his father's shoes by filling the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Quinn, who, I am sure, if he knew, would be happy at my choice."

The return of Mr. Rock to active service in Vitagraph, which he represented for ten years from 1906 to 1916 in Chicago, restores to the film industry three pioneer names. His father, William T. Rock, was active in Vitagraph from 1897, when he with Messrs. Smith and Blackton organized the company, until his death in 1916.

Mr. Rock assumed charge in his new office immediately. The business policy of Vitagraph, inaugurated by President Smith years ago, of stability in organi-

Menjou and William Farnum Signed To Play with Paramount

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces he has signed Adolphe Menjou and William Farnum as permanent members of the Paramount stock company.

Following the sensational success scored by Mr. Menjou in "A Woman of Paris," "The Marriage Circle" and Pola Negri's current play, "Shadows of Paris," Mr. Menjou is to be rewarded, said Mr. Lasky, by being featured in a number of important Paramount pictures and later will be starred.

Mr. Lasky said that one of Mr. Menjou's vehicles will be the romantic comedy-drama, "The Kine," which, starring Leo Ditrichstein, had a most successful engagement at the George M. Cohan Theatre in New York in the season 1917-18. "The King," which is from the French play by G. A. De Caillabet, Robert De Flers and Emanuel Arene, has in its title role a part which is most admirably adapted to the talents which Mr. Menjou has revealed so successfully in "A Woman of Paris" and "The Marriage Circle."

Mr. Lasky was extremely enthusiastic when he received a wire from the Lasky studio in Hollywood that the negotiations with Mr. Menjou had culminated in the signing of a long-term contract. "Rarely," he said, "has the engagement of a player given us such complete satisfaction as this contract with Mr. Menjou. In the last few months his brilliant performances in a series of pictures have stamped him as one of the foremost artists of the screen and, with his popularity increasing daily with the exhibition of these pictures, he undoubtedly will prove a tremendous box office attraction."

Adolphe Menjou was born in Pittsburgh of French parents and was educated at Culver Military Academy, Culver, Ind., and Cornell University. After leaving Cornell he went on the stage, appearing in stock and in vaudeville. After serving with the United States troops in Italy, where he was a captain in the William Farnum, who has been resting for the last year, will leave for Hollywood soon to begin preparations for his first picture. The title has not yet been announced, but Mr. Lasky made it known that the picture will be produced by Wallace Worsley, whose latest production, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," has been acclaimed as one of the biggest successes of the screen.

TO BROADCAST 'NAKED TRUTH' SPEECHES

All in Readiness for Annual Dinner of Advertising Writers

THE All Mighty Press Agents are going to whoop it up on the night of March 29 at the Hotel Astor so that they will be literally heard all over the United States, Canada and England.

In other words, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., filmdom's invincible organization of publicity purveyors, has completed arrangements whereby Station WJZ will broadcast by radio the program of entertainment that will feature their annual festive gathering and at the same time provide the general public with an earful of "naked truth" about the movies.

It will not be the usual "Naked Truth" dinner. It will, in fact, be forty "Naked Truth" dinners given simultaneously, with the activities centering at the Astor, because in forty of the key cities of the United States, as well as in London, members of the local film exchanges will gather at their usual meeting places and listen in at the entertainment in New York. Everything but the food will be broadcasted, it is announced. The soup, it is promised, will be noiseless.

Harry Reichenbach sailed from New York Saturday to complete arrangements for the London entertainment via radio, while the branch managers will look after the local festivities in the various key cities. In Los Angeles, the W. A. M. P. A.'s, the western fraternity of publicity men, are making elaborate plans to enjoy the wireless treat. Mr. Reichenbach will return to New York in time to enjoy the Astor function.

Plans for the program of speech-making and entertainment are moving ahead rapidly under the supervision of A. M. Botsford, chairman of the entertainment committee, and all indications are that the affair will be the most brilliant and successful in the history of the A. M. P. A.

'THREE WEEKS' TO GO DIRECT TO EXHIBITORS

dustly as to how this big film would be handled by Goldwyn Cosmopolitan on account of the bigness of the production and the widespread public interest in it. The producers would have been justified in sending "Three Weeks" to legitimate theatres at their regular scale of prices in order to derive a bigger immediate revenue from it. The distributing company has decided, however, to release the film direct to exhibitors as it did in the case of "Name the Man!", which is also of big enough caliber for road-showing.

The producers and the distributing corporation feel that "Three Weeks" is going to be the box-office sensation of the year and believe that it is no more than just that the exhibitors who have been showing their product for the past year should share, from the first, in the tremendous business which they are confident this picture is going to do.

'CAPTAIN JANUARY' STARRING BABY PEGGY COMPLETED

Baby Peggy's first big feature production for Principal Pictures Corporation, is completed. Final scenes were made this week and the film is now carefully housed in the studio cutting room.

"Captain January" is the title of this offering. The story was taken from the book of Laura Richards and was adapted to the screen for the Starlet, by Eve Unsell and John Gray. "Captain January" is regarded as one of the most popular of children's books.

This is the first of a series of productions Baby Peggy is to make. The picture was directed by Edward F. Cline and boasts a cast of exceptional players, chief among which are Hobart Bosworth, Irene Rich, Harry Morey, Lincoln Stedman, Barbara Tennant, Emmett King and John Merkyl.

REVIEW BOARD HOLDS ANNUAL LUNCHEON

Authors and Directors Discuss Future Film Problems

ON February 16 to the tune of violins and corsets, the invited guests to the annual luncheon of the National Board of Review filed into the grand ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria and settled down to a pleasant afternoon.

Dr. William Tower, master of ceremonies, started the speech ball rolling by reading a telegram from Thomas Ince, who regretted his inability to attend, extended his congratulations on the accomplishments of the board, and wished the members continued success.

Before introducing the speakers of the afternoon Dr. Tower expressed his own wholehearted approval of a Board of Review which he felt was essential for the betterment of the industry.

The subject of better films as the educator seems them was the subject of the discourse by Dr. Ernest Crandell, president of the Visual Instruction Association of America. His first point was the interrelation between motion pictures and the public from the point of view of education.

Fanny Hurst began her address by asking a question: "Is the public qualified to judge what it wants?"

"We do not find among producers artists willing to take a sporting chance. Therefore the solution lies with the mighty minority. It is in this class that the National Board of Review finds its place. The organization is striving to raise the public taste. It realizes that blue penciling does not help. It is trying to attain its goal by showing why other pictures are better. More power to you."

"I can't understand the public. It is a peculiar public that refuses to go to good pictures at any price, but demands cheap pictures instead. It is a peculiar public which I don't even attempt to understand."

Such was the opening statement of Joseph Dannenberg, editor of the Film Daily.

"A portion of the public everywhere wants cheap pictures," he said. "It would refuse to go to a good picture even if you gave it free tickets. But I can't understand our present public. We have lost our old motion picture public and the new public that has replaced it wants the 'Covered Wagon' type of

Independents Will Mark Films To Prevent Piracy

Each Release Will Bear A Code on Margin

THE piracy of films as well as disputes or court actions regarding the ownership of positive prints which often get outside of territory, will be a thing of the past in one important branch of the industry at least, through the adoption of the recommendations of the committee on film identification of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association.

A special committee composed of Arthur N. Smallwood, chairman; Jack Cohn and John Lowell Russell, has been investigating the situation for the past few weeks, having conferred with George A. Blair, manager motion picture department of the Eastman Kodak Company, and with representatives of some of the laboratories.

It was agreed during these conferences that nothing could be accomplished in the way of a protective measure, by photographic or mechanical processes, either at the source of raw stock manufacture, or at the film laboratories.

The committee finally decided that each company should adopt a secret code for each release, which is to be inserted at different independent products, eventually solving one of the most trying problems with which the motion picture industry has been confronted since its inception.

DIRECTOR CHOSEN FOR C. B. C.'S NEW PRODUCTION, 'PAL O' MINE'

Edward J. Le Saint has been chosen to direct C. B. C.'s forthcoming production, "Pal O' Mine," according to a report just received from Harry Cohn on the coast. Mr. Le Saint has directed several of C. B. C.'s feature productions in the past, including "Innocence," "Discontented Husbands" and "The Marriage Market"; and claims that the new picture will be an unusual success because it contains rich material and abundant action.

The cast for "Pal O' Mine" will be chosen in the very near future.

BRITISH COMPETITION IS LIGHT, SAYS SMITH

American Films Strongly Entrenched in British Colonies

GEORGE H. SMITH, managing director of Vitagraph, Ltd., of London, described the effort of British film producers to increase the patronage of English made productions at the expense of American releases as one which will fail because the native-made pictures are not up to the standards of American screen stories, in an interview at the Vitagraph Studios in Brooklyn last week.

The British trade, according to Mr. Smith, were hosts to Prince Edward at a dinner in London recently. The Prince of Wales naturally espoused the cause of the British pictures and urged that the fans in Great Britain give their support to home made productions. Encouraged by this, the British producers started drives in the chief cities of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales. They organized "British Film Week," and by appealing to the patriotism of the exhibitors induced them to book only English product during that week.

These drives placed the theatre owners in an embarrassing position. They knew that their business as exhibitors had been started and developed by the use of American productions. They wished to remain loyal to the old film companies, but the weight of patriotic sentiment compelled them to run many British films. Some of the members of the trade went tervals on the margin of all reels. The form in which the secret code is to appear on the film will be carefully guarded by each company, which will keep a record of the particular code assigned to each release.

Such action will not only prove of direct advantage to each concern but will be a great step forward in the united effort to eliminate film piracy, as this new means of identification will make it possible to promptly restore any lost print to its lawful owner.

The recommendations of this committee have been approved by the Independent Association, and each company member has been requested by President I. E. Chadwick to inaugurate the new system at the earliest opportunity.

The adoption of this practical plan should effect a very great saving to the distributors, exchanges and state right buyers handling inso far as to ask Vitagraph, Ltd., to cancel bookings during these drive weeks.

British producers have made very little progress in pictures, said Mr. Smith. They have failed to learn American technique and have not yet in any production arrived even approximately to the American picture in production investiture. In an effort to profit by these drives many of the English producers sent out reissues and in some instances made no effort to make it plain to the public that the films were old and had been re-edited.

While these drives have affected to some degree bookings of American films in the Provinces the final effect in the opinion of Mr. Smith is that there will be a tremendous and widespread demand on the part of the public for good stories and well-produced films of the standards set and maintained by producers here.

Million Dollar Concern About to Launch Producing Schedule

ANOTHER film producing company has entered the West Coast field. Hollywood Photoplay Productions is its name; it is headed by Leland Stanford Ramsdell, nephew of the founder of Stanford University and owner of the Bullock-Jones chain of stores, and its financial backing is placed at $1,000,000. Mr. Ramsdell's organization is to begin production as an independent film company in the immediate future, starting operations with one unit.

Gordon White, comedy favorite, has been selected to star in Hollywood Photoplay Productions' pictures, and Randall H. Faye is to prepare and edit the scripts. A well-known director whose name is withheld temporarily, has been secured. Other members of the new organization have not been named, but work is already under way to select supporting players, and screen tests are being made. Negotiations for studio space have not yet been closed, but according to a statement by Mr. Faye, the F. B. O. studios, formerly Robertson-Cole, will probably be chosen.

The stories to be filmed by Hollywood Photoplay Productions are to be originals, written directly and expressly for the screen and to suit the needs of the producer. Mr. Faye has been placed in charge of the manuscript, continuity and adaptation department, and will prepare as well as edit direct screen stories chosen for production.

James Oliver Curwood's most popular novel, "The Alaskan," will be Thomas Meighan's next Paramount picture, according to an announcement made yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, who has just returned to New York after having spent the last two months in Hollywood.

Mr. Meighan is now engaged in producing "The Confidence Man," a novel by L. Y. Erskine and Robert H. Davis, which will be published next month in the Argosy All Story Magazine.

"The Alaskan," said Mr. Lasky, "is expected to be one of the biggest Thomas Meighan productions, and when it is released next Fall we expect that it will be one of the outstanding successes of the new season. It will mark a sharp departure in the type of stories Mr. Meighan has been doing—as a matter of fact, I believe this is the first story of the great Northwest that Thomas Meighan has ever done.

Mr. Meighan will begin production on "The Alaskan" after the completion of "The Confidence Man" and plans are already under way for the selection of the strong supporting cast.

WORK ON 'DRIFTWOOD' DELAYED BY DIRECTOR'S ILLNESS

Owing to the illness of Roland West, supervising director, work on "Driftwood," Elaine Hammerstein's new production for Truett Film Corporation which was to have started this week at the Goldwyn Studio, has been delayed for about ten days.

"Driftwood," a novel by Albert Payson Terhune, adapted for the screen by Mr. West and Willard Mack, is a drama of regeneration, something along a different line from Miss Hammerstein's previous pictures. R. G. Edwards will direct the production and all the sets are up on the Goldwyn lot awaiting the recovery of Mr. West.

GREENVILLE, S. C., WILL HAVE NEW MOVIE THEATRE

Coming just a week after the well-founded rumor that Jake Wells, pioneer Southern theatre owner was negotiating for a house in Greenville, South Carolina, as one of a chain of theatres he is understood to be seeking, is the announcement that Southern Enterprises, through its real estate department headed by Louis Cohn has closed a deal for a lot in Greenville, next to the Ottoray Hotel, on which they will build a new theatre with a capacity of 2000. Financial matters and terms of lease have all been definitely settled and actual work of drawing the plans is now under way which will make it the finest theatre in South Carolina, equipped to handle any kind of an attraction. Southern Enterprises already operate two theatres in Greenville.

'LOVE AND LIES' RETITLED

"Wandering Husbands" is the final title selected for the second James Kirkwood-Lila Lee productions in the series of Hodkinson.

The working title of this picture, "Love and Lies" was originally scheduled for its release title but owing to its similarity to the title of a production already on the market, it was deemed advisable to change it to a name more distinctive.

SEATTLE CENSOR BOARD O. K.'S NORMAND FILM

Stands Pat on Decision Regardless of Outside Threats

IN spite of the fact that the Seattle Censor Board has been importuned to stop showings of Mabel Normand films, the showing of Normand pictures was O. K.'d at the meeting February 14. The vote was seven to five. Final settlement of the question will be brought up after the shooting case in which Miss Normand is involved, is cleared up.

The board has received numerous anonymous letters and telephone calls threatening a church campaign to close picture houses on Sunday unless it bans "wiling love" scenes. It also has been asked to stop boxing pictures.

In spite of this outside interference and the controversy it has aroused among the twelve members, the board voted to stand pat on its present policy. Pending the final outcome over the question of a sterner censorship attitude toward portrayal of the human affections the board also voted against any of its members disclosing what happens at its meetings except through the chairman.

'THE MOUNTEBANK' READY TO BEGIN PRODUCTION

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who arrived in New York this week after having spent the last two months in Los Angeles, announced yesterday that Herbert Brenon, who has just completed filming Mary Roberts Rinehart's story and play, "The Breaking Point," is on his way East to begin production in the Long Island studio on "The Mountebank," from W. J. Locke's novel.

Mr. Lasky also made it known that the title role of the clown who becomes a brigadier-general has been awarded to Ernest Torrence, whose remarkable record of successful characterizations makes him admirably fitted for the part. Anna Q. Nilsson, whose most recent success has been in "Ponjola," will play the feminine lead, the role of Lady Auriol.

'UNINVITED GUEST' HAS A NEW FILM STAR

Jean Tolley Had Uphill Fight to Gain Recognition

A NEW screen luminary blazons forth this month in the Metro releases of new J. E. Williamson-Ralph Ince production, "The Uninvited Guest," a picture depicting in part the wonders and mysteries of deep sea life in tropical waters. And the new star that is promised to shine is already known as "the most photographed girl in the world." She is Jean Tolley.

Jean Tolley is the most photographed girl in the world—actually. And it all happened before she ever faced a movie camera. She has posed for ads used by national advertisers and her smiling countenance beams from street cars ads and candy boxes.

She was born in Milan, Tennessee, but attended school in Philadelphia. While she was attending school her father died, leaving the family in poor circumstances. Jean was forced to leave school to support her mother and naturally she came to New York. She tried to get work at the motion picture studios but without success. She made the rounds regularly and finally when she was discouraged and her landlady threatened to throw her belongings into the street, she obtained work posing for Underwood and Underwood.

Posing for candy, cigarette and tooth paste ads in a cold studio was not Jean's idea of art so she decided to make another try for the movies as soon as her treasury was more substantial.

Then one day through a mutual acquaintance she met Ralph Ince, the noted director. It was one of the happy coincidences that have marked the turning point in many an historic event. Mr. Ince was immediately struck by her great beauty and when he learned that she was adept at all sports, that she was as much at home in the water as on dry land, and that she photographed exquisitely, he was a happy as could be.

Mr. Ince together with J. E. Williamson, the famous submarine engineer and inventor was planning to make a big picture called "The Uninvited Guest" from the story by Curtis Benton. Part of it was to be in natural colors by the famous technicolor process of the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation. The cast had to be perfectly at home in the dangers that beset tropical waters because most of the action involved the characters either diving to the bottom of the sea or floating in the neighborhood of sharks and octopi. But what woman would essay the part? What woman was brave enough to attempt it? But above all what woman was such an expert swimmer and diver, such a superb athlete that she could withstand the buffeting of the seas during the hours such scenes were being filmed? He looked long and earnestly—asked his friends—but of no avail.

Then Mr. Ince met Miss Tolley. Now we have "The Uninvited Guest."

That's the story of Jean Tolley—"the most photographed girl in the world."

'THE YANKEE CONSUL' RECEIVES WARM WELCOME

Douglas MacLean's picturization of "The Yankee Consul," opening its New York run at the Central Theatre Sunday night, had a most successful premiere.

The opening of this run marked the 20th anniversary of the Broadway premiere of the original "Yankee Consul," which brought fame to Raymond Hitchcock, and as a special feature Dr. Alfred G. Robyn, who composed the music for the musical comedy, conducted the augmented orchestra. Dr. Robyn was introduced by Frank C. Payne, special eastern representative of Douglas MacLean, who also read a telegram of thanks which Mr. MacLean had sent the composer.

DE LUXE PHILADELPHIA GETS 'LOST IN A BIG CITY'

"Lost in a Big City," an Arrow Special starring John Lowell and featuring Jane Thomas and Baby Ivy Ward, has just been secured by the De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. De Luxe is working out an extensive exploitation campaign for the larger places in their territory which will include the personal appearance of Baby Ivy Ward.

If "Lost in a Big City" makes the same record in this territory for the exhibitors that it has in other sections, De Luxe Film Company will have added another winner to its list.

'UNKNOWN PURPLE' WILL PLAY TWO WEEKS ON BROADWAY

"The Unknown Purple," Roland West's production of his own sensational stage play, made by Carlos Productions for Truett Film Corporation, will have two full-week showings on Broadway. The visitors were the personal guest of Mr. Olcott. The following day saw a similar tribute paid to Mr. Olcott when Supreme Court Justice Mitchell May brought his entire official retinue to tend their felicitations to the director.

RICHARD ROWLAND BACK FROM COAST TRIP

Optimistic Regarding Coming First National Releases

RETURNED from the First National studios on the Coast, where he spent three weeks conferring with First National production heads and allied producers, Richard A. Rowland stated that the new pictures which he viewed are bound to surpass even the list of winners which First National has offered to exhibitors during past months.

Mr. Rowland spent considerable time with Frank Lloyd, who was making the sea scenes for Sabatini's "The Sea Hawk," and saw enough of the production to convince him that it is destined to be the biggest picture ever released by First National.

First National's production manager is no less enthusiastic about the Corinne Griffith production, "Lilies of the Field" and Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," a drama of the oil fields which becomes an additionally strong attraction just at this time because of the tremendous publicity being given the Washington Teapot Dome scandal.

"The Woman on the Jury" looks like another big winner, according to Mr. Rowland, and Colleen Moore has a sure box office knock-out in "The Perfect Flapper." "These are only a few of the great pictures that are bound to maintain First National's leadership," he said. "For next season we have already lined up a marvelous list of stories that it is too early to talk about. Some of them will be a real surprise."

"Incidentally, any rumors to the effect that First National plans an extension of its own producing units, thereby lessening its need for pictures from outside sources are without any basis of fact. We are going ahead with our own productions, but I want to take this opportunity to correct any false impression concerning our policy. The door of First National will always be open to high class products from independent producers."

"As stated in the past, I believe that more pictures should be made in the East, and my last visit to the Coast in no way altered this decision. Within the next six months, I hope to bring several First National units East where there will be closer contact between headquarters and the producing staffs. This does not mean more production activity on our part, merely a change of base."

TALKING FILM COMPANY IS ORGANIZED

Dr. Lee De Forest Issues Statement Regarding Organization

DR. LEE DE FOREST of the De Forest Phonofilm, the talking pictures, of which he is the inventor, and famous as well for his radio and long-distance telephone inventions, announces the formation of De Forest Phonofilms, Inc., of which he is president. Although the organization is not yet complete, Dr. De Forest will have such men associated with him as Edward H. Jewett, of the Jewett-Page Automobile Company, Detroit; Frederick W. Peck, millionaire manufacturer of Providence; Rhinelander Waldo, former police commissioner of New York City and Frank Hitchcock.

Dr. De Forest also announces that work will be started immediately on a series of most pretentious talking motion pictures. This series will include dramas, comedies, condensed versions of famous operas, scenics (in which nature's sound, the singing of bird, roaring of animals, dashing of waves, etc., will of course be brought out) news pictures, famous vaudeville sets and comic cartoons with the character's words actually spoken, instead of being in "balloons." J. Searle Dowley, one of the foremost directors in the motion picture industry, will direct the larger productions.

Dr. De Forest's experimental studio at 318 East 48th Street is now being remodeled.

BEN WILSON SELECTS CAST FOR 'THE DAYS OF '49'

The cast for "The Days of '49," the big "Transcontinental Serial" which Ben Wilson has begun making for Arrow Film Corporation has just been announced.

When Ben Wilson picks out a cast for such an important historical Western as this new Arrow Serial he can be depended on to get the right people. The first one he selects is Edmund Cobb, who has established an enviable reputation for strikingly effective Western character work.

Opposite Cobb is Neva Gerber, who has become representative of the best type of Western girl. In contrast is Ruth Royce who made such a reputation in many Universal serials. Wilbur McGaugh, well known character actor is the fourth member of the cast.

Yakima Canuck, champion cowboy, is also assigned an important role in this production.

'WOMEN WHO GIVE' WILL HAVE BRILLIANT CAST

"Women Who Give," Reginald Barker's latest Metro-Louis B. Mayer picture is an epic of the adventurous New England era when stalwart sea-faring men gave their lives that others might live. The story, adapted by Bernard McConville and J. G. Hawks from that famous New England classic, "Cape Cod Folks" by Sarah P. McLean Green has been filmed as a big special production with one of the strongest casts ever presented on the screen.

Frank Keenan and Joseph Dowling play Jonathan Swift and Captain Bijonah Keeler, two old patriarchs. Renee Adoree has the difficult dramatic role of Becky Keeler, the village girl who is betrayed by Swift's son, Noah, an important part played by Eddie Phillips. Robert Frazer is the juvenile lead as Captain Joe Cradlebow, a courageous young skipper who leads the fisherman in the bitter fight against Swift's powerful concern. Barbara Bedford is seen as Emily Swift, a quick-tempered, independent beauty who is won by Cradlebow's ardent courtship in spite of the dictates of her private finishing-school education.

Victor Pote! as Ephraim Doolittle and Joan Standing as Sophronia Higginbottom furnish most of the comedy in the picture while other leading parts are played by Margaret Seddon as Ma Keeler, and William Eugene as Ezra Keeler.

"Women Who Give" will be released by Metro in March.

OFFICERS ARE ELECTED BY COLORADO M. P. T. O.

H. E. Hoffman of Denver Re-elected President of Society

THE annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Colorado was held in the Adams hotel in Denver, February 12. Representatives from various districts of the state were present. H. E. Huffman, owner of the Blue Bird and Bide-a-Wee theatres, Denver, was re-elected president of the organization. Mr. Huffman is one of the most active theatre owners in the state and has played a prominent part in the organizations working for civic and motion picture betterment. Harry T. Nolan of the First National exchange and dean of motion picture exchange men in Denver, was elected first vice-president.

Other officers elected were C. E. Marguand, of Loveland, second vice-president; F. W. Bronte of Yuma, third vice-president; Max Schaback, treasurer, and Charles Gillan, secretary.

In the evening a dinner dance was given by the motion picture house owners for the film exchange men at Starbuck, a mountain resort west of Denver—the country home of the Denver Motor club in Bear creek canon.

A burlesque on the Teapot Dome investigation furnished considerable amusement for the diners. Toastmaster Huffman in the guise of Senator Lenroot and Toastmaster Cory as Senator Walsh conducted an improvised probe.

Among the "witnesses" called upon to take the stand and submit to a merciless grilling were Walter Lichtenstein of Associated Producers; Joseph Ashby, president of the Film Board of Trade; A. E. Edwards, assistant manager of the Universal exchange; Vice-president Nolan; J. S. Hummel of Select Pictures exchange; Charles Klein of Deadwood, S. D. owner of a chain of motion picture theatres; Sidney Weisbaum, manager of the F. R. O., and A. S. Bailey, manager of the Pathe exchange.

'LILIES OF THE FIELD' TO BE RELEASED SOON

Picture to Be Shown in One Hundred Theatres on March 16

LILIES OF THE FIELD, the initial production of Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc., distributed by First National Pictures will probably equal if not surpass all present records for simultaneous first runs, according to First National. This picture, with Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle in the featured roles, was completed several weeks ago. Its general release date has been set for the third week in March. According to the First National Home Office, fully 100 first run theatres will present the picture beginning March 16.

The drive for simultaneous first runs on this picture was assisted by the proclamation recently issued by Robert Lieber, president of First National, declaring March 16 to be "Lilies of the Field Day" and calling upon all exhibitors to observe it and assign a play date to the picture for that week. First National's national advertising campaign in the Saturday Evening Post and other media materially assist the exhibitor by selling the public well in advance.

"Lilies of the Field" is an adaptation of the stage play of the same name by William Hurlburt. It is a society drama, the story centering about a young wife who is cast unwittingly among a set of "lilies," idle, luxury-loving creatures, and mistaken for one of them. It is directed by John Francis Dillon, who directed Colleen Moore in "Flaming Youth." The cast in support of Miss Griffith and Mr. Tearle includes Cranford Kent, Mrytle Stedman, Charles Gerard, Alma Bennett, Charles Murray, Sylvia Breamer, Edith Ransom, Cissy Fitzgerald and Phyllis Haver.

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

EARL J. HUDSON

His official capacity is that of First National's West Coast production manager, but he has blossomed forth as an author. "Sundown" and "For Sale" are two of his works.

Douglas and Mary Are "Back Home" in New York.

AT THE AMBASSADOR, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks are "back home" to the trade. Full of pep and gladness. Full of aspirations for new fields to conquer. And there, in separate but adjoining rooms of their elaborate suite, Doug and Mary are being "interviewed to death." But they are just regular enough to like it.

Mainly because they have many messages for the trade and public alike. Both have worked long and hard. "Mary the hardest," says Doug because she finished two pictures and supervised another for Brother Jack while he was making his one—his dream spectacle of Arabian Nights.

And they have brought with them their masterpieces—Doug's "Thief of Bagdad" and Mary's "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall." And Doug's tired. And Mary's tired. And they're both full of pep. To figure out which you must know the Fairbanks formula.

AFTER they make arrangements for letting the public in on their little picture secrets with Broadway openings for the "Thief" and "Dorothy" they are going to Europe. And be gone quite a while—six months or more. And not to make pictures but to exploit and sell them.

Doug has a big selling plan—in fact a very big one. And there's no stopping him. No doubt he'll put it over. Which is nothing more nor less than giving Europe a peppy formula for co-ordinating exhibitors' efforts, increasing buying and booking power, and the breeding of several European Graumans and Rothafels.

"Americans, leading the film industry of the world, owe it to mankind," says Doug, "to broaden the scope of the greatest and only universal medium of expression—the motion picture."

And don't miff the idea that Doug is sincere in the belief of that statement one hundred and one per cent. And Mary, too, which is quite natural.

JUST how to go ahead and do it efficiently came to the Fairbanks during their last trip abroad. This time they go with a well laid out plan, which they intend consummating "or bust."

Incidentally Doug will be scouting for another idea as big as "The Thief." Hopes it will be one that he and Mary can do together.

Enthusing over the above almost puts the Bagdad picture in the past tense of the Fairbanks mind—until he gets on the story subject. Which is mighty close to the Fairbanks heart because the basic theme of "The Thief" is "Happiness must be earned." For when you mention "happiness" you tread on the welcome door mat of Doug's and Mary's hearts. And the door flies open wide.

Which is surest reason the door to the hearts of the great American Public is always open wide to Doug and Mary Fairbanks.

SAMUEL GRAND ON COAST SPEEDING WORK

Discusses Plan for Distribution and Production of Pictures

FOR the purpose of meeting independent producers and signing up with them for at least eighteen features and a number of special productions, Samuel V. Grand, president of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation, accompanied by Edward M. James, attorney for the organization, arrived in Hollywood from New York last week.

According to Mr. Grand, the system of distribution which will be put into effect by Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation is a development of and improvement upon that recently outlined by General Manager Samuel Bischoff. On or before March 15, he states it will be in full working order and will afford practically 100 per cent distribution for independent productions.

Aside from negotiating with several noted directors, Mr. Grand is ready to personally discuss with independent producers the full details of the new distribution system.

Under the new system, Mr. Grand states, agreements have been entered into with leading independent film exchanges in every territory of the United States, which will be found to accept and distribute to the fullest extent product released through Grand-Asher. The first special to be made will be R. William Neill's "Rose of the Ghetto."

"The present year will prove a wonderful one for pictures and especially for independents," says Mr. Grand, "and the Grand-Asher distribution system, which we have now perfected, I believe to be safe and sane; one that is fair and equitable and will yield the most satisfactory returns for all concerned."

"The Grand Studio will be humming with activity within a fortnight. For the season, in addition to the features mentioned, we expect to arrange for at least 52 two-reel subjects to be made here. I will remain in Hollywood until such time as everything is in perfect running order on the new basis of operation. Mr. Bischoff will remain in active management of the studio as heretofore."

British Film Weeks

BEGINNING February 4 the British film industry inaugurated its British Film Weeks, some half a dozen of these. Upon the response of the public much will depend. It is a period that must be packed with suspense for the producer and distributor of motion pictures native to the soil, at least up to that point where the attitude of the people is made clear.

The business papers of the industry in Great Britain bearing date of the end of January are not unanimous in their descriptions of the outlook for a successful result of the producers' experiment.

We say "experiment," for of course it is nothing else. The men who make and distribute pictures have figuratively speaking thrown their hats in the ring.

For six months the trade has been talking of British Film Weeks and doing its best to interest the motion picture patrons of every community in supporting them. Last November at a notable function the attention of the nation was concentrated on the coming event through the attendance of the Prince of Wales, who addressed a body representative of the best in England.

That demonstration proved the interest in the motion picture of officialdom and of the men who rank high in business and professional life.

To them it represented more than a business institution. To them it was a matter of national concern that British life and customs should not be quite so thoroughly subordinated, so far as the screen was concerned, to the life and customs of a national offshoot.

But while the interest of what used to be described as the ruling classes was conceded at the same time there was serious doubt as to the attitude of the man in the street, the man who paid his money through the length and breadth of the land to support the cinema.

Upon what he would think of British pictures, thrown so sharply and in such unprecedented quantities in competition with the unquenchable supply of American pictures to which they had become accustomed, the whole issue depended.

The Bioscope remarks that it is glad to emphasize the movement is not an endeavor to exclude the products of competitors from the theatres of the country or even to secure an absolute supremacy for the British film in the domestic programs, but rather to bring about a proportional representation of home-made product, such as will enable the British producer to continue to progress and advance.

The Kine Weekly registers the protest that but three days before the first of the Weeks begin there is little public sign that such an important event is about to occur. What billboard space that has been taken is apparently in the interest of individual subjects rather than in that of the movement as a whole.

"Lack of funds is probably the reason," the Kine admits, "but when we remember what is at stake and what is almost certain to be the fate of British production if the Weeks fail with the public, then surely funds could have been found by those interested in saving their own industry, if they really believe it is worth saving."

The Film Renter is optimistic, believing the preparatory work has been thorough and that the public has been well notified as to what was coming.

F. E. Adams in the Cinema gives some figures on the extent of the British film industry which have a direct interest for American producers and for exhibitors especially.

The particular reference is in the suggestion that "America's film monopoly of our screen is effective in the sense that a return of practically 15 per cent on negative cost, apart from short-film 'pickings,' can be guaranteed from Great Britain and Ireland.

"It must be remembered that about 40 per cent of America's foreign film trade represents trade with this country. But that great business, representing about £10,000,000 annually, is not secure; it rests on privilege rather than on title deeds."

Mr. Adams very frankly declares that "the American film trusts must buy our theatres. The American film industry is no longer its own master. It is owned by the banks. The extension of American banking interests into every department of the film trade is by far the most important development in cinema history."

The writer points out that while American banks may appreciate the strategical strength of America's hold on British screens there still remains the fact that America does not actually own the theatres and is therefore unsecured.

An American who has been many years in England actively associated with the industry declares in an interview here that the British Film Weeks will fail, simply because of a lack of quality that will stand up with the American article.

If the British market is responsible for 15 per cent of the negative cost of the American picture the attitude of this country toward the outcome of the experiment certainly hardly will be one of indifference.

Still, it is a big world, and a good picture, whether made at home or abroad, is always welcome.

Three Familiar Names

THE return of John B. Rock to the Vitagraph Company, in the role of general manager, brings again to the front a name that for nineteen years was prominent in that company and in the industry of which he was a conspicuous part.

William T. ("Pop") Rock was one of the founders of Vitagraph, and as one of the triumvirate which for many years ruled that organization amassed a fortune a goodly portion of which went into real estate in his own rapidly growing Borough of Brooklyn.

From 1897 until his death in 1916 "Pop" Rock was one of the picturesque figures in the trade. If there were a function of the industry in the metropolitan area he was pretty sure to be present. And another fairly safe bet was that if "Pop" Rock should be seen he would be found in the company of that other ol' timer "Pop" Lubin, whose lamented passing was recorded a few months ago.

John Rock grew up in Vitagraph and in the atmosphere of the studio and the exchange. For ten years, from 1906 to 1916, he was in charge of the Chicago office. His friends will be glad to welcome him "home."

Another announcement of interest from the same company is that A. Victor Smith will be assistant to the new general manager. "Vic" Smith for years was in charge of the big studio in Flatbush. He knows not only production but sales as well, having served as general and special sales representative in times past.

So again the names of Smith, Blackton and Rock are on the Vitagraph roster. It is good to see them there.

'THY NAME IS WOMAN' AT ASTOR THEATRE

Fred Niblo Production Will Have Premiere on Broadway

THE Broadway presentation of "Thy Name Is Woman" has finally been definitely announced for February 25 at the Astor Theatre.

Frequent reports from the coast have declared that this new Fred Niblo production is his best so far and therefore, officials in the East were anxious to see it.

It is estimated that the cast alone will lure a great portion of the fan public. With his usual good judgment, Mr. Niblo has selected Ramon Novarro for the leading male role. From his role in "Scaramouche" Novarro has surrounded himself with much praise and many admirers and it is therefore expected that his name in the cast of "Thy Name Is Woman" will prove a large drawing crowd. With him there also appear Barbara La Marr, Edith Roberts, Robert Edson and other players of note, each of whom seems to be very capable in his or her respective role.

With the imminent appearance of "Thy Name Is Woman" on Broadway in picture form it is interesting to recall the stage presentation, from which the picture is taken. Jose Rubens and Mary Nash played the leading roles in the stage version which was one of Broadway's most interesting productions which came to this country after attaining success all over Europe. It started in Germany—a product of the pen of Karl Schoenherr—and then trod the boards of the stages of Spain, France, Italy and the Scandinavian countries.

Mr. Niblo and Louis B. Mayer, his producer, arrived in New York from the coast late last week bringing with them a print of "Thy Name Is Woman." They will probably remain here until after the premiere.

'WHITE SISTER' WILL LEAVE BROADWAY THIS WEEK

After a highly successful run of four months on Broadway, Henry King's production, "The White Sister" in which Lillian Gish is starred, closed on February 17. And this despite the fact that at every performance the film had been playing to capacity audiences. The fact is that the run was concluded because of the impending release date of the picture by Metro.

The picture opened originally at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre ostensibly for a four weeks run. But the public showed such a tremendous interest in it that it was decided to have it continue. A new theatre had to be found, and for a time it played at the Ambassador, a legitimate theatre. When that lease expired the picture moved to the Lyric where it has been ever since. It is estimated that the picture played to over four hundred thousand people who saw it at a top price of two dollars.

BLYTHE EUROPEAN PICTURE BOUGHT BY AL WOODS

Betty Blythe's second starring picture made under the Grahame Wilcox banner has been purchased, it is said, by Al Woods. This picture is being released in Europe under the title of "Southern Love," and was made in England and on the continent. It opened at Albert Hall in London on January 29, and 10,000 persons were present.

Before making "Southern Love," Miss Blythe was starred in "Chu Chin Chow," which is now playing England and according to reports has already exceeded in the number of its showings there all pictures except "The Four Horsemen."

Miss Blythe has just returned to America after completing work in the leading role of the J. Parker Reid production of Rex Beach's story in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, "The Recoil," directed by T. Hayes Hunter for Goldwyn release. She had not been here twenty-four hours when she was engaged by Christy Cabanne to play the leading female role of "Plaster Saints," the screen adaptation of Frederic Arnold Kummer's well known book.

ELABORATE PLANS MADE FOR 'WASHINGTON WEEK'

A picture with an historical background has the breaks with it if it chances to have a release date which corresponds to the date of the story. Thus it is that Warner Brothers' "George Washington, Jr.," is fortunate in being ready for release just at the time of Washington's birthday.

The week of its initial appearance has been designated by the producers as "George Washington Week" and Wesley Barry, the star of the film, will address schools, lead parades, and make personal appearances in scores of theatres throughout the country.

Arrangements have been made with various historical societies and schools for special Washington Day exercises, and Barry will be a feature of the several programs.

Preview comments on the film have been so flattering that there has been a big demand for all available prints to be shown during the holiday week. Every place that the film is shown there will be a special drive made to interest everybody. Exhibitors are arranging to have school children march in parade formation to the theatre, headed by Wes himself.

ENGLISH FILM LIKED BY AMERICAN AUDIENCES

'Napoleon and Josephine' Goes Over Big in Washington

"NAPOLEON AND JOSEPHINE," a G. B. Samuelson English production, was given its American premiere at Loew's Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C., and played to the largest gross business of any of the theatres during the week of its showing.

The Washington newspapers were enthusiastic in their praise of the film being especially impressed with the spectacular features which have apparently been so well done as to call forth the admiration of entire body of critics. The Washington Post pretty generally sums up the opinion of all the reviewers when it says of the film:

"The picture is as moving and artistic an historical production as Washington has witnessed for some time. The word artistic should be especially stressed, for across the screen there flash at frequent intervals, pictures of such beauty and imagination that the director's inspiration must have been some masterpiece in the Louvre or Luxemburg."

There can be no doubt as to the sincerity of such a tribute but an even more substantial tribute is the unusually large patronage which the picture is drawing. One would not suspect that the public was so grossly interested in a portrayal of the life of "The Little Corporal" and his ill-fated Empress. It treats of the military activities of the great general as well as his romantic affairs with the lovely Josephine and gives scope to a portrayal of some exceptionally fine scenes during the battle of Waterloo and the charge of the Cuivrassiers into the famous sunken road.

The owners of the American rights are being presented by J. J. Allen who has complete charge of the campaign.

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

"Take care of the pennies" said John D. Apparently the mysterious John King took this sage advice for here he is walking up and down Broadway giving away $25,000 bills. We almost forgot to mention that the other side of the bill contained the suggestion that the money be used to purchase a ticket to see Cosmopolitan's "Under the Red Robe," the historical film, directed by Alan Crosland.

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

Hampton Del Ruth last wielded the directorial megaphone in the making of Selznick's "The Marriage Chance," a mystery play in which he artfully mixed weird situations with rollicking comedy which resulted in a very absorbing picture.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY EVE FOR OPENING

'America,' New Griffith Production, Has New York Premiere

WHEN "America," D. W. Griffith's photodrama of the War of Independence, has its world premiere at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre in New York on Washington's Birthday eve, first nighters will find that in addition to the names of Carol Dempster, Lionel Barrymore, and Neil Hamilton there will be a host of other stage favorites in the cast, including Lucille La-Verne who is attracting a great deal of attention just now by her splendid performance in "Sun Up," a prominent stage production, and Louis Wolheim who made his mark in his portrayal of "The Hairy Ape," another stage success of two seasons ago.

Besides these there are several others whose work heretofore has been not with the movies but with the spoken drama. Of these probably the best known are Riley Hatch, Arthur Donaldson, Erville Anderson, Sidney Deans, Edwin Holland, James Malaidy and Charles Bennett. It is reasonable to suppose that with such a cast the picture will be one well worth seeing.

'DARLING OF NEW YORK' SHOWN ON S. S. WASHINGTON

Reports continue to flood the offices of Universal with reports of satisfactory bookings on "The Darling of New York," the first Baby Peggy feature length picture. Most of the large circuits have booked the picture sold for all their theatres.

Moreover, the picture was selected as the feature to be shown aboard the S. S. George Washington, on its recent trip from Washington. Universal feels that such recognition is worth getting puffed up over since the amusement directors of ships are very particular in the selection of pictures.

'CONDUCTOR 1492' HELD OVER AT DEMAND OF PATRONS

For the first time in the known history of motion pictures, an audience went on strike, clamoring so vociferously that the management was forced to kill the scheduled program and substitute the picture shown the previous week. This happened recently at the Baltimore Metropolitan Theatre, when "Conductor 1492," Johnny Hines' latest starring vehicle, was recalled by reason of the insistent patrons.

Monday afternoon saw the opening of a new bill, but the majority of the patrons pleaded with those in charge of the house to repeat the above Warner Brothers' Classic of the Screen. With the evening performance, the cries increased rapidly, at length growing so insistent that the management finally acquiesced. So the next day the picture was taken off and "Conductor 1492" substituted.

SELZNICK CORPORATION WILL RELEASE 'PAGAN PASSIONS'

"Pagan Passions," a dramatic picture with a tropical setting, has been acquired for release by the Selznick Distributing Corporation, according to an announcement. A contract for the distribution of the picture has been signed and details arranged.

Although a definite releasing date has not yet been set for "Pagan Passions," it will be put on the releasing schedule as soon as advertising accessories and publicity material can be prepared.

'ETERNAL CITY' DEBUT BRINGS MUSSOLINI CABLE

Benito Mussolini, Premier of Italy, sent the following cable to George Fitzmaurice to commemorate the debut on the screen of "The Eternal City," which was produced in Rome by the Samuel Goldwyn Corporation, and in the making of which Mussolini co-operated.

Mussolini's message said: "Italy, by means of her gallant and strenuous Fascisti youth has established order throughout towns and country. By a notable effort she has gained civic peace which allows her to work and progress.

"Fascismo, in the history of Modern Europe, will remain an unparalleled example of moral energy and of spontaneous sacrifice devoted to the cause of order, of work and of national and social discipline."

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

Sidney Franklin now counts to his credit such notable successes as "Dulcy," "Tiger Rose" and "Brass," the latter two of which he produced for Warner. Well might he puff out his chest in pride, now that he can sit back and view the results of the fruit of his labors.

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

Allan Dwan is a well-known Paramount director whose latest success is "Big Brother," a production for which he is still collecting a liberal share of unstinted praise, by virtue of which he is strengthening his reputation as an able director.

'THE VIRGINIAN' HAS BIG CHICAGO OPENING

Long List of Bookings in Other Big Cities Is Also Noted

BIG crowds marked the Chicago opening of "The Virginian" at the Monroe Theatre last week, duplicating again the attendance records that this Preferred Picture has established in every key city where it has been exhibited.

Ashton Stevens, photoplay critic on the Herald and Examiner, characterized B. P. Schulberg's film production of the Owen Wister story, a "masterpiece." Continuing his review, Stevens said:

"My hat is off to Tom Forman and to every member of the cast—it is a hat-waving day for me as far as 'The Virginian' is concerned. They have made a delightful decent moving picture show.

"The psychology of the principal characters has been set forth in screen terms that are undebatable. You feel life, in this picture, destiny, history. In all the literature of the American cowboy there is nothing to match 'The Virginian,' and I think it is a fine, great thing to have recaptured it with the camera. You will, I think, like Kenneth Harlan's 'Virginian.'"

RELEASE DATE ADVANCED FOR 'LILIES OF THE FIELD'

Following the arrival of Richard A. Rowland, production manager of First National, and Sam Katz, at the Coast Studios, where they viewed the Corinne Griffith production, "Lilies of the Field," the release date of this picture has been set ahead to March 24.

First National executives expected big things from this picturization of William Hurlburt's popular play. It is described as another triumph for Miss Griffith and for John Francis Dillon, the director, who also directed "Flaming Youth."

A picture of an entirely different type, but equally strong in its way, is Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," also viewed by Messrs. Rowland and Katz. This Rex Beach story of the Texas oil fields has been made into a virile and romantic drama with Anna Q. Nilsson and Milton Sills in the leading roles.

Princess Mary of Burgundy is informed by her father the Duke that she is to marry Maximilian of Styria. Presents are exchanged. The princess incognito goes to the silk fair and meets and falls in love with a knight who proves to be Maximilian. The later is thrown into the castle dungeon by conspirators and is about to be executed when saved through the intervention of the princess. Through evil influences the Duke is induced to change his mind regarding a son-in-law and transfers the alliance to one with the half-witted son of the French king. Mary is given over to the care of the French court. Maximilian rescues her, and following the death of the Duke in a battle with the Swiss is chosen to lead the Burgundians. The wedding of Maximilian and Mary is announced.

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

A CHARMING spectacle is "Yolanda," Charles Major's story of the late fifteenth century. It is staged by Mr. Vignola with a lavishness that marks the product of the Cosmopolitan studio. It contains a love story that appeals at all times, although on few occasions does it deeply move. In other words the production is fine entertainment which is notable chiefly for its appeal to the eye rather than to the heart.

With the prestige behind it of "Knighthood," also a period subject and filmed by the same director, there should be awaiting it a large clientele.

There are numerous thrills in the course of the subject, among these a combat of armored horsemen—a rare sight, even in these days of screen realism. Then there is the cutting away of the bridge over the boat and the resulting drop into the water of a large number of men who are caught in the trap.

There is, too, the pomp of battle, with many armored men and horses. The scenes of combat, however, are short, being employed merely to convey the atmosphere, which is achieved most effectively.

In the course of the story the princess frequently is sorely beset by circumstances in the guise of a father who considers only the welfare of his duchy and cares nothing apparently for the happiness of his daughter. So Mary often is moved to tears.

There are many lighter moments, however—and it is this phase of the production that will markedly enhance its value to the exhibitor.

Miss Davies' role is a difficult one, and in its portrayal she acquits herself with credit. In character it is the opposite of that which she was called upon to interpret in "Little Old New York."

There seems to be a tendency to overstress the scenes in which tears flow, but it will be the obvious thing to trim these when the subject is prepared for general distribution, taking it for granted it will be cut when that happens.

A reference to the players will indicate that the cast is an unusual one. Two names alone would make it stand out—those of Lyn Harding as the Duke of Burgundy and Holbrook Blinn as Louis XI. It is a team. And it is a real pleasure to follow the work of the two, who always seem to do just the right thing.

Maclyn Arbuckle as the Bishop La Balue is another whose work adds to the strength of the picture. His contribution to its mirth in the earlier scenes is notable.

Ralph Graves as Maximilian gives a fine performance—rugged, wholesome. Then there are Johnny Dooley in the comedy role of the half-wit prince, finely done; Theresa Maxwell Conover as the queen is stately and dignified—and appealing, too, especially as the mother.

It should be a pleasure for an exhibitor to exploit this production. In the first place it is a subject that may be shown anywhere, in church or prison—and that remark is made in no spirit of levity—or in community house. In other words, it is one that may be recommended for any clientele.

It is made by the same organization that produced "When Knighthood Was in Flower," and that statement ought to appeal to any public.

It is a story of a princess in disguise of a maid who meets and falls in love with a knight who proves to be the prince her father has selected for her husband. There's romance enough for any one, too.

It is a beautifully staged and costumed picture of castles and steel armor and flowing female garb; it has stern drama and light comedy; it has court intrigue and tender love-making.

Advertise the names of Marion Davies, Lyn Harding, Holbrook Blinn (recently seen as the star in "The Bad Man") and Maclyn Arbuckle—a quartet that will arouse the interest of any motion picture goer.

You can promise—and fulfill—an evening's strong entertainment.

ROULETTE. Selznick Photoplay. Author, William McHarg. Director, S. E. V. Taylor. Length, 4,850 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Loris Carrington Edith Roberts
John Tralee Norman Trevor
Ben Corcoran Maurice Costello
Mrs. Harris Mary Carr
Peter Marineaux Walter Booth
Mrs. Marineaux Effie Shannon
Dan Carrington Montagu Love
Rita Dagmar Godowsky

On her father's death Loris Carrington becomes the ward of gambler John Tralee. He utilizes the girl as a decoy. She meets and falls in love with Peter Marineaux. Peter tangles that Loris helped Tralee to cheat him. She offers herself in payment but Tralee objects. Finally the two men agree to play, the winner to take the girl and the money. Loris controls the roulette wheel so as to give Peter the victory. Developments show she has made a wise choice and they are married.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE'S a sensational flavor about this picture's title which ought to draw the crowds, nor will patrons be disappointed in its entertainment powers. The story runs along distinctly novel lines, highly melodramatic and occasionally swerving over the border of probability, but none the less interesting on that account. The average audience will enjoy "Roulette," which should gather in the shekels for any exhibitor booking it.

The plot pivots upon a gambling theme, but promoters or lovers of games of chance where the elusive dollar is risked will derive scant encouragement from the same, for the author clearly has his knife out for them. One of the principal characters runs a crooked game, having a roulette wheel which can be controlled by a certain device at the operator's whim, with the aid of which he skins his victims joyously. The heroine's father dies as a result of shock when his partner cheats him in a card shuffle, and in fact the gambling fraternity is shown up in a pretty bad light all through the feature.

So, in addition to presenting a narrative rich in strong situations and emotional atmosphere, "Roulette" may be said to hand out something of a moral lesson on the side. At all events, there is nothing filmed for the censors to shoot at.

Loris Carrington, young and innocent as she is represented, could hardly have served as bait for Tralee's gambling trap for a lengthy period without being fully aware that she was employed, vulgarly speaking, to catch suckers. It would have been far more logical and convincing had she appeared as a confederate of Tralee's, growing ashamed of her duplicity and resolving to redeem herself. The heroine who repents of wrongdoing is always forgiven by screen devotees.

Outside of this slip the action moves naturally enough, there are divers complications, with an extra knot put into the tangle when Loris's gambling guardian conceives the idea of becoming her lover, and the zenith of suspense is reached in the scene where the girl puts her destiny in the whirl of the roulette wheel. But she is crafty enough to govern the said destiny by utilizing the foot control under the table, so that Peter Marineaux, the chap her affections are set upon, will come out victor. Loris doesn't altogether comprehend the mechanism of the device, consequently you aren't sure she can achieve her object, and hence the saving sense of uncertainty which gives a sharp edge to the episode.

Having thus gambled on a man's honor, the heroine wins her point, for Peter duly turns up at a country church and the hooking process is satisfactorily completed, Edith Roberts is the Loris Carrington of the production and scores quite an artistic triumph by her vivacious portrayal of that unsophisticated maiden, who isn't quite as unsophisticated as she looks.

Walter Booth plays the lover, giving a pleasing, clean-cut performance, Norman Trevor is excellent as John Tralee, Maurice Costello fills the role of Ben Corcoran acceptably and the work of the supporting cast is satisfactory.

The photography includes many fine interiors, the settings are costly and admirably designed, the exterior shots skillfully filmed; the rustic scene in the climax, where the lovers meet at the little country church to be married, is especially charming and good lighting prevails.

The title should aid greatly in exploiting this picture. Among others, the sporting contingent can be appealed to. Play up the cast, featuring such names as Edith Roberts, Montagu Love, Norman Trevor, Maurice Costello, Mary Carr and Dagmar Godowsky, each of whom is well known to the fans. You can stress the story's dramatic strength and romantic appeal.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Elizabeth Winthrop	Constance Binney
Mr. Winthrop	Edmund Breese
Mrs. Winthrop	Mary Carr
Hetty	Edna May Oliver
Clayton Webster	Richard Thorpe
Hugo Von Strohm	William Bailey
Mickey Flynn	Russell Griffin

Elizabeth Winthrop becomes fascinated with cabaret life and makes friends who are objectionable to her parents. She resents her father's treatment of her friends and leaves home. She seeks work in New York and is aided by Von Strohm, who unknown to her pays her salary at a cabaret. Clayton Webster, her fiance, objects to her work and she returns his ring. Von Strohm invites her to a roadhouse and tries to force his attentions on her. On her way to the roadhouse she is recognized by her mother and is rescued. Clayton is bound for South America but Elizabeth arrives at the pier as the boat is pulling out and wig-wags that she loves him. He jumps overboard and swims ashore.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

THE lure of white lights! Fame is the flame that entices the moths and ruins or purifies! A story of a girl's adventures—her trial and failure and triumph!

That sums up the essence of C. C. Burr's "Three O'Clock in the Morning." In this case "Three O'Clock in the Morning" is no song. But it has song in it aplenty. The kind that starts at 10 P. M. and doesn't even pause for breath until the middle of the next afternoon, when an irate father comes into his parlor and finds a group of revelers—of whom his daughter seems to be ring leader—spilling champagne into the victrola and harsh unseemly sounds on the sanctified Sunday morning atmosphere.

Of course with the advent of daddy on the scene, the party exits quickly through the servants' door. Dad and daughter then have some hectic words with the result that one more girl leaves a comfortable home to live her life as her own impulses dictate. In this case New York stretches out its inviting hands to her.

Up to this point, though the story is quite young, action is crowded and frequent. Bright deft touches here and there, make the blood leap exuberantly like running water over twigs and pebbles. The reviewer could hardly contain himself—for his is essentially an exploitee's point of view—and the thoughts which constantly kept running through his mind as each new scene suggested an additional publicity motif, knew no bounds for the great exploitation possibilities contained therein.

Picture a national advertising campaign reaching into almost every home that can boast of a victrola. Picture a publicity project that reaches almost every eye that gazes on the counters and show windows of a five-and-ten-cent store. Picture the tremendous public interested in popular song and dance music.

Picture all this and you visualize something that practically constitutes a free advance notice of the magnitude already described, for "Three O'Clock in the Morning." This is so because the title of the picture is the title of a waltz song which is still on the tongues of children, youths and grown-ups, all over this broad land.

Bright, colorful strokes of night life, music and dance are punctuated with a proportionate amount of pathos. In the end Elizabeth sees the danger of hovering over the flame of dissipation and questionable friendships and joins her parents when they need her most.

A final pleasant and active touch is achieved when the heroine comes back to her first love, who receives her message by wig-wag while on a liner bound for South America, which is heading rapidly for the open sea. He catches the signal, however, and without making any bones about a brand new suit of clothes, dives into the icy waves, whence he reaches the pier and his heart's desire in a final fade-out.

POSSESSES AVERAGE MERIT

'The Fool's Awakening' Fairly Interesting but Plot Is Weak

THE FOOL'S AWAKENING. Metro Photoplay. Adapted from W. J. Locke's Novel, "The Tale of Triona." Director, Harold Shaw. Length, 5,763 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

John Briggs	Harrison Ford
Olivia Gale	Enid Bennett
Major Oliphant	Alec Francis
Myra	Mary Alden
Herbert Lorington	Lionel Belmore
Hargrave Mavenna	Harry Northrup
Lieutenant Wedderburn	John Sainpolis
Lydia Mainwaring	Arline Pretty
Colonel Onslow	Lorimer Johnston

John Briggs, who has seen service during the World War on the Russian front, returns to England. Discouraged by failure in literature, he utilizes as book material a diary found on a dead Russian soldier, makes a hit under the name of Alexis Triona and weds Olivia Gale. Subsequently he reveals the deception to her. Repulsed by Olivia as he meets her while driving an auto, he deliberately swings his car over a cliff. She goes to his aid. He recovers and they are reconciled.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A PRODUCTION of average merit, "The Fool's Awakening" ranks as a fair program attraction, in which capacity it will probably bring satisfactory box office returns. It is well photographed, not badly directed and cleverly presented by a cast in which the names of several prominent players are listed.

The trials and tribulations, mostly of his own making, which surround the hero are threaded into a narrative which effectively demonstrates the futility of trying to build up permanent happiness on a foundation of deception. The moral adduced by John Briggs' assumption of a dead man's personality and literary belongings is a self-evident one, but the director has wisely refrained from stressing the lesson's influence at the expense of his plot. There is no unnecessary preaching to handicap the action, which flows smoothly and does not drag at any stage.

The story's principal fault is that of being a bit too obvious. From the moment John Briggs yields to temptation it becomes perfectly plain that his exposure is only a question of time. There is no chance for him to reach security on the crooked trail. Waiting for the big crash develops a certain quality of suspense, but not a particularly gripping kind, as you know in advance it is bound to come.

In a word, it's the unexpected that strikes home to the average picture audience's hearts.

Harrison Ford is the erstwhile erring but subsequently repentant hero and gives a very pleasing performance. Pretty Enid Bennett registers as a fascinating Olivia Gale, Mary Alden, Arline Pretty and Alec Francis are effective in their respective roles and adequate support is provided by others in the cast. The photography throughout is clear, distinct and governed by fine lighting.

William J. Locke is an author possessing an international reputation in the fiction world and it should be easy to arrange lucrative tie-ups with local booksellers on the novel from which the picture is adapted. Feature the marital deception angle of the story and its love romance. Enid Bennett, Harrison Ford, Mary Alden, Arline Pretty and Alec Francis are well known names in the cast, worthy of mention when exploiting the feature.

JAZZ ATMOSPHERE PREVAILS

'Week End Husbands' Depicts High Jinks Revels of Fast Society Set

WEEK END HUSBANDS. Equity Pictures Corporation Photoplay. Author, Daniel Carson Goodman. Director, E. H. Griffith. Length, 6,450 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Barbara Belden	Alma Rubens
William Randall	H. E. Herbert
Thomas Mowry	Montagu Love
John Keane	Maurice Costello
Mrs. Dawn	Sally Cruze
Robert Stover	Charles Byers
M. La Rue	Paul Panzer
Mrs. Sarah Belden	Margaret Dale

After serving in the U. S. Army in the World War, Will Randall turns to bootlegging, makes money and is enabled to surround his wife, Barbara, with the luxuries she demands. Barbara spends much of her time in fashionable resorts. Her husband is only able to see her over week-ends. She becomes involved in a scandal with an admirer, Randall, who is in trouble with the Federal authorities, leaves her. She takes poison in Paris. Randall arrives by aeroplane. Barbara's life is saved. They are reconciled.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AT a hasty glance the inference might be drawn that this picture's title exploits a novel marital fad whereby ladies equip themselves with new husbands every week. Such is not the case, there is but one husband who really matters in the story, and his grievance lies in the fact that owing to wife's gyrations with the fast social set he can only enjoy her company two days out of the seven.

But the title will act as a good box office magnet. And those who like domestic dramas, with a sporty atmosphere of society gambolings to feverish jazz tunes, will find "Week End Husbands" appetizing film farce. On the other hand, serious-minded or critical folks will probably pronounce it awful rot.

The box office value of the feature is a question to be left solely to the exhibitor's judgment. If you are catering to audiences that want plenty of action, with highly colored society stuff, book it.

There seems to be a decided run on the "Jazz - married - hero - and - heroine - misunderstandings" type of picture just now, but the indications are that the producers are overdoing it, as they usually do when they all get headed along a too-well trodden path.

One thing in the film's favor is that it is clean, so far as sex suggestion is concerned. Barbara Belden, the frivolous wife, gets mixed up in a lot of trouble, owing to vanity and love of admiration, but she is nevertheless on the level, and as played by Alma Rubens, a very fascinating and rather appealing heroine. A trenchant thrill is put over in the scene where Barbara is nearly drowned as her canoe upsets, and her misadventures in Paris, which nearly result in suicide, are touching.

H. E. Herbert plays William Randall with a good deal of dignity and reserve strength. The role is one that could easily have been rendered absurd by oversteering its melodramatic side, but Mr. Herbert does not err in this respect. The support is adequate.

The photography offers a variety of delightful exteriors, water and wooded views, and many fine interiors, with deep sets and effective lighting. In the finale husband and wife are seen returning to Uncle Sam's country aboard a liner, and this night shot, with the silver moon rays, bathing the deck and waves in glory, is a very pretty example of camera technique.

The title should prove of great assistance in exploitation. You can safely play up the fast, moving, jazzy action, dilate on the gown display at the social functions, stress the story's vibrations of jealousy, suspicion, thrills, and feature Alma Rubens. The names of H. E. Herbert, Montagu Love, Maurice Costello, Sally Cruze are worthy of mention.

NEGRI TRIUMPHS IN 'SHADOWS OF PARIS'

Famous Polish Star Scores Greatest Screen Hit Since Her Appearance in 'Passion'

SHADOWS OF PARIS. Paramount Photoplay. Adapted from the Stage Play, "Mon Homme" by Andre Picard and Francis Carco. Director, Herbert Brenon. Length, 6,440 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

The Blackbird	Pola Negri
Fernand	Charles de Roche
Georges du Croy	Adolphe Menjou
Raoul Gramont	Huntley Gordon
Madame Boule	Rose Dion
Emile Boule	Gareth Hughes
Liane	Vera Reynolds
M. Flaubert	Edward Kipling

In 1918 Paris knows "The Blackbird" as queen of the Apaches. Her lover, Fernand, is reported killed at the front. She masquerades as a society woman and becomes the honored wife of Raoul Gramont, but occasionally visits her old haunts in disguise. Fernand reappears as an Apache leader and they meet again. After many adventures Fernand is shot and killed. "The Blackbird" confesses all to her husband and is forgiven.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

PARAMOUNT has a sure box office winner in this—the best American-made film in which Pola Negri has appeared. That widely advertised and deservedly popular star is seen to great advantage in a role which suits her exotic, magnetic personality in every detail and will appeal tremendously to the legion of Negri admirers. Her work and that of the clever supporting cast, combined with the melodramatic swing and snappy action which governs every foot of the feature, render "Shadows of Paris" an attraction no exhibitor can afford to overlook.

Director Herbert Brenon has succeeded admirably in reproducing the atmosphere of the gay French capital both in its society surroundings and those of the Apache lairs. It is due to the realistic backgrounds no less than the excellent acting that the somewhat lurid and fanciful plot seems thoroughly convincing as presented on the screen.

There are many big moments in the picture, which starts off with an air bombardment of Paris, presents some wonderfully vivid shots of life in the underworld and switches suddenly to scenes where Claire, the erstwhile "Blackbird," queens it over the elite of the city, thus obtaining a contrast in social values which is not without its humorous tinge.

With all this sweep of resistless action and dynamic episodes the most telling emotional "punch" is attained, as it ought to be, in a climax of unusual strength. That is when Claire, faced by her former lover, Fernand, realizes that he is only a monster of greed and that her affections belong solely to the man who has made her an honorable wife.

Fernand is shot and killed by her husband's secretary, Du Croy. The latter knows the truth, but lies like a gentleman to shield the indiscreet wife, informing Raoul that he has merely slain a burglar.

In this situation, as well as in other emotional phases which fall to her share, Pola Negri acts with the tempestuous fire and polished art which distinguished her work in "Passion" the picture responsible for her sudden rise to fame in this country. Whether clad in the rough garments of an Apache or the brilliant trappings of a society leader, she is equally impressive and alluring.

The support is in every way worthy of the star. Charles De Roche is for the first time since his advent on the screen in this country, cast for a part, that of the Apache lover, which he fills to perfection. None of his previous roles were exactly suited to his virile personality, but as Fernand he scores an instant and decisive hit. Huntley Gordon plays Raoul Gramont in capable style, Adolphe Menjou impersonates the wily secretary, Du Croy, with his usual artistic polish, Vera Reynolds is a fascinating Liane and other members of the company contribute to the film's success.

There is an abundance of fine photography, exteriors and interiors are filmed with excellent effect and the lighting is faultless.

You can exploit this feature as the best attraction in which Pola Negri has appeared since the date of her big success in "Passion." Stress the story's melodramatic power, unlimited suspense and thrilling action as much as you please, your patrons won't be disappointed. Charles De Roche, Adolphe Menjou, Huntley Gordon, Gareth Hughes and Vera Reynolds are names worthy of mention in your advertising campaign.

HERE'S GOOD ENTERTAINMENT

Goldstone's 'White Panther' Colorful Speedy Desert Drama

THE WHITE PANTHER. Goldstone Photoplay. Author, Jack Natteford. Director, Alvin J. Neitz. Length, 5,000 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bruce Wainwright	Rex Baker
Irene	Gertrude McConnell
Vasmiri	Lois Scott
Tommy	Phil Burke

A love affair between Vasmiri, Persian princess, and a British officer named Farrell, stirs up her father and the natives to revenge. They capture Irene, an English girl. Farrell is in love with Irene. Bruce Wainwright, known as "The White Panther," who has frequently foiled the plans of the desert outlaws, comes to Irene's rescue. He is successful in saving her, but meanwhile Farrell is slain and Bruce and the girl he has learned to love, are in great danger. At the crucial moment they are saved by a British cavalry force.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

CONSIDERED in the light of an attraction for the neighborhood and smaller theatres this Goldstone feature ought to prove a satisfactory box office asset. The story is melodramatic in the extreme, but well handled by director and players, and if it does outrange the limits of probability in some respects it still qualifies as lively entertainment.

Dramas of the Eastern deserts naturally run more or less in a well known plot groove. But Director Alvin has introduced a good many novel angles into the narrative and, best of all, kept the action buzzing at high speed throughout. Nothing handicaps the drawing power of a picture of this type like obvious padding or dragging moments, and "The White Panther" is happily free from these clogging defects.

Bestriding a white steed and appearing and disappearing with ghostlike celerity, Bruce Wainwright is likened to a phantom panther by the annoyed bandits and manages to keep them under a constant nervous strain.

It is during the course of a campaign he is conducting single-handed to support the cause of a dusky female who has been injured by his foes that Bruce gets mixed up in the affair of a kidnapped English girl, Irene, and incidentally falls in love with her. In so doing he crosses the trail of princess Vasmiri and Tommy Farrell, another British officer, whose philandering is responsible for Irene's abduction.

The photography includes a number of fine desert views, with skillfully filmed long shots and close-ups. The Eastern atmosphere is colorful and artistic.

You can exploit this as a fast moving desert melodrama, not of the usual "sheik" type, but offering considerable romantic interest and a preponderance of thrills. "Snowy" Baker is worth playing up strongly, as he has a numerous following in sections of the country where his daredevil stunts are popular.

SERIAL FILM TURNS INTO FEATURE HIT

'Way of a Man' Presented in Seven Reels, Registers as High-Class Western Picture

THE WAY OF A MAN. Pathe Photoplay. Author, Emerson Hough. Director, George B. Seitz. Feature Length, 8,816 Feet. Serial Length, Ten Episodes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ellen Meriwether	Allene Ray
John Cowles	Harold Miller
Mrs. Cowles	Florence Lee
Gordon Orme	Bud Osborne
Grace Sheraton	Kathryn Appleton
Auberry	Whitehorse
Mandy McGovern	Lillian Gale
Andy	Chet Ryan
Carmencita	Lillian Adrian

On his father's death John Cowles goes west, meets and falls in love with Ellen, daughter of Colonel Meriwether. Through the treachery of Gordon Orme their convoy is nearly destroyed by Indians. Later, John and his mother join the California gold-rush. The gold camp is attacked by outlaws headed by Orme, but the bandits are defeated. John wins Ellen.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

CUT down from serial length into a seven reel feature, "The Way of a Man" packs a tremendous amount of excitement into the latter compass. Exhibitors can book it either way, not having seen the serial offering, the writer is unable to deliver a verdict as to its merits, but the seven-reeler is the stuff to suit any man's theatre where patrons like high-speed melodramatic entertainment.

Like most of Emerson Hough's stories the action is staged in the old frontier days, those of 1848, to be more exact. And it is whizzing action right from start to finish. Director George Seitz saw to it that there wasn't a possible thrill overlooked. Neither did he neglect making full use of colorful backgrounds.

The desert locations are filmed with wonderful skill and the scenic artistry of the picture scores fifty-fifty with its spectacular entertaining values. It's no small feat to condense a blood-and-fire serial in this fashion and still manage to shape out a compact plot, running smoothly to a definite and logical climax, but this is just what has been accomplished.

Besides the attack on the camp, there is a combat of gorgeous proportions when hostiles charge down upon the wagon train. Genuine Indians, fearsome looking warriors they are, participate in this last-named incident and the melee that follows is something calculated to make the most hardened spectator shiver and gasp.

Indeed, all through the production suspense holds sway, realism reigns supreme and a wealth of accurate historical detail will commend it to literary students interested in this particular era of our nation's past.

The heroine role of Ellen Meriwether is filled by Allene Ray, a singularly beautiful girl, who gives a performance remarkable for its natural charm and freedom from over-acting. Harold Miller, a fine-looking youth and capable actor, plays the hero with due dash and gallantry, the native types are excellent and the support deserves unqualified praise.

The exhibitor needn't be afraid to boost this picture as a Westerner of unusual force and gripping power. Play up the Indian attack, the swift action, the unlimited thrills, the beauty of the leading lady, the good work of the cast and photography's artistic charm. It ought to satisfy any audience wanting quick action and thrilling entertainment. Above all, don't forget to mention that the story is by the gifted author of "The Covered Wagon." There is a sure chance for tie-ups with book-stores on the book by Emerson Hough.

HAS GOOD SELLING POINTS

'Restless Wives' a Fast Moving Domestic Drama With Popular Appeal

RESTLESS WIVES. C. C. Burr. Author, Izola La Cava. Director, Gregory La Cava. Length, 6,317 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Polly Benson	Doris Kenyon
James Benson	James Rennie
Hugo Cady	Montagu Love
Mrs. Drake	Naomi Childers
Curtis Wilbur	Colt Albertson
Pelham Morrison	Burr McIntosh
Hobart Richards	Edmund Breese

Trouble brews between James Benson and his wife, Polly, when he grows jealous of attentions paid to her by Curtis Wilbur. A disagreement results and Polly leaves her husband. Polly's father goes bankrupt and she disposes of her jewels to help him. Benson carries off Polly to his lodge in the mountains. He is shot by an intoxicated servant, the lodge catches fire, Polly rescues him and they are reconciled.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS picture ought to make a good selling record in the state rights market. It possesses all the elements which arouse public curiosity—a snappy, alluring title, a cast of well-known players, elaborate settings and a marital tangle which is only straightened out after a variety of disasters threaten hero and heroine.

Director Gregory La Cava has done wonders with the familiar screen theme of the husband who neglects his wife for business cares, with the result that she seeks amusement elsewhere. It's not so easy to take a plot of this kind and develop new and startling situations, but Mr. La Cava has turned the trick all right and "Restless Wives" will surely appeal to a majority of film audiences.

For one thing, the feature is alive with action, its characters are caught in a whirl of dramatic events which juggles them here and there in breathless haste, the nervous strain of social and business life conducted at high speed never relaxes, and a remarkably vivid climax is reached in the big fire scene, when Polly rescues her husband from the devouring flames and the two agree to disagree no longer.

The average person will be interested in the domestic troubles of the Bensons because the onlooker will naturally sympathize with husband or wife, as the case may impress him or her. There's much to be said on both sides, anyway, Jim Benson, although failing to pay his spouse the attention she deserves, is a fine fellow in the main; and Polly, if a trifle frivolous, proves beyond doubt that, despite appearances she is strictly on the square.

The cabaret scenes are beautifully filmed, with a bevy of pretty dancers providing physical fireworks, and it is here that a sensational episode occurs, when Benson encounters his wife in charge of a former suitor. Later the disgruntled hubby kicks over the traces in still more melodramatic style, when he wallows Polly's surprised escort and carts her off to his lone mountain retreat. The shooting of Benson by a hootch lunatic and the fire finish, are other realistic incidents staged with telling effect.

Doris Kenyon scores heavily as Polly Benson, a role suited in every detail to the winning personality of this popular actress. Miss Kenyon's patomime is excellent, her work in the emotional situations which fall to her share will please her many admirers and members of her own sex will assuredly wax enthusiastic over the numerous handsome gowns she wears with such dainty grace. James Rennie gives a capital performance as the husband and splendid support is given the principals by Montagu Love, Naomi Childers and others of the carefully selected cast. The photography includes many ornate interiors and exteriors of pronounced scenic charm.

The title has undeniable drawing power and can be utilized to good effect in exploiting the feature. You can praise the story without reserve, stressing its thrills and complications. Play up the cast, featuring Doris Kenyon and James Rennie, but calling attention to the presence of Montagu Love, Naomi Childers, Burr McIntosh and Edmund Breese in the company, as each possesses a more or less strong following among the fans.

FAIR PROGRAM ATTRACTION

'Cause for Divorce' Handicapped by Early Dragging Action

CAUSE FOR DIVORCE. Selznick Photoplay. Author, Thelma Lanier. Director, Hugh Diesker. Length, 7,432 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Laura Weston	Fritzi Brunette
Tom Parker	David Butler
Martin Sheldon	Charles Clary
Ruth Metcliffe	Helene Lynch
Howard Metcliffe	Pat O'Malley
Count Ramon Lorenz	Peter Burke
Skippy North	Cleve Moore
George Angier	Harmon MacGregor
Professor Williams	James O. Barrows

Tom Weston's wife, Laura, narrowly escapes being involved in a love affair with wealthy Martin Sheldon. The latter's daughter, Ruth, married to a young lawyer, is dissatisfied and plans an elopement with Count Lorenz, a crook. Ruth meets with an accident and is brought to Laura's house. Her father comes, and is thunderstruck when he finds out who Laura is. Matters are finally straightened out all around and a happy climax achieved.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

CONSIDERED as a program attraction, "Cause for Divorce" should bring fair box office returns. It does not carry sufficient dramatic force or originality of conception to entitle it to rank as a suitable offering for high-class theatres.

The wife who goes philandering because she fancies her husband doesn't devote enough time to her, or provide luxuries she deems necessary, has done her bit on the screen so frequently that it has become a matter of no small difficulty to build up new and entertaining situations around her. The difficulty is in some measure conquered in this instance by introducing two wives, both of whom take trial flights outside the matrimonial fence and come close to flopping disastrously.

But they make safe landings, of course, in the long run and everything is lovely along the domestic reservations. One of the young women is wealthy, the other in ordinary circumstances, and something of a sensation is manufactured by bringing in the former's father.

Her auto gets jammed in a crash, which by the way, is a very mildly conducted accident, Ruth is hurt, taken to the nearest domicile, which chances to be that of the other callow wife. Later her papa turns up and there is a general surprise. This last is the best situation in the picture, when the overbearing Martin Sheldon is made to realize that there are other important factors in the whirl of human events than his money.

The interiors offer some handsome decorative effects and the photography as a whole is artistic. Director Hugh Diesker has not been fortunate in preserving his continuity, in attempting to make the plot novel.

Fritzi Brunette as Laura Weston, and Helene Lynch as Ruth Metcliffe, give satisfactory performances, sharing dramatic honors with David Butler, Charles Clary and Pat O'Malley, in the principal male roles. The rest of the cast furnish capable support.

The title possesses exploitation values. You can point out how the shadow of divorce threatened to cloud up the happiness of two households, and that it never pays to be too hasty in judging one's fellow creatures. The names of the players mentioned above are worth featuring, but it is just as well not to lavish too much praise on the story.

HAS SPECTACULAR APPEAL

'North of Hudson Bay,' Brisk Melodrama and Excellent Mix Vehicle

NORTH OF HUDSON BAY. Fox Photoplay. Author, Jules Furthman. Director, John Ford. Length, 4,973 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Michael Dane	Tom Mix
Estelle McDonald	Kathleen Key
Peter Dane	Eugene Palette
Cameron MacDonald	Will Walling
Angus McKenzie	Frank Campeau
Jeffrey Clough	Frank Leigh
Armond Lemoir	Fred Kohler

Peter Dane is assassinated at Hudson Bay Trading Post. His brother, Michael, arrives, falls in love with Estelle McDonald, is suspected of murder and cast forth into the wilderness to die in company with Angus McKenzie. They are joined by Estelle, fleeing from the pursuit of an unwelcome suitor and his band. A savage fight takes place, but the lovers escape through the rapids in a canoe.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A BRISK melodrama, well directed and beautifully photographed, "North of Hudson Bay" registers as an excellent vehicle for Tom Mix. It will please the many admirers of that popular star and should prove a lucrative box office asset, especially in the neighborhood theatres.

That those veteran screen "standbys," the members of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police fail to play prominent parts in the story's development, seems almost incredible, yet such is the refreshing truth. And it must be admitted that the plot, although dealing with adventurous doings in a Canadian wilderness, gets along very nicely without the help of the troopers, thereby setting an unconventional example which other producers would do well to imitate occasionally.

The picture's appeal is exceedingly spectacular, thrills abound, the action moves at a hurricane clip, the love romance is skillfully wrought out and terminates logically and happily. And from an artistic standpoint it may safely be asserted that there is no room for unfavorable criticism. The atmosphere of the ice-bound North is impressively developed in a series of outdoor views that display the stern grandeur of snowbound Nature with tremendously realistic effect.

There is some amusing comedy interpolated during the hero's journey by steamboat down the river, when he first meets the girl of his heart and incidentally jumps overboard to rescue her hat from a watery grave. But for the most part the narrative is deadly serious and shot through with exciting punches.

Michael Dane's combat with a horde of ravenous wolves is one of the big scenes calculated to stir the blood of the most hardened movie fan and the flight of the canoes through the furiously roaring rapids another bit of startling realism.

Northern trading post authorities of those uncompromising days had their own drastic ways of dealing out justice to law-breakers, one of the least pleasant being the thrusting forth of a criminal without arms or food into the desolate wastes of snow, this penalty, known as "the journey of death" usually making good its title. The hero undergoes this lively experience in company with a man wrongfully accused of having murdered Dane's brother, and the subsequent developments are surcharged with dramatic incidents.

Tom Mix plays the role of Michael Dane with all his wonted fire and vigor, maintaining his reputation not only as an athlete, but an actor of tried ability. Kathleen Key is a very attractive heroine, the native types are true to life and the support as a whole could hardly be improved upon.

You can exploit this picture as it is well up to the high-water mark of Tom Mix attractions, offering a stirring romance, packed with thrills and remarkable for its scenic beauty.

The Big Little Feature

Story of Modern Egypt to Be Produced Serially

A new Patheserial adapted from Mary Hastings Bradley's famous novel of modern Egypt, "The Fortieth Door," has been put in production on the West Coast under the direction of George Seitz. This will be a C. W. Patton's auspices, the two preceding chapter pictures being "The Way of a Man," now in distribution, and "Leatherstockings," which will be made available March 23rd.

It is a story of stirring action and appealing romance, in which a young American archaeologist becomes involved in an exciting intrigue of the old world while carrying on his research work among the tombs of the Pharaohs. Competition for the photoplay rights was keenly waged over a period of many months between several of the leading producers of the screen.

Allene Ray, who is winning widespread favor for her work as leading woman in the current Patheserial release, "The Way of a Man," will play one of the featured roles.

Bruce Gordon also well-known will appear as the American Egyptologist. Other prominent players are: Frankie Mann, David Dunbar, Anna May Wong, who plays an important character part in Douglas Fairbanks' forthcoming production, "The Thief of Bagdad"; Whitehorse and Lillian Gale, who play in "The Way of a Man"; and Bernard Siegel, an actor of recognized ability who appeared in a prominent role in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Screen Snapshots Number 10—C. B. C.

In the new issue of this popular "fan magazine of the screen" those Kings of Jazz, Paul Whiteman and Vincent Lopez are seen having a great time at a big movie ball. The spectator is taken there by proxy and sees also such favorites as Mary Eaton, Miriam Battista, Pat Rooney, Jane and Katherine Lee, and Lucy Fox having a large evening.

Fight fans get a special treat for no less a person than Tommy Gibbons helps John Bowers, Sheldon Lewis and Marguerite De La Motte settle a dispute on pugilism.

Theodore Roberts goes to see his own picture on the screen and gets a surprise. Hugo Ballin directs his wife, Mabel Ballin, and Edward Earle in a "still" life scene. Mabel doesn't know she's supposed to be dead, and spoils it all by sneezing.

Viola Dana, with her mother; and Charles Murray, Raymond McKee, and Gregory La Cava; in a comedy stunt are highlights of this reel. And there is also Erich Von Stroheim proudly exhibiting his baby—the only person by the way, whom he has trouble directing.

Harry Gribbon and Jack Cooper are the star performers on the Castoria College team. People who know football will be convulsed over the play in the game.

There's a bathing beauty scene too and some trick photography of Harry Gribbon up in the clouds, riding a homemade contraption that might be called a bicycle-aeroplane.

Let your audience see the latest mechanical device used to shoe a horse—incidentally the device has a drawing power that takes our hero off his feet and pins him to a lightning rod.

Good broad slapstick with rapid-fire action and laugh-provoking gags in abundance that's sure to go over big.

Good Advertising Value in Director's Names

JUST how much value or prestige is there connected with the director's and author's name in the big little feature field?

It's a certainty that it is not being commercialized in the most efficient manner.

There is no difference whatsoever, between the feature and the big little feature when it comes to concentrating and caretaking efforts on both the author's and director's part in constructing entertainment that will please the people and profit the exhibitor.

In the short subject branch of the industry the author and director should mean the 100% equivalent in advertising and exploitation that the feature field now profits by. In other words the director's or author's name lets the public know what to expect from previous performances. They'll come back to see more of that man's work.

To people who read scientific magazines, the name Tolhurst used in connection with the "Secrets of Life" series, will promise authentic, interesting studies.

The name H. C. Witwer used in connection with the "Leather Pushers," "Fighting Blood" and "Telephone Girl" series will draw crowds who read these stories in the current Cosmopolitan magazine issues.

Another type patron after seeing one of the "Wilderness Tales" will remember the name Robert C. Bruce and go back to see more, knowing the unusual nature subjects and pictorial beauty of his work.

Just as the "Leatherstockings" series will draw because they are taken from the world-famous novels of James Fenimore Cooper.

And last but not least, Mack Sennett's comedies, that have provided an individual and definite type of entertainment for years.

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

The latest Al Christie comedy is now being edited and is entitled "Reno or Bust." It is to be released through Educational and Bobby Vernon plays the featured role in this two-reeler. Duane Thompson supports him.

'Something Different' For You And Your Patrons

A new and novel series of one-reel subjects is shortly to be released via Grand-Asher in the shape of "Laugh-o-Graphs," or in other words, jokes pictures on the screen by living actors.

The Laugh-o-Graphs will be produced in a style comparable to any humorous subjects made. A short introductory title will give the first part of the "gag." Then the players will enact the story and a final title will carry the gag or climax of the joke. The name of the author or the one submitting the joke will be given on the screen. Anyone, state the producers, can send in jokes and all should be addressed to "Laugh-o-Graph Editor, Grand Studio, Hollywood, California."

Those used will be paid for at the rate of five dollars per joke.

Managers of theatres may have their patrons submit jokes to them and send them to this studio. Here's a chance to get into closer contact with your patrons.

Charles Chase is engaged to impersonate a woman in an amateur theatrical performance. Those of your audience who are familiar with this comedian's work will be interested to see him in feminine attire. He is forced by circumstances to wear his stage costume home, which includes a blond wig and bespangled evening gown, and then the fun starts. All the gay dogs of the town, inebriated and otherwise, decide to offer their assistance. Charley scorns them, as all good little unescorted ladies should, but to evade a suspicious policeman he has to get into one man's car. These scenes furnish lots of action and some good laughs and the last fade-out is too good to tell—you've got to see it.

The Exhibitors' Round Table

WEST COAST THEATRE OPENS

Oscar A. Kantner and C. Robinson are the proud managing directors of the new Seville Theatre, Inglewood, California, which opened its doors to the public February 8th.

Mr. Kantner has been identified with the motion picture industry for the past eight years, the greater part of that time being associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in various parts of the country.

Mr. Robinson is also well known in theatrical circles, both on the West coast and Midwest—starting his career with Paramount as a salesman.

The theatre is of Spanish design and the large Mission style bronze bell that swings in the illuminated opening at the top of the theatre front is impressive. Through openings in the Mission style front wall is seen vines and foliage protruding.

For the opening presentation Film Booking Office's "Judgment of the Storm," was shown and Lucille Ricksen the young star of that film appeared in person.

Of particular note to showmen, contemplating theatre construction, is the heating and ventilating system of the theatre. It is mechanically controlled, thereby delivering a non-fluctuating temperature.

SHOWMANSHIP

What Makes Mary and Mick Buy Your Tickets

An Author's Viewpoint Gives the Answer as the Salesmanship of the Dramatist Combined with the Showmanship of the Exhibitor

By WILLIAM DUDLEY PELLEY

YOU'RE an Exhibitor!
You're under big expense to run your theatre. You're under heavy responsibility to please your patrons. You've got stockholders, perhaps, who pound you for dividends.

Fifty-two times a year—and maybe one hundred and four—you've got to make a sure-fire speculation.

Out of seven or eight hundred pictures produced every year, you've got to speculate successfully with sure-fire selection. You've got to carry your theatre overhead; you've got to please your fans; you've got to make money.

The crux of the situation is picking those pictures which sell to the public with minimum effort and maximum pull. And that means a policy and a system—else you're shooting in the air—running your business by rule of thumb—putting your good money in a picture bucketshop.

That policy and system means checking up each film that is offered you for booking, against a handful of dramatic and sales fundamentals.

I want to talk about those fundamentals a moment. They're the bed-rock and heart of your business!

Let's get at them through the eyes of the patron.

Mary's been working all day as stenographer in a downtown office. Mick, her "gentleman friend," goes to evening school three times a week. He's taking a course in civil engineering. Meanwhile, during the day, he drives a laundry wagon. On his three open evenings, he comes around to the flat where Mary lives with her parents—and multitudinous brothers and sisters. He wants to spoon with Mary, to have her alone to himself, to follow the thing called Cosmic Urge. But Mary's father and mother are hard-working people. They want to go to bed early. And the brothers and sisters make more or less racket. A fine chance for Mick and Mary to spoon. "Come on," says Mick. "Let's take in a movie!"

Of course they'll take in a movie. He may not be able to do much petting in the modern theatre, but he's with her, perhaps clandestinely holding her hand. And that's better than the noisy flat with the spying parents and noisy offspring.

But the petting business is beside the point. I'm thinking of the dollar bill Mick has in his left trouser pocket. It's coming into your till or it isn't. Your job is to land it.

Mary and Mick come down the street, arm in arm. On one side is your theatre. On the opposite side is your competitor. A block further on the lights of still a third theatre are blinking for trade.

Mary and Mick stand looking around them. Which theatre shall they patronize?

Right there is the psychological time when we contact film fundamentals. Four or five million Marys and Micks do the same thing every night in the year. They are the mainstay and ballast of your business.

What finally makes them choose your theatre, cross to your window, put that dollar bill in Mick's pocket down on your glass counter? Just what does this thing?

Lobbyology

Author Salesmanship

That's the viewpoint of the photo-dramatist who has written the accompanying article.

Without doubt it is an important one to the showman.

When a writer of film stories says plainly that at a last analysis he is only a salesman, it is worth every exhibitor's notice to learn by what principles he thus qualifies himself.

Mr. Pelley reveals himself here. Not only himself, but the showman, who, also, at the last analysis must be a good salesman if he would attain success.

The accompanying article is a sparkling broadside on a subject of serious import to showmen.

Is it the star? Let us see. Let us see from their intercourse there on the sidewalk as they are deciding which theatre to choose.

"Who's to the Plaza?" says Mary, glancing up at your competitor's sign. "Lillian Swanson? Well,.....not so good. I see her in an awful crummy show over there last week. They're fallin' down on plays for her sumpin' terribly."

"There's Tom Gibson down the street. Let's see him. I like that western stuff when it's good."

"What's he playin' in?"

"The sign says 'Billings County Law.'"

"Aw fish! Billings County Law don't mean nothin' in my young life—law's law everywhere. It's another cheap western. Here's a theatre right in front of us. Let's see what's playin' to that?"

So they approach your theatre and read the star's name on the lights: FELIX MEIGHAN. That passes. They like Meighan. Next comes that hoary query: What's he playin' in? That's where the title must register and register hot. Let's say it's "Marry Us Quick!" That's not a bad title—for Micky and Mary. More than once they've been thinking of getting married quick. But bear this in mind: Before Mick and Mary go into your lobby don't forget there's one more stage. They appear to be looking around for something—hunting, trying to get some vague information.

Do you know what it is?

I've made it part of my business to study these Micks and Marys.

They want to know the type of picture they're going to see—whether it's society drama, mystery yarn, sex story, western thriller or whatnot.

The star won't stand a chance, the title won't stand a chance, Mick and Mary won't enter your theatre unless having gotten them thus far, you go one step further and sell them on the atmosphere, characterization and type of your film play!

Right at that psychological time, when they stand there sold on star and title, is the "closing" salesmanship. Have you picked the type of picture that lends itself to cinching the urge that brings Mick up to your window and makes him put down his dollar on the glass?

Don't misunderstand me. I'm not going into a mass of generalization about western pictures, costume pictures, society dramas.

I'm talking about exploitation possibilities for outside sidewalk sales-work in the film that's flickering inside on your screen.

Nevermind what your film may be, in what class, remember there'll be just as many people like its type as those who don't. You can't please everyone all the time.

But I do maintain that you may lose even the people who would like the film if it doesn't have the exploitation features for outside display, that lend themselves to crashing sales argument, that jump out at Mick and Mary and cry: "Don't miss this one, on your life! You've been waiting to see this sort of thing for years!"

How many times, Mr. Exhibitor, have you thought of booking your pictures so that they give you maximum value in that psychological moment when Mick and Mary stand on the sidewalk? Because if your exploitation is weak or inadequate when your patrons saunter up to the door of your house, you're not going to get them inside. They're going to pass on to the house down the street.

I don't mean to say that nothing pulls your patrons in but lobby display. Newspaper and billboard advertising helps. But all that kind of publicity is the "opener" on your sales program to the fan. You've got to get to the "closing point" to gather in the real shekels.

And that's in the material the film gives

MONEY-MAKING IDEAS IN BURR PICTURE

Title Suggests Many Potent Tie-Ups

AN embarrassment of riches! That best describes the exploitation possibilities of C. C. Burr's "Three O'Clock in the Morning."

For one, the picture has title interest practically synonymous with a free advance advertising campaign. There are very few folks in this broad land who haven't heard the words, "Three O'Clock in the Morning" in one form or another.

Victrola records by the hundred-thousands have entertained in as many homes, folks who appreciate good waltz music. In dance halls, in the parlor, in fact in any place permitting the tripping of dainty toes to the rhythm of an irresistible refrain, "Three O'Clock in the Morning" has invariably been a bright spot on the program. The fact that the Leo Feist Music Publishing Company of New York, declares it is one of the most successful sellers they have ever produced, is fairly eloquent proof of how folks the country over might be expected to prick up their ears at the mere mention of the title.

So much for the possibilities of tying up with music stores, phonograph-record concerns, cabarets, vaudeville houses, dance halls and five-and-ten-cent-stores. The Feist people have, also, declared themselves ready to co-operate with exhibitors, they having a variety of show-card broadsides, strippers, and heralds which might be utilized to good effect by the showman.

Window Displays, Ballyhoo and Free Publicity

Constance Binney, who stars in this picture, is a theatrical light of no little glamour. She is also an accomplished dancer, and therein lies a publicity suggestion of potent possibilities. C. C. Burr's press book contains a signed article from Miss Binney describing her advent as a dancer; also various technical angles of dancing before a camera. Any discerning editor on the look-out for a feature story or Sunday supplement should welcome this signed article as a real find. Result—another strong agent in bringing the public's attention to the picture at the exhibitor's theatre.

Window tie-ups with jewelry stores should not be overlooked. A window card calling attention to the jeweler's time-piece and your picture would be properly in order. The ballyhoo angle has a decided kick to it. A sandwich man, whose double sign represents a clock, will be an effective street attraction. The ordinary square sandwich sign should be used, on which the dial of a clock is painted with the hands pointing at 3 A. M.

Last, but not least such names as Constance Binney, Edmond Breese, and Mary Carr will mean something to the person who sees them in poster or electric lights.—M. L. S.

IN the upper photo a quintet of the singing and dancing peaches appearing in some of the cabaret scenes. They come from the cast of "Wildflower," a Broadway musical comedy success, and a fact which is not lacking in publicity possibilities on that account. In the lower picture Clayton Webster (Richard Thorpe) has just joined his sweetheart Elizabeth Winthrop (Constance Binney) after an icy dive into the ocean.

THE cop on the pier from which Elizabeth Winthrop (Constance Binney) is trying to signal her sweetheart who is being carried out to sea on a South American steamer, is trying to prove her attempts as useless. But he doesn't reckon with a sweetheart to whom a mile of ocean water is as nothing, and who does prove that when his girl is the objective, a fish has nothing on him for making headway.

ENTERPRISING MANAGER GETS PUBLICITY

Invents Stunts of News Value and Gets Big Newspaper Space

BEING held down to a specific advertising budget, Manager Harry Browning of the New Haven Olympia Theatre found that very often it was impossible to buy, all the space he should like to use for advertising a coming attraction. So he started the old head gear working and finally evolved a plan whereby he got, absolutely free, such space in the New Haven Times-Leader as cannot be bought—namely, the news columns. Here's how he did it.

He arranged for a special Saturday morning performance of "Michael O'Halloran," a Hodgkinson feature, which was to be run in conjunction with the newspaper. That is, the paper printed a coupon each day which when presented at the theatre box office with five cents by a child not over fifteen, would entitle that child to admission. Regular price of admission is ten cents.

The paper devoted several columns to stories concerning the special performance making it seem that they were going fifty-fifty with the kids, on the price of the tickets. The profit for them lay in the increased circulation, while the theatre gained by the added publicity which was thus secured.

Another instance where Manager Browning used his head is evidenced in the scheme he employed to gain space for the showing of "The Fighting Blade." In the cast there appears Allyn King, a Follies girl, and a former New Haven resident. Mr. Browning saw immediately the possibilities in the news value of this situation so he went to the New Haven Times-Ledger with his story. He had guessed correctly. They just ate up the thing, gave him a fat half column in which was given a complete biography of Miss King

MUSIC SHEET TIE-UP

A piano solo by Francis Young, called "Beau Brummel," will be used as a musical tie-up by Warner Brothers, in connection with exploitation of their forthcoming March release, "Beau Brummel," starring John Barrymore.

Arrangements were recently effected through Carl Fischer, Inc., musical publishers. The number dedicated to John Barrymore, will be used as the musical theme for the screen presentation.

CURIOSITY AROUSED BY USE OF WANT ADS

Ads for 'Temporary Husband' Bring Many Applications

MILTON D. CRANDALL, head of the publicity department of Rowland and Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh, proved that the classified columns of newspapers are a mighty medium when the time is ripe, to exploit a picture. One day in the week previous to the showing of First National's "Her Temporary Husband," he had inserted in all of the newspapers of Pittsburgh a three-inch classified ad, calling attention to the fact that a young lady twenty-two years of age, desired a mate in matrimony. The heading of the ad was "A Temporary Husband" in bold type. The ad contained some humorous lines, such as "prefer a man who does not expect to live longer than a week."

And then the returns. The ad was inserted on Wednesday, the address given being "Burns and Burns, Liberty Theatre." Thursday morning at ten o'clock there were telegrams from towns so far distant as Akron, Ohio, special delivery letters from all parts of Pittsburgh and surrounding towns. It was almost found necessary at times to install a special telephone operator in the Liberty to take care of the innumerable calls from aspirants willing to be a temporary husband to young lady for a momentary consideration.

COOGAN CONTEST

"Long Live the King," Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, played the Hippodrome Theatre in Waco, Texas, recently and through the efforts of Manager Harrison of the Hippodrome and W. G. Bishop, Metro exploiter who handled the engagement, nearly all Waco thronged to see the picture.

Each school agreed to select a child who resembled Jackie as closely as possible and to submit him a contestant for a prize to be awarded by Waco's most prominent jurist, Judge Ritchey of the Supreme Court and Charles Braun, Manager of the Waco Chamber of Commerce, acting in behalf of the theatre that had announced prizes ranging from a first of $25 in gold and down the list so that each school would be sure of capturing some prize.

WORLD'S LARGEST THEATRICAL SIGN

Here is the largest theatrical electrical sign in the world, which Harold B. Franklin, head of the Famous Players-Lasky Theatre department, designed and had erected on the Putnam Building, on Broadway between 42nd and 43rd streets. Fifty men worked on it six weeks. It has forty-five miles of wiring, feeding 4,600 lamps which consume 235 watts of current. It dims and brightens every twenty seconds, a 150 h. p. motor being required to run the dimming apparatus. The sign weighs twelve tons and is 200 feet long. The depth of the main section is 18 feet and that of the wings 28 feet.

Apple Barrels Dress the Lobby

A novelty that will attract attention as a lobby decoration can cheaply and easily be provided if the exhibitor who is running THE MARRIAGE MARKET is keen on rolling up big returns on the C. B. C. film. This is how it is done. Go to a grocer or several grocers and get several apple barrels. On them paint in large red letters: "Highly cultivated peaches for sale. Look them over."

The barrels should be empty, but on the bottom should be another sign reading: "Blond or brunette peaches, tall or short peaches, plump or thin peaches, peaches in great variety guaranteed by Miss Whitcomb's Finishing School as fit for 'The Marriage Market.'" Place this around the lobby and probably you will find a good natured audience filing into the theatre at each performance.

Twenty-Four Sheet Used as Curtain

It was an F. B. O. exploiteer, "Buddy" Stuart, who carried on the successful campaign for the MAILMAN showing at the Fay Theatre in Providence, R. I. He undertook a great number of unusual stunts but the most outstanding of all was an arrangement whereby a twenty-four sheet was converted into a drop curtain lowered at each performance. The sheet was pasted on the back of a regular drop curtain and it went over big because of the originality of the idea.

Unusual Marquee for 'Black Oxen'

There is suggested for the exploitation of First National's BLACK OXEN a marquee decoration that has undoubted merit. It can easily be arranged by means of large black cut-out books covers with silhouette letters and border resembling an arch, with an orange cloth background and spot lights shining through from the back. Two large hearts, one with the head of Corinne Griffith, the other with the head of Conway Tearle, would help to brighten the display.

Arrange Special Boy Scout Matinee

A worthwhile suggestion for arousing the interest of your patronage in the showing of First National's BOY OF MINE is to arrange a special showing for Boy Scouts. This can take place at a special Saturday morning matinee all Scouts being the theatre's guests. This could be worked in as the culminating event of "Boy's Week." You will find that staging a special Boy's Week will give you a great deal of publicity and will call the picture into prominence through the local news stories which the papers are sure to run.

Afternoon Tea for Matinee Patrons

What might easily prove to be a sure-fire crowd collector is a stunt that is easily adaptable to the exploitation of THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH. The lobby of the theatre should be dressed to represent the deck of the Mayflower. Then possibly several club members could be enlisted to act as hostesses to the theatre patrons and pour tea in the lobby. They would be dressed as colonial dames and the effect would be quite perfect. The expense of the tea, crackers, etc., could be defrayed by entering a tie-up with some local grocer whereby he gets credit for supplying the provisions.

Distribute Bogus Theatre Tickets

People are always attracted by what appears to be a free ticket to the theatre, so you might try this on your community. Have a lot of theatre tickets printed resembling in style those used by legitimate theatres. In a contrasting color print across the face of the ticket: "Katherine MacDonald in

EXPLOITATION IDEAS

CHASTITY. See it, its back stage story of an actress." On the back can be printed: "Present this at the Strand Theatre and receive in exchange for it an orchestra seat for.....cents." In the blank space appears your own admission price. This scheme should aid you materially in putting over this First National attraction.

Dynamite Your Tom Mix Patrons

Get an ordinary keg and put dynamite signs on all sides of it. Place it in an ordinary open delivery wagon or truck. Get a very unimposing looking man from around the neighborhood to sit on the keg, his chin in his hands, the picture of dejection. Then hang a sign from the tail end of the wagon which reads: "If this thing should blow up you wouldn't get any more of thrill than you will from seeing Tom Mix in the Fox production, EYES OF THE FORREST." You will probably attract a great deal of attention.

'FRENCH DOLL' DISPLAY
A fashion shop window tie-up can easily be arranged by a display of gowns and cutouts of Mae Murray in her Metro picture.

Arrange Combination Merchant Ad

There is opportunity for a great combination merchant ad tie-up on the exploitation of Metro's latest Mae Murray production, FASHION ROW. Arrange for a double spread newspaper ad with the following caption straight across the top: "Advertisers who have created 'Fashion Row.'" Then divide the rest of the space into smaller boxes each box to carry the ad of some merchant who announces his contribution to "Fashion Row." In each ad should appear a picture of Mae Murray and a prominent place should be reserved for the announcement of the theatre at which the picture is showing and the play dates.

Gold Buddha for 'Dan McGrew'

A cabaret scene of unusual size and magnificence will be used in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," now in the course of production. The feature of the scene is a gold Buddha which stands thirty feet high.

Five hundred people will take part in the cabaret scene and several vaudeville acts will lend color. The dancing of Barbara La Mass will be one of the outstanding features.

Stars Ask Public's Opinion

Ten days in advance of the showing of THE VIRGINIAN at the Garden Theatre, Garden City, Kan., a thousand letters, written on Preferred Pictures' letterheads were mailed from New York City to the theatre's mailing list. The letter was supposed to be a personal note from Florence Vidor and Kenneth Harlan, the stars, asking the opinion of the recipient on their interpretation of the respective parts and asking them to communicate the opinions direct to them through the manager of the theatre. A post script on the letter announced the dates of showing of the picture at this particular theatre.

Have Apache Dance as Prologue

A fitting prologue and one which will arouse community interest in the showing of Metro's IN SEARCH OF A THRILL which stars Viola Dana, is an apache dance contest which is open to all amateurs who volunteer to participate. The winning couple are awarded prizes thereby the contest draws greater interest. Besides getting, in this way, a fitting filler for the program, you secure extra patronage because friends and families of the contestants will surely turn out in large numbers to witness the event.

Blows Fog Horn for 'Anna Christie'

A clever way of getting attention centered on your showing of ANNA CHRISTIE is to secure permission from the city authorities to mount a large searchlight and a fog horn on the top of your theatre building or some nearby high place. Play the searchlights over the crowds at night and blow the fog horn. You will find you will get almost immediate attention and you are at the same time suggesting the ship atmosphere which is such an integral part of the picture.

Cut-Out Contest

A Citizens' puzzle conducted by the "Ottawa Citizen" of Ontario, Canada, provided the exploitation ammunition for First National's CHILDREN OF DUST at the Imperial Theatre.

Pauline Garon played the lead and Pauline's face was cut into little bits of pieces, each piece being a part of one of the ads that made up the page. The "Citizen" readers were told that the total represented one of their favorite screen actresses and they were asked to identify her and tell the name of the picture and theatre at which she would appear. An extra award was promised readers who made the neatest arrangement of the completed cut-out puzzle.

Eight advertisers took space on the page, so Pauline's face was cut into eight parts. The "Citizen" thought so well of the idea that it took part of the advertising space itself.

Newsboy Contest

The newsboy contest which has been widely used to exploit Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture LONG LIVE THE KING all over the country was put over with good effect in Charleston, S. C., for the Princess Theatre recently. The campaign was executed by C. D. Haug, Metro exploitation representative in that section, who has done it many times and with unvarying great success.

Haug tied up with the News and Courier and the "Charleston News." These papers printed coupons daily with instructions for their readers to clip and either mail to the editorial offices or deposit in front of the Princess Theatre in a box for that purpose. The stunt interested thousands of people. The winning newsboy—the one the votes acclaimed as the most popular was given a Jackie Coogan suit of clothes while the four others in order of popularity were given a proportionate number of passes to see Jackie's picture.

THE LINK BETWEEN DIRECTORS OF PICTURES AND MUSIC

How Scenic Atmosphere is Translated by Thematic Cues

OFTIMES hidden treasures are discovered under our very door-step. In our hurried manner of straining every effort to outdo the other fellow with special stunts we almost too frequently overlook the simpler methods.

All of which pretty much describes the situation surrounding "music for the screen." And it is all summed up in the very simple but very thorough thematic cue sheet, which translates the film director's every mood, scene by scene, to the scale language of the musical director.

Thematic cue sheets are not exactly new. In fact, M. J. Mintz, who patented the method of linking the directors of pictures and the directors of music, has created thematics for so many big features that he has lost track of the count.

The most potent angle of the situation is the fact that last week the Cameo Music Publishing Company, of which Mr. Mintz is now president, was proudly able to announce that practically every feature producer and distributor of the industry had made their thematic cue sheets an institutional part of every press sheet sent out to the exhibitor.

And, what is probably even more important than that, a real musical cue sheet which is as easily understood by the showman as it is by the musician himself.

The thematic principle is based upon the fact that the average theatre's musical library is not elaborate and that the musical director needs a direct "tip-off" on every cue. Accordingly, it not only "times" the musical themes but sets down in actual reproduction a sufficient measure of each selection to thoroughly signify the proper atmosphere for every scene and sequence.

If the suggested selection is not available,

IN the large panel in the lower right you see one of Hugo Riesenfeld's famous "showmen" orchestras. At every performance of either the Rialto or the Rivoli you sense the "Riesenfeld" touch of atmosphere. That's Broadway! But the same proper musical atmosphere is not out of reach of the exhibitor at points north, east and south if the suggestions of the thematic cue sheets (shown in the other three panels) are properly followed. And the following of suggestions is easy because they are in the language of the showman.

the director at least knows the correct mood of what he may substitute. For the more conscientious musicians there is also the possibility of their obtaining all of the proper music in orchestrated form from one address.

A PRAISE WORTHY angle of the Cameo policy is that the concern does not and will not publish any music of their own. Whatever selections are made are laid out in thematic form without favor toward any certain publisher who might desire to stress certain melodies or popularize certain refrains.

The fact was undoubtedly a formidable one in bringing out a universal adoption of the thematic as the only logical cue sheet idea in the industry. That fact places the exhibitor in the safe-guarded position that he is getting the real musical atmosphere as suggested by the picture proper.

Many poor pictures have been saved by correctly following the proper musical suggestions. And, in turn, many excellent pictures have partially or wholly failed to efficiently satisfy because of improper accompaniment. To M. J. Mintz, therefore must go the credit for having brought the situation to an even balance and for providing the link between the directors in the field and the directors in the pit.

And now that he has accomplished that, we are wondering if he could not create and patent an idea for a thematic cue plan of some sort which would co-ordinate the work of author and director of the play proper. Scripts cued to the tune of the author's wishes by the man who knew how would certainly find a ready market.

M. J. MINTZ

HHEAD of the Cameo Music Publishing Company, who created what is known as the "thematic music cue sheet," which provided the missing link between directors in the field and directors in the pit. And what is more, commercialized it to the extent of having it universally adopted by the film industry. All of which is quite simple and not so strange when it is recalled that he is none other than Moe Mintz, exhibitor and showman himself.

Industry Honors Edison

—gave them a wonderful opportunity for education. That was one of the greatest inventions there ever was.

'A 100-Million-Candle Power'

"More than anything else that has been spoken of here today was that intense desire to help others, to help other men who follow him, one that could only be backed up by a hundred-million candle-power lamp like Mr. Edison."

Rupert Hughes spoke in satirical vein—so satirical that at first there was an evident nervousness on the part of some of his hearers.

"It's about time somebody spoke the truth," he began without the formality of addressing the chair or the audience. "I stand for the moral people of this country."

"I want to brand Edison as the arch-fiend of modern times. Reading the papers, we know that before the days of motion pictures homes were the places where people lived, where women never went wrong, where crime of every form was unknown."

"Then along came Thomas Edison and invented crime. If there had not been any motion pictures we should now be in the place where the world was twenty-five years ago."

"Edison invented the light—and made it possible for papa to stand at the head of the stairs and push a button and flood the old sofa or even the front porch with lights."

"Pictures should not be allowed to show people kissing. It puts ideas in people's heads."

New Moral Principles

"Mr. Edison has furnished increasing employment for a lot of ladies of both sexes, and nice middle-aged ladies with small town minds who used to sit at home at night singing 'Where is my wandering boy tonight?' are now in positions of power and get good salaries. If we can only succeed in passing this national bill we shall be enabled to throw a lot of gentlemen out of a low business."

"If any one is shot by a total stranger it stops all the pictures. Here we have one of the greatest moral principles ever devised. A gentleman puts two or three hundred thousand dollars into a motion picture. Six months afterward a mistake happens."

"A woman visits a friend who is visiting another friend and a chauffeur comes in and does something that bankrupts that producer's work."

"We find they will not even permit bootlegging to be referred to on the screen. We know there is no bootlegging in New York—because a picture showing it was banned."

"In Pennsylvania there has been no crime since motion pictures were invented. Men in that state who have worked night and day have found nothing wrong."

Mr. Hughes casually alluded to his own connection with the industry, saying he had tried to "bust up" a couple of moving picture companies, "doing good in my own little way." He pointed out what the motion picture lacked was a skipper.

"Literally, all the other arts would be nothing if we could not skip," he went on. "You pick up 'Paradise Lost' and you let the pages whirl. You select what you like."

"In church, as it has been well said, the Lord giveth his beloved sleep, and they stay asleep until the contribution box has passed by."

"There is nothing in the motion picture which allows you to skip the hokum. Hokum, as one of my friends has remarked, represents all the most beautiful things without which life would not be worth living."

"Of course, a good deal of skipping is done by just skipping past the motion picture theatre entirely. (Laughter), but we should have a way of diverting life so you can skip the parts of the picture that don't interest you."

"Now light travels 186,000 miles a second. That sounds like the cost sheet of one of our pictures. Sound travels 1100 feet a second. That sounds like the profit side. (Laughter)."

Mr. Hughes told of a plan on which he was working to harness the light from in front of the screen enabling him to do a lot of things. As he explained to the amusement of his hearers, "Of course, you haven't intelligence enough to understand because you are motion picture people."

"I don't know by what achievement the next speaker will be longest remembered," said Mr. Hays. "It was this man, now the chairman of the committee on banking and currency of the United States Senate, who managed the passage of the Federal reserve act and the farm loan act in the Senate. Nothing of late years has been of more service than the Federal reserve act. Senator Robert L. Owen of Oklahoma."

Surpasses the Imagination

"When I received an invitation to attend this luncheon I gladly laid aside other things," said the Senator, "in order that I might have the honor of paying my respects to Mr. Edison. When I think of him and think of what has been accomplished in his short life I feel as if I might without irreverence paraphrase the Scripture and perhaps without plagiarism to Father McGlynn say 'There was a man sent from God; and his name was Edison.'"

"The flood of inventions of enormous value which have been reflected in the world through his brilliant intelligence, through his untiring industry, surpass anything which the imagination of man can conceive."

"When the history of man was unfolded in the first lines of Genesis there was recorded that God said 'Let there be light. And there was light.'"

"And when the sun and the moon had hid themselves away this son of the Almighty, this prophet and seer, was the instrumentality through which all mankind enjoyed the benefit of everlasting light."

"Nothing more honorable could come from a man than the few words of his admonition in his short address to you where he appealed to you not to be guided by profit nor by desire for power, but to remember the great opportunity you have for service."

"The greatest Master of man, the greatest teacher of the secrets of the human soul, has said 'Let him who would be greatest among you be your servant.' Upon this foundation stand."

"There has not been in the history of mankind so useful a man, so great a public servant, as Thomas A. Edison."

"He has given us the age of the electric light. But he has not stopped at saying 'Let there be light.'"

He has said also 'Let there be music for all the world,' so that in the humblest of homes as well as in the palaces of kings the sweet and divine harmonies which men of artistic genius are able to create shall become the possession of all mankind."

"And he brought forth the graphophone."

Honoring America

"There is no means by which the increasing knowledge of mankind can be made more useful than through the telephone, which now ties all the world together and has been one of the chief instrumentalities by which the United States has become the leader of all mankind in industry and finance."

"There are those who challenge Mr. Edison's place in some of these inventions, but I think we may, as we say in the west, let it rest on a fifty-fifty basis."

"That reminds me of an incident where a man selling sausages was asked by the purchaser: 'What is this sausage?'"

"'Rabbit and horse,' was the reply. 'About fifty-fifty. One rabbit and one horse.'"

"So from his laboratory has come the moving picture industry with its astounding advances, an industry which speaks in every tongue. It speaks with equal facility to those who are English and to those who are Irish. I hope there are no Irish in New York."

"It speaks to the Chinese, that great sleeping Morgolian giant of four hundred million human beings now waking up through the moving picture. I rejoice to see that American enterprise is seeing to it that these pictures which are going to China shall carry a fair and upright view of America; that the pictures which contain vile thoughts or vile suggestions are being gradually minimized until the pictures going into that far distant arena are doing honor to America."

Screen Carries Every Beauty

"America is the leader of the world. It is the first in finance, it is the first in commerce, it is the first in quantity and quality production."

"America will not be content with that."

"America will be the leader of mankind in the moral and spiritual world, and of all the means by which the thoughts of America can be placed upon the conscience and intelligence"

Tried and Proved Pictures

Tried and Proved Directors and Authors

WHAT makes a picture worthwhile? A good story, well presented, intelligently acted. An author can create a story that has the sort of stuff the public likes and wants, is a good author. He earns the approval accorded him by the public.

A director who handles that story artistically, skillfully, and in a style that makes it interesting to the movie goer, is a great director.

For this reason the directors and authors of Tried and Proved pictures belong among the ranks of the great. They have created stories that have hit the bullseye squarely. They have given the exhibitor sure-fire productions, the kind that make money. They are Tried and Proved Directors and Authors.

Their products have been through the fire of public opinion and have come out unscorched. The fact that they are well directed, well written stories, outbalances the fact that they are not new. A large portion of the public would rather see a picture that has been Tried and Proved than take a chance on a new picture the director and author of which is unknown to them.

It is these Tried and Proved directors and authors who have elevated Tried and Proved Pictures to the high position they now hold—a position attained because they have shown exhibitors that they are real money makers:

OPPOSITION INCREASING 'BIRTH' PUBLICITY

'Way Down East' Substituted When 'Birth' Showing Is Stopped

MUCH heated discussion has ensued during the past two weeks over the showing of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" at the Auditorium in Chicago. The real battle is being waged between the police and the sponsors of the showing, the police maintaining that they are justified in their stand by the film state law which prohibits the showing of films which might instigate race riots.

On the other side, the sponsors are fighting the case on the bases of a permanent injunction issued in 1915 which restrains the police from interfering with the showing of the picture. Consequently every time the picture was started the police stopped it.

The first time the showing was halted by the police it was decided to replace the film by Griffith's "Way Down East," another Tried and Proved picture that has been showing continuously for several years. This showing was drawing very gratifying crowds when it was decided to try "The Birth" again. Again the police interfered.

The result of all this has been an overwhelming amount of publicity not only in the city of Chicago but in the country at large. Now while "The Birth" apparently needs no added publicity, this new spurt is doing much to revive an active interest in the film which in many cases was seen several years ago and for this reason is rather dim in the minds of many.

The present discussion has given the film an up-to-the-minute news aspect and there are a large number of audiences anxious to see the film again and get a more concrete idea of the phases to which the city of Chicago is taking exception.

GOOD BUSINESS ON OLD PARAMOUNT FILMS

Numerous Exhibitors Booking Tried and Proved Pictures

FROM reports received from a large number of exhibitors in various parts of the country, there is a very gratifying amount of business being done on Paramount Tried and Proved features. In some of the towns they are making their first appearance, while in others this showing marks a recurrence.

Recently "Back Home and Broke," starring Tom Meighan, played at the Cozy Theatre in Sauk Rapids, Mich., and according to the statement of the manager it did wonderfully well for the theatre. Not only was his report a statement of facts but he went so far as to write several lines of warm praise for the picture which he believes will draw a crowd at any time and any place.

In speaking of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," H. J. Longaker who showed the picture at his Howard Theatre in Alexander, Minn., he said it was the best Gloria Swanson picture that had been shown at the theatre to date. It has all the elements that please his audience and he predicts it will be successful with all exhibitors.

Very enthusiastic indeed is F. J. Armantrout of the Lyric Theatre, Lakefield, Minn., over the showing of "Grumpy." The picture is a seven reel feature in which Theodore Roberts is starred and in talking of it this manager says:

"In our opinion here is the right length picture for a special. It is good all through to the end, there is not a bit of padding, and it is interesting. We played this as our New Year's offering and though the weather was against us we did a very nice business."

INCREASE ADMISSION PRICE FOR 'FLIRT'

Crowds House at Every Showing of Universal Feature

WHEN J. P. Krebsback of the Krebsback Theatre, Adams, Minn., booked "The Flirt," he decided he could safely take a chance and raise the price of admission. He knew the previous record of the film, and he realized that since it was a Booth Tarkington picture he could risk increasing the price as the people would be willing to pay more to see a Tarkington story.

The box office returns proved that Krebsback was justified in taking the chance. The audience willingly paid the increased charge and afterwards took occasion to tell the manager how much they enjoyed the picture. Not only were they delighted with the story, but the performance of Eileen Percy as "The Flirt" seemed to cause no end of pleasure. Many times a burst of applause or a hearty peel of laughter greeted some touch that particularly delighted the audience.

Representatives of their respective professions meet for a little chat. John Boyer, Norwegian novelist, calls on Victor Seastrom, director of the Goldwyn production, "Name the Man."

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

Roland West, author and director of the Carlos production, "The Unknown Purple," has just signed a six-year contract with Truart Films for the production of two special features a year.

"The Abysmal Brute"

Cave Man Love Released by Universal

BRIEF: The love of a fine girl brings to a cave man prize fighter a realization of the finer things of life. He wins the love of the girl and to make the thing certain carries her off by force.

BOOKED 5,087 times to date, this picture has established a fine record wherever played. In many cases bookings had to be extended and every exhibitor who played it announced excellent business.

Among the circuits that booked this picture are: M. Hill (Atlanta) 13 theatres; Robb & Rowley (Dallas) 6 theatres; Loew's, in several of their houses; Peerless Booking Co., in several of their houses.

Other big bookings this picture received are as follows: Bijou Garden, Palm Beach, Fla.; Royal, Hot Springs, Ark.; Rialto, Providence, R. I.; Allen's Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.; Boston Theatre, Boston, Mass.; Empire Theatre, Portland, Me.; Alhambra, Utica, N. Y.; Rialto, Butte, Mont.; Orpheum, Rockford, Ill.; Strand, Dayton, O.; Mozart, Canton, O.; Reade's Hippodrome, Cleveland, O.; Apollo, Indianapolis, Ind.; Grauman's, Los Angeles, Calif.; Strand, Madison, Wis.; Olympia, New Haven, Conn.; Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rialto, Washington, D. C.

Reginald Denny takes the leading male role in the production and his name means something to the box office nowadays. The story is by Jack London and it has all the power and fascination that marked that writer's work.

Exploitation angles galore are offered to the live exhibitor who books this picture.

Arrange with your most popular sporting editor for this contest to be conducted by his newspaper for ten or twelve days; awards to be made for the best letters of not more than three hundred words answering the question: "What Is the Ideal Man?"

In announcing the contest, tell of the search that was made and the difficulty encountered in finding an actor who could answer to the description of London's idea of an ideal man as revealed in the character of Pat Glendon in "The Abysmal Brute." How, finally, Henley chose Reginald Denny because of his great athletic prowess, his cleanness and wholesomeness and because of his unquestioned ability as an actor.

Get the names of about 10 prominent local doctors in town and ask them to write for publication their estimate of the physical measurements for their "Type of Perfect Man." Of course this must be planted with them and they will co-operate with you for the publicity they will derive.

The local schools afford a tie-up with this picture. Nearly every school has its athletic end and its town champs. A theatre playing "The Abysmal Brute" could offer a prize to the boys participating in amateur boxing exhibitions. The professionalism of the thing can be gotten away from by offering the prize, which might be a cash prize, to the school which won the championship of the town, or, if it be a one school town, give the prize to the boy champ of the school, and suggest that he invest the money for equipment for the school gym. These bouts could be held on a certain evening and the manager tie-up with the picture by having banners announcing the occasion, put up around town. The local newspapers would be only too glad to sponsor this and play it up from the athletic angle. If your Legion Post is interested in boxing, get their co-operation.

The banners might read something like this:

"The Abysmal Brute Boxing Contest $25 to the Boxing Champion of the Town On (date). The Management of the Palace Theatre, etc."

A street parade of the boys who were contending for the championship would be another angle to play up this contest.

Tie-up with the local newspapers to offer a prize for the story judged best by a committee of leading citizens, athletes and sport writers, the subjects to be "Famous Fighters As I Remember Them" or "What Was the Best Fight You Know Of?" These stories would deal with the big fights of the past and present, and the old timers, while they might not care to write, could pass their knowledge on to the younger sporting set of the locality.

"The Love Flower"

South Sea Romance Released by United Artists

BRIEF: Stella Beyan in order to save her father from a prison sentence, which he does not deserve, maneuvers their escape to a little island in the South Seas. There she meets a young man whom she learns to love but before she finally marries him, she is called upon to take desperate chances and face death several times before she outwits her father's prosecutor and a peaceful mode of living is resumed.

FOLLOWING close on the heels of such notable success as "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World" and "Broken Blossoms," D. W. Griffith produced "The Love Flower," a stirring romance whose delicate subtlety and fine shadings have been aptly portrayed through the acting of Richard Barthelmess and Carol Dempster.

The story not only runs high with romantic situations and fine examples of the noble love of a courageous girl for her father, but abounds in real thrilling situations such as a struggle on the top of a high cliff, the rapid descent of the contestants into the swirling sea below and the brave rescue of the father by his daughter. Any audience that will not edge forward on its chairs and gasp at this point is not human.

The master touch of Mr. Griffith has imbued the scene with a realistic touch which is a silent witness to splendid direction. It is for this reason that the name of Griffith carries so much weight in influencing audiences to see a scheduled picture. It is logical, then, to play up the name of the director in every possible way. The lobby display should include stills of the director with biographical sketches and personal notes about his past successes.

In addition much stress should be laid on the two stars both of whom are very well liked and have personal followings. The South Sea atmosphere might be suggested by the use of artificial palm trees, painted scenes and the like, artistically laid out as a lobby display. In addition you might also add to the general good effect by securing a large quantity of sachet from the druggist. Put it into a rather large cushion which should be well covered with flowers. Place this cushion, or several if you can arrange for them, about the lobby in such a way that an electric fan can be placed inconspicuously behind each one. The air blowing through the cushions will blow the fragrance out into the air and will create a very pleasing effect that immediately emphasises the name of the production—"The Love Flower."

In addition to this type of exploitation the exhibitor should resort to dignified yet forceful advertising in the daily papers. The object of this is to reach that class of patrons which includes not the habitual movie goers but those who would be interested in a picture of this type and can only be reached through the newspapers.

You know you will make money on these pictures!

They have them—tried and proved real money-makers at box offices throughout the country

'Back Home and Broke'

Poverty and Wealth Released by Paramount

BRIEF: Tom Redding at his father's death is left without means of support and a few apparently worthless securities. The townfolks soon neglect him, only one girl sticking by him. The securities finally prove valuable and he returns to town a wealthy man. Instead of repaying his neighbors in the manner in which they treated him, he proves he is a real man by forgiving them all.

TOM MEIGHAN'S success with his most recent picture "Pied Piper Malone," is serving to further fortify the strong favor of this very popular screen star. It is aiding in making him daily more prominent in the film world with the result that there is a greater demand to see him on the screen.

Although released on December 25, 1922, there are still several thousands audiences who have not seen "Back Home and Broke," the delightful George Ade comedy which carries from the typical small town, to the enterprising oil city and back again to where it started, hauling along in its wake scenes of hilarious comedy, stirring drama, moving pathos.

It was these three elements of the story combined with the acting of Tom Meighan and Lila Lee that has been responsible for the warm reception of the film in small towns as well as in the large cities, and has kept the picture alive and popular for over a year.

Moreover it's the type of a picture that is easy to sell through exploitation. The name of Tom Meighan used repeatedly and wisely will do much to awaken interest. And there is the possibility of a bank tie-up in which the bank may make use of the title in urging the starting of savings accounts. Such slogans as this might be appropriate in connection with a special offer or some other such scheme. A still from the picture and with it a sign reading: "This young man would never have come 'Back Home and Broke' if he had shown judgment and started a savings account with us. Go to the..... Theatre tonight and see what might happen to anybody at any time. Then take precautions against its happening to you by starting a savings account with us."

Then there are any number of successful ballyhoos, an interesting one being to dress a young man in shabby clothes and let him parade the streets bearing a placard reading: "Back Home and Broke." He will be sure to attract attention, some wondering just what he is there for, while others estimate that he is crazy. The purpose will, however, be served since everyone who sees him and the sign will be almost sure to remember them and will immediately connect it with the name of the film when you announce its coming.

Another street bally may be arranged by securing the services of a band of musicians to ride in an automobile with a well dressed young man seated in the front. On the front of the car should be the sign: "Back Home and Broke" come to the..... Theatre and see how it happened." This, too, will attract attention and bring patrons to your house where they will see a picture that will entirely satisfy them and help make more friends for you.

'My Old Kentucky Home'

Racing Melodrama Distributed by Selznick

BRIEF: Richard Goodlee, a Kentucky boy, is railroaded to Sing Sing for a crime he never committed. En route home, after his release, he meets his old sweetheart. He hides his disgrace from both her and his mother but his rival, Arnold, uses his record as a club against him to keep him away from the girl. When Goodlee's horse wins the Derby, Arnold denounces him and tells of his prison sentence. It then develops that Arnold is really the guilty man for whom Dick has gone to jail.

WITH its smooth continuity, its fast action, its effective lighting and its numerous thrills "My Old Kentucky Home" has developed for itself an enviable record as a real box office attraction. And exhibitors reports bear this out. Most of the big first run houses in the big cities have played it with fine profit.

What makes it such an audience picture is the variety of elements which are combined in the story. Intermingled with hilarious comedy there is pathos, romance and sentiment while the thrills are supplied by the suspense sustaining horse race which is probably the real big highlight of the story. A fine track atmosphere has been created the race scene being vibrant in color, dash and dynamic action which seems capable of stirring the enthusiasm of the most blasé audience.

And in addition it is the sort of picture that lends itself readily to various means of exploitation. You can suggest the atmosphere of the picture immediately and at the same time attract a great deal of attention by getting two or three men who can ride well, dressing them like jockeys and having them ride rapidly through the streets. Each horse should wear a number to suggest the idea of a competition.

You might also arrange to hire a few men and dress them in striped suits to give them the appearance of convicts. Have them go through the city or town handing out handbills announcing the coming of the picture to the local theatre. There can be no doubt that they will attract attention.

"One Exciting Night"

The greatest mystery melodrama ever made, and the one absolutely different motion picture.

"A very fine picture and will please all your patrons, even the grouch," say Pfeiffer Bros., Kenyon, Ohio.

'One Exciting Night'

Comedy drama Released by United Artists

BRIEF: A young girl is being forced by her selfish mother to accept the attentions of a rather elderly man whom she abhors. She is making the best of it when there appears on the horizon, a young man who immediately falls in love with her and whose love she reciprocates. A murder committed in the young man's house throws suspicion on him and a great many thrills and much comedy are involved in straightening things out. Of course it all ends just as everyone would want it to—the boy gets his girl for life.

WHEN "One Exciting Night" was a stage production it was proclaimed an unquestioned success, a play with real merit. But when D. W. Griffith took the play and recast it on the screen he did even bigger things with it. Situations that could only be suggested on the stage could be worked out in full detail on the screen with the result that critics the country over declared Mr. Griffith's production a real masterpiece with every element of good entertainment—mystery, suspense, love, sacrifice, youth, beauty, rollicking comedy.

While the picture abounds in situations that are hair raising to the point of actual terror, it is still excruciatingly funny, the humor element being supplied by simple, wholesome comedy.

All these things have contributed toward the tremendous success of the film since its release on December 24, 1922. Movie patrons like to be thrilled and they like to laugh. Combine the two and there results the ideal entertainment. "One Exciting Night" has proved by its previous record that this is precisely the basis on which it lays its claim to fame—it is good entertainment.

Moreover, it has been endowed with a title that has all the punch necessary to get a picture over in a box office way. It excites the imagination, arouses the curiosity and immediately creates the urge to go enter the theatre.

It is for this reason that the wise exhibitor will make the name of the picture as prominent as possible. It can be used as a catch line in a great variety of ways which link up the product of the merchant with whom the exhibitor ties up, and the picture.

It can be used independently by the exhibitors in such instances as: Are you anxious for "One Exciting Night"? Do you long for "One Exciting Night." Have you ever had "One Exciting Night." These and many others may be used for a week or more preceding the showing and will probably get the whole neighborhood excited to know what it's all about.

But perhaps the best exploitation angle of all is to advertise wherever possible that the picture is a D. W. Griffith production. The time has now come when the name of Mr. Griffith on a production is a testimonial of its merit, for the movie goer. Preceding and succeeding productions have helped to establish this standing for the director and it is sufficient for the great majority of patrons to note that this picture was made by Mr. Griffith for them to see it.

For this reason his name should be made prominent in every campaign. It might also be wise to use pictures of the director in the lobby and in the ads since these help to sound the personal note and establish a more intimate feeling for the picture.

'White Tiger'

Crook Drama Released by Universal

BRIEF: A trio of crooks set out to rob a wealthy New Yorker. Two of them are sister and brother, though they do not know it. Nor do they know that the other man is he who betrayed their father to the police many years ago. They steal the jewels and flee followed by the man they have robbed. He loves the girl and wants them to give back the jewels and go straight. Finally a break occurs in the ranks and the girl promises to marry the millionaire who is to give her brother a fresh start. The villain, incidentally, dies at this point.

WHITE TIGER is a fairly new picture—released December 17, 1923—yet it has already proved by its record that it is of the box office variety. In short it has the elements that make a picture that the public likes and the fans are all for it. Because it gets the crowds wherever it is booked it is entitled to a place with the "Tried and Proved Pictures."

Does your audience like thrills? The story is boiling over with them. Does romance appeal to your fans? What could savor more of romance than the love of a millionaire for a girl crook and his winning of her in the woods of the North? How about action? A horse race couldn't travel much faster than the incidents in this story.

What's lacking you ask? Not a thing. It's a sure fire, hit-the-bull's-eye box office winner with a whole hat full of exploitation possibilities to help the exhibitor put it across.

One of these is the street bally that one exhibitor found especially good. Get a small truck and make it look like a police patrol. On the roof stand a large sign announcing the name of the production and the date of showing at the theatre. Dress the driver and another man in a policeman's outfit and rig the wagon up with a patrol bell.

Have it drive through a crowded street, stop at your house and have a woman attractively dressed hustled into it. Much fuss should be attached to this performance so that a great crowd gathers. You might arrange to have some people in the crowd hand out heralds announcing the name and date of the picture.

It would also add to the picturesqueness.

Exhibitors Trade Review,
Knickerbocker Building,

New York City.

Gentlemen:

The last few months have marked such a decided improvement in the Exhibitors Trade Review that I felt I wanted to write and tell you how valuable it has become to me.

I consider it not only one of the foremost trade publications in its appearance but in the material which it contains as well. It is with real pleasure that I anticipate the arrival of the Trade Review each week for to me it is the most readable trade paper in the field and contains suggestions which I find not only interesting but extremely helpful.

With best wishes for the continued success of your publication I am

Yours truly,

ARTHUR J. FLORMAN.

An exhibitor doesn't write letters like this unless he means it. He has other ways of spending his valuable time.

And when he classifies THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW as "the most readable trade paper in the field," he sounds the keynote of the goal toward which we are working. Each issue the publication arrives nearer perfection in usefulness and readability. Exhibitors and producers are writing to tell us so.

That is one of the reasons why with each letter the efforts are redoubled to make the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW just that much more valuable to the trade than the issue before.

Beyond Question*

LILLIAN GISH, who portrays the part of little wistful Anna Moore in D. W. Griffith's great masterpiece, "Way Down East." Little speculation is needed to come to a decision that the adorable Miss Gish is as to the part born. With sensitive faculties as finely wrought as transparent gold, Miss Gish has established herself in the hearts of film fans for all time by her extraordinary performance.

MISS GISH, as she appears in a fortune-favored moment of the story. Whether it be tatters or gilded raiment, this great artist conveys, first, last and all time, that which is sought most by others and comes easiest to her—Charm.

IN "Way Down East" D. W. Griffith has endowed the masterpiece with his characteristic touch. Result—a motion picture the story of which and the success of which are common knowledge to the folks of this broad land. Mr. Griffith has not made this picture merely a provincial thing. Attempting to explain nothing, he has welded a theory of eternal love and in so doing has had the characters reveal themselves so clearly, as to have made any obvious intent seem obtrusive. Thus has he brought forth an epic far more than clever. It has the ring of genius. A great cast of capable players, among whom we see such names as Richard Barthelmess, Lowell Sherman, Burr McIntosh, Creighton Hale and Emily Fitzroy, together with the tender moments, tragic episodes and the laughable situations which only great drama can contain, stamps "Way Down East" as something which will never lose its appeal for the American public. It is Tried and Proved in every sense of the term, and it is a wise exhibitor who will play this for a repeat or for the first time, if he hasn't shown it before.

Art Student to Director is La Cava's Record

AN alert but meditative air. The eyes of a dreamer, with the greying temples and firm lips of a doer.

That's the first impression one gets of Gregory La Cava, who directed C. C. Burr's "Restless Wives" and "The New School Teacher."

"The New School Teacher" is just about to be released. If one is to take as a basis of judgment the artistry, the smoothness of motion, and the effectiveness of dramatic appeal which Mr. La Cava injected in "Restless Wives," then "The New School Teacher" is slated to give movie goers some happy, entertaining moments.

But this is not so much the story of "The New School Teacher" as it is of Gregory La Cava himself. Mr. La Cava first became known in film circles as one of the pioneers of animated cartoon production. In this work he brought to bear a cultural background acquired for the most part while studying painting in this country and abroad. Economic necessity compelled the young painter to give up his study of art in its classic form, so he obtained an engagement as caricaturist with the New York World.

From producing comic strips on a daily, to caricaturing life's little ironies in animated form on the screen was a natural step for one whose artistic expression craved a broader and more constructive scope.

Gregory La Cava was a decided hit in this work. Soon after, he drifted into legitimate short subjects, where his ingenuity, his natural attitude and cleverness won him various successes.

In "Restless Wives" La Cava found his decisive niche as a director. One can only wish to see more pictures produced under his direction—pictures that essentially maintain a wholesomeness, a freshness of viewpoint, and a human-interest quality, which perhaps only a dreamer artist could conceive.

you for "dressing" your theatre—for reaching out and grabbing Mick and Mary by the arm and gently pulling them toward the box office when they're undecided whether you're showing something in which they're interested or not.

Speaking personally, I know that I try to shape screen dramas, with that psychological angle always in view. I'm thinking constantly of Mick and Mary, standing there hesitant on the sidewalk.

I know that human nature is interested in but four items: Love, money, crime and sport. Those four themes are universal.

I wish you, Mr. Exhibitor, would book your product the same way. With myself as dramatist, the film play starts. With you, the exhibitor, the film play ends—when you flash it at last on the screen.

DIRECTORS AND AUTHORS

Gregory La Cava, director of C. C. Burr's "Restless Wives," reveals such superb directorial technique because of his early training. First as a student of classic art and then as a pioneer of animated cartoon productions.

There are many processes, many individualities in between. But if I am remembering Mick and Mary on the sidewalk and shaping my product to give you maximum audience appeal before they have paid their money over your counter, you can cash in by booking the pictures which carry my hypothesis to a successful conclusion.

For after all, both of us are only salesmen.

We've got to "close" with Mick and Mary there on the sidewalk. We've got to be generous with our exploitation in that final moment; we've got to tell them what it's all about and tell it to them with a crash. We can't overdo it.

of mankind there is no industry which will be so important as the moving picture industry, because there is upon the screen every beauty of nature, every art, every science, every form of human knowledge.

"I take deep interest in the motion picture industry. I rejoice in its progress. I can tell you nothing of the motion picture industry. There is no occasion why I should.

"When I speak of Mr. Edison's accomplishments I feel indeed as if it were a vain attempt to gild refined gold and to paint the lily.

"I rejoice at having an opportunity of paying my respects to Mr. Edison. I honor him. I rejoice in the opportunity of laying a tribute at his feet.

"It means nothing to him that I really honor Mr. Edison, and I am sure I may say we have felt that he honors us in leaving his activities in order to come here to receive a measure of our appreciation of him." (Long continued applause.)

"You can understand how I felt bursting in on this group," said Mr. Fairbanks. "We have just got off the train and got away from the reporters. I feel very much as the Egyptian must have felt when the Red Sea engulfed him. If you don't know what I mean see the 'Ten Commandments.'" (Laughter.)

Mr. Fairbanks spoke for the west coast colony in paying their respects to Mr. Edison. He referred to the guest of honor as "the greatest figure" and to his great Americanism and wished him many happy returns of the day.

Miss Pickford was given another ovation when she arose. "I have been sitting here and watching dear Mr. Edison," she said, "and I have been thinking the great Creator must have felt very kindly disposed toward the mortals of this world when He sent this great man among us.

Live Up to American Ideals

"To have enjoyed this distinguished man's inventions, and not the least of these the camera, has been a real privilege. I have been stirred very much and moved deeply by the great speeches made today, by the Senator and the others, and by what Mr. Edison said to us, not to think of the profit, but to do all the good things we can and to send them to all corners of the earth; to see that what we do here shall make the screen live up to American ideals.

"It is a privilege to have lived in the same age with this great man, probably the greatest the world will see. I thank you for asking me, to have permitted me to be here today." (Applause.)

"We have come to the conclusion of the speaking," said Mr. Hays. "But don't forget that above all the motion picture is a service, and service is the supreme commitment of life."

The diners then faced toward the screen and saw "The Kiss," one of the first motion pictures, "featuring" John Rice and May Irwin; "The Great Train Robbery," made at the Edison studio in 1903 under the supervision of Edwin S. Porter—"supervision" is right, as he did about everything usually catalogued except carry the roles of the players; and the tenth reel of "Scaramouche."

At the speakers' table other than those already named were Raymond Benjamin, Frank Munsey, the publisher; Richard E. Enright, police commissioner; Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of The New York Times; Frank H. Hitchcock and Charles Edison.

Present were practically all the executives of the producing and distributing companies who were in the city as well as many representative exhibitors, including organization officials. Also at the tables were many men who had been intimately identified with the early days of the motion picture.

WHAT are believed to be the first sales of motion-pictures without the use of directly-spoken or printed words, are reported by the Selznick Distributing Corporation.

Under the supervision of L. F. Guimond, director of advertising and publicity, small records containing sales talks on the Selznick pictures "Woman to Woman" and "Roulette," were sent to exhibitors throughout the country. These records, made indestructible by a new patented process, were mounted on cards containing illustrations in colors, but no printed matter.

Before salesmen would follow up the campaign, a number of exhibitors took the initiative, after listening to the records, which gave casts and exploitation points, and booked the pictures.

The pioneer use of talking-machine records as advertising has attracted considerable attention, and the Selznick office has received numerous letters from showmen interested in their further use. Two leading circuits were numbered among the inquirers.

CAMPAIGN books are on the press on "Pagan Passions" by Grace Sanderson Michie, and "Flapper Wives," the Jane Murfin picture, both of which are being distributed by the Selznick Distributing Corporation. Each book is of twelve pages in two colors throughout, with a four page insert containing newspaper ads and scene cuts, printed on newspaper stock. Special attention is being paid to exploitation, more than a score of dignified, legitimate exploitation aids being shown.

A PROPOS of getting more strength and directness into a piece of copy, Charles Austin Bates once quoted this statement of St. Paul's: "For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?"

Paul is considered by many as the first sales manager of Christianity. Paul's letters have real value to the salesman who can see relationships and translate yesterday into terms of today.

The very sentence following the one quoted above offers an example. When we hear highfalutin' selling talks or read highfalutin-advertisements it always bobs up into our consciousness: "So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall be known what is spoken? For ye shall speak into the air."

GOLDWYN has an advertising aid for exhibitors on "Name the Man," that merits worthy consideration. The concern is issuing yellow strippers, about thirteen inches long and three and a half inches wide, with the word heated, printed on the one side, and the line, Official Taxi To "Name the Man" on the other side. Space is left for the imprint of the name of the theatre.

Austin Chemical Company has perfected a new type of lamp coloring that has stood all tests and is in many ways superior to the various other lamp coloring on the market. Keith, Moss and Loew's Theatres are availing themselves of the use of the Austin Chemical Service.

A distinctive feature of the new coloring is that it is positively waterproof and weatherproof. The process includes shades of various colors and descriptions, all of which are devised to add attractiveness and appeal to marquee lights, sign lights and house lights.

EXHIBITORS often write ads which have pulled for "no reason at all." Occasionally an ad which violates the fundamental rules of advertising will pull, but generally a successful ad adheres largely to certain definite laws and principles which produce action.

Decisions are reached by one of two methods—reasoning or suggestion—or a combination of both. Action is produced more frequently through suggestion than reasoning, because folks are more susceptible to suggestion than reasoning. It is on this account that even "reason why" copy, generally makes an appeal to the emotions.

THE Howard Theatre of Atlanta, launched a herald campaign which brought unusual attention to Paramount's "Humming Bird." The circular was designed on the model of a regular police department dodger, saying that $1,000 would be paid for the apprehension of a beautiful and dangerous woman. A description of the person shows her to be none other than Gloria Swanson, who is starring in the feature. The effect of this stunt was to provoke interest and comment of the paying kind.

FALSTON ABBOTT, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., grabbed editorial space in the local papers with a teaser letter stung used to exploit the Preferred Picture, "Maytime." The letter which is sold in quantity by Preferred exchanges as a regular accessory, is proving the most popular exploitation aid suggested in the "Maytime" pressbook.

An imitation diamond ring is enclosed in each letter which is written in a feminine hand. Mr. Abbott mailed these to all the married men on his list. The note read as follows:

Dearest:

I am returning your ring and we must never see each other again. My eyes are filled with tears and I am trying so hard to tell you why it is best we part forever—but I can't, the words won't come.

All I can say is that you will understand all if you will just see that wonderful picture, "Maytime."

It tells so well what is in my heart. The love story of Harrison Ford and Ethel Shannon and Clara Bow is just like my own.

It is a wonderful picture. See it and you will understand why, though my heart is breaking, I am still your Sweetheart.

IN Detroit, the Broadway-Strand Theatre launched a herald campaign with good effect. Enclosed in an envelope marked "Special Traffic Rules, Starting Sunday, January, 27, was a red-letter circular which opened up with the words, "Warning! Obey the Detroit Traffic Laws." It then goes on to say that during the showing of "Name the Man" the traffic in front of the theatre will be unusually heavy, and accidents would be avoided by parking in a free space secured for the purpose by the house, only during the engagement of the picture in question. The official appearance of the envelope, the general character of its make-up and the canny tie-up it suggests with the city's traffic department combine to make for an unusually effective advertisement.

AS the weather is always a lively topic and a subject of frequent debates and interesting tie-ups can be made by a theatre and a newspaper on a picture with good storm scenes in it, such as "Judgment of the Storm."

Let the paper place in the lobby of the theatre a table showing the high and low temperature and whether it was fair, cloudy, rain or snow on each day of the year. Have signs addressed to the public asking if they remember whether it rained on their birthday, wedding anniversary, etc. Also show on the table the date of the town's heaviest snow storm, greatest rain fall, highest and lowest temperatures.

This display will create a great deal of interest and talk and can be made with little effort and cost.

REPETITION is one of the best means of suggesting your attraction. It is only on the account of the value of repetition that is worth while to secure full page tie-ups, window displays, street stunts, teaser copy, etc. In repetition, either the suggestion must be repeated several times in the ad, or the ad must be repeated.

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION, through its exploitation department, has made another national exploitation tie-up for several of its leading women. This time it is with a chewing gum concern, the Frank H. Flee Corporation of Philadelphia, manufacturers of several brands of chewing gum which are now being pushed throughout the country.

The four Goldwyn players who are given publicity through the tieup are Claire Windsor, Mae Busch, Eleanor Boardman and Patsy Ruth Miller who has an important role in Victor Seastrom's first American made picture, "Name the Man!"

Pictures of these players have been reproduced on small cards, one of which is inserted in every package of Flee's Bobs or Fruit Hearts which is manufactured.

FOR something of a distinct novelty in press books is being got out by the Hodkinson Corporation for the Samuel Grand production, "Try and Get It," starring Bryant Washburn and Billy Dove.

In size and in all general appearances, this press book will be almost a facsimile of The Saturday Evening Post, in which the story was published.

The matter of selecting the proper instrument for this theatre was one of great concern to us and no time or money was spared in making our decision. That our judgment was correct in the selection of the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Organ is evidenced by the prolonged applause accorded our organist at every performance. We honestly believe something would be lacking in our theatre without this wonderful instrument.

HERE is the testimony of the world's greatest exhibitor of high-class motion pictures — Balaban & Katz — quoting their reasons for selecting the WURLITZER HOPE-JONES UNIT ORGAN for the correct musical interpretation of their feature photoplay presentations at the Tivoli. They realized that better music brings bigger attendance — and makes first-comers regular patrons. The WURLITZER UNIT ORGAN provides music in closest harmony with film pictures—soft and sweet in tone, or inspiring in fullness. A good organ is an investment which pays for itself in increased box office receipts in a short time. Before buying an Organ do yourself the justice to investigate the merits of the WURLITZER. It is so far superior to any other instrument of its kind, there can be no real basis for comparison. EVE

SHOWMEN—

How many opportunities have you missed in this business?
How many pictures at different times have you turned down—only to realize later that you made a great mistake?

"AFTER SIX DAYS"

FEATURING

MOSES AND THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

Is the greatest "clean-up" this business has ever known.
It has broken every exchange record in every territory sold.
It has created new box-office records in every theatre played.
It has caused more favorable comment by exchangemen, exhibitors and public than has ever been accorded a picture.
It can't miss. It is sure-fire.

EXCHANGEMEN—

This is the greatest opportunity you have ever had. What are you going to do about it? "After Six Days" put into a road show in your territory and capably handled will make a fortune for you. Its possibilities are unlimited and what is true this year will prove to be true every year. It will live forever. "It's a clean-up."

EXHIBITORS—

When the opportunity is presented for you to book this attraction, don't think twice—if you do it might prove another opportunity lost. Book it for twice and three times your regular run and after the first smash you will re-book it for an early return date. It's a "clean-up."

is with us once more and never has that good, old scout been so absorbingly entertaining, utterly original and completely comical as in this new and clever combination of ingenious cartoons and actual scenes. In this single reel series, which is being produced by the Bray Productions, Inc., and released at the rate of one a month by the Standard Cinema Corporation, the irrepressible Colonel Heeza Liar has experiences which would be beyond the wildest dreams of a less imaginative man and the beholders chuckle and thrill as they are unrolled before their intensely interested eyes.

Don't miss the popular Colonel Heeza Liar. His friends and supporters will swell your ticket sales.

JIMMY AUBREY

aptly describes this series of mirth-provoking, riotous comedies in two-reel lengths. Jimmy, the slapstick king, stumbles from one screamingly funny adventure into the next and the on-lookers shriek with laughter as they watch his antics. Each picture is brimming over with chuckles and gleeful snorts and Jimmy, the inimitable, rocks the house with his capers.

These comedies, which are being especially produced by the Jimmy Aubrey Productions, Inc., for the Standard Cinema Corporation, will be released one each month. Put in your order for the series now.

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STATION E. T. R. presents its special ADVERTISING AIDS program. A comprehensive course on selling motion pictures through the powerful appeal of printer's ink.

"The Subject of Advertising Aids could fill a volume," says Mel A.

Shauer of Famous Players-Lasky, and with the keen, incisive mind of a busy man considerate of the value of time and space, he boils down to a single pageful that which is of most obvious importance to the exhibitor. Read it on page five.

Charley Moyer, of United Artists, has compiled a distinctive array of newspaper ads—in a line-up that actually did heroic service for a showman in Paterson, N. J., the story of which will give other showman new targets to shoot at. The ads and the story are on page seven.

"What the Exhibitor wants and keeps on wanting" is the essence of the message that L. F. Guimond, of Selznick, puts across on page thirty-one. It tells of "The Trend in Advertising Aids," and tells it in a way for which Mr. Guimond is particularly noted.

STAND by for NEXT WEEK'S Special Program on THE SHORT SUBJECT.

E. W. Hammons, President of Educational, and L. J. Darmour, President of Standard Cinema, are slated to speak. In a chatty, personal way, these two important figures in the world of SHORT SUBJECTS will drive home some important truths on THE BIG LITTLE FEATURE.

And talking about BIG LITTLE FEATURE achievements, you're going to get one joyous eye-full from Pathe's "Around the World in Fifteen Minutes." No idle boast. It's on the griddle now. Sharpen up a good appetite for next week's BIG LITTLE FEATURE Number. You won't be disappointed.

WHEN it comes to nerve, the honors go to Baby Peggy. Even a full grown cow holds no terrors for her. As a matter of fact her closest friend in "Captain January" is this big brown and white cow who wakes her every morning by sticking his head in the window. Another close friend is the trained pelican who takes his mistress soaring through the air. Not really, though—just a dream.

Principal Pictures Stars Baby Peggy

A Photoplay With Real Selling Power

*H*AIR cutting is an easy art in the home town where Baby Peggy lives in "Captain January." All you have to do is put a bevel on the head and cut around. Even a child can do it. Poor little Peggy has been caught in a shipwreck and barely rescued by an old sea captain. That is she was rescued but her clothes weren't and for the time being she must make the best of what she has been able to get together in a hurry.

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

TRUART'S "Let's Go," featuring Richard Talmadge, savors of entertainment for which Tried and Proved attractions are noted. It contains everything that the film fans want — excitement, thrills, love interest.

Save Them From an Untimely Death— The Pictures of Yesterday!

OUR scientists have a theory that the ether wave set in motion in radio broadcasting never dies, that until eternity itself these releases might be picked up if only we had apparatus sufficiently sensitive.

So with a good idea. Whisper it only, and its echoes will be heard the world around. Apply it, and its benefits may endure until the end of time.

Everyone in the motion picture industry has known for years that its releases were permitted to die too soon. No one man may claim credit for that thought as his discovery. But what was everybody's business was no one's business. Let George find a remedy—and George did!

He found a way, a definite, concrete way of doing what everyone has always talked should be done. His TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES Department deals with and actually fights editorially every week for prolonging the lives of real box office attractions—the features which have been tried, and proved winners.

IT furnishes the producer and exhibitor with an attention-compelling, economical avenue for conserving and increasing his prosperity.

It puts money into the pockets of the exhibitor, for he is constantly reminded of pictures he can get at reasonable rentals, that make high class programmes, that won their way into the TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES Department on past performances of dollars and cents only, and he is offered both through the Department and direct by mail, real, adaptable money-making ideas for putting over past releases in a different or big way.

A youngster still, the TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES Department already is sensationally successful.

Scores of exhibitors are falling in line every week.

HOW producers and distributors feel is voiced by Carl Laemmle in a letter in which among other many things he says:

"In particular I want to commend your TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES Department. One of the most difficult problems in this industry to solve is the adequate advertising of pictures after the first runs have been played."

And truly the echoes of George's idea have been heard 'round the

Over all this time, the best loved romance in the world has been "The Little Minister". A novel written in the heart of millions. Now on love, on charm and on sparkling events are the ideal of the screen. And Betty Compson is the ideal of the screen. If you want an hour and a half of perfect entertainment.

A striking newspaper ad suggested by Paramount for "The Little Minister." A mat and electro service rendered to exhibitors makes it possible for the showman to run the ad in this precise form. The ad is a real business booster.

world." American editors have been reminded to rush into print to air anew their thoughts. English papers have commented freely and favorably, and far off Australia has added its approbation. Some of these contemporaneous views are very good.

One paper says: "It is a pathetic fact that under the present system a film becomes a dead issue in an exchange thirty days after the first run is set, because the present methods automatically concentrate the efforts of the sales crew on the films which are just coming up. The film that was released and given its first run but some weeks ago, becomes so much celluloid in a can."

Another writes: "What becomes of the pictures after the first run? And why isn't something done to give more definite and better paying circulation to all of them? 'The Hunchback' is good enough to run indefinitely. So are other pictures which just pass away and are forgotten. All of which is wrong. It's just like throwing pearls in the gutter."

THE Exhibitor of Sydney, Australia, reprints under the heading "If You're Playing the Pictures of Yesterday, 'American Trade Paper's New Service,'" an article entitled "The Treasure Chest of the Present" and comments thus:

"With this striking lead-off, THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW devotes quite a supplement to telling of the merits of pictures which are a little bit old to the big city first-release houses, but which are brand new to the smaller exhibitor who has not yet shown them. Chapters and special articles are devoted not only to specific pictures, and to splendid ways and means of putting them over, but to entire groups of pictures so packed with merit as to be infallible in the quest for capacity houses. Under this heading we find the article, "Tommy Meighan Never Had a Failure, a feature which is many months behind city release he must not let up on exploitation on that account.

If his press book is inadequate in supplying him with material, then there is always the exchange supplying the picture, with a publicity and exploitation staff only too ready to serve the exhibitor.

WE are happy to have this editorial support. And we take honest pride in pointing to this as at least one time when not one single journalistic voice was raised in derision. The anvil chorus just wasn't.

If this publication never has anything more to its credit than the starting of its TRIED AND PROVED Department, it can still claim to have measured up to its ideal of what a business journal should do: Chronicle the happenings of and improvements in its industry, and itself point the way of progress. We believe that this one department, this one idea, will do more toward increasing the profits of the exhibitor, producer, and distributor—than anything that has been done in years.

Certainly, TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES service is exclusive with THE EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

A sensible ad for "Foolish Wives." The many lucky exhibitors who cashed in on this Universal feature will declare loudly to the world that it is Tried and Proved in the "nth" degree.

Co-Operative Advertising Aids

THE subject of advertising aids could fill a volume. It is my purpose here to emphasize the added benefits of using them on a co-operative basis. The exhibitor is a motion picture merchant. There are other merchants around him who are just as eager to sell their goods to the public as the exhibitor is to sell his.

Merchants of a similar frame of mind can usually work out a plan whereby they can co-operate, each to help the other sell his goods, and each receiving additional benefits of the other fellow's efforts in his behalf.

If advertising aids are made with this thought in mind it remains only to work out the details locally.

Composition and coloring are important features in getting out a striking and attractive article, but the co-operative possibilities go even further.

The roto gravure section is a striking example. Good copy will have news value. The article itself finds its appeal in the home. The exhibitor is afforded plenty of blank space which enables him to tie up readily with his local merchants.

He can sell space for money, or for co-operation in distribution to his potential patrons.

The back page of the roto section as illustrated below has a few photographs at the top. These photographs are chosen particularly with the idea of interesting clothiers and wearing apparel shops, beauty parlors, hairdressers, household merchants, jewelers, furriers, automobile concerns, etc. Merchants can submit copy which will fit right in with these illustrations.

By MEL A. SHAUER

Manager Advertising Sales Department, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

Distribution to the public can be readily enhanced with the aid of the stores who advertise and who are eager to get their own advertising in the hands of prospective customers. They wrap them in bundles or hand them out over their counters.

THE theatre can distribute through the co-operation of the newspaper, or by messenger and mailing list. The roto section illustrates a three cornered tie-up between the exhibitor, the merchant and the newspaper—the biggest powers in the community.

Heralds with plenty of blank space on them afford similar opportunities to reach thousands of people at a nominal cost and to reach them through the drug store, candy store, the millinery shop, etc., as well as from the theatre direct.

The insert card (also illustrated below), placed in a dignified frame will stop the passer-by. The same is true of the 22x28 photograph.

So long as these articles are confined to use in the theatre lobby, they do not carry any element of co-operative advertising. But spread in prominent locations in the vicinity, they call attention to the theatre and the motion picture attraction by first calling attention to the merchant and his goods. This is by no means a new idea. Its value can be stimulated by a direct tie-up with the picture title whenever this is possible.

When a merchant uses one of these cards he is swapping advertising with the exhibitor. The extent of this swap is up to them. Many exhibitors do not like to hand out passes continually. Merchants often ask for advertisements on the theatre screen, to which most exhibitors object. There is a simpler way than all this. What about the blank space I have already mentioned which is provided on the heralds and roto sections? This blank space can sell hats, or face powder and motion pictures too.

Where people shop for their entertainment they shop for many other things. Advertising aids increase in value as they reach more people. Why not try, then, at the cost of little effort and little money when shared on a co-operative basis, to open up every possible channel for the distribution of these aids?

Advertising material should be made up with the appeal in mind. When the appeal is there, other effects may be added by color or by novelty such as die cuts, etc. But these things should be shaped toward the ultimate possibility of co-operative use.

FANFOTOS, autographed pictures of motion picture artists, have a distinct appeal. The idea of distributing these photographs to "movie fans" is not new. The best results, therefore, depend on the methods used in distributing them.

THIS gilt-edged advertising aid in a gilt frame is the latest in a class of its kind. The one showing Pola Negri in "Shadows of Paris" is a frame allowing for an insert card. They are good boosters.

AROTOGRAVURE magazine is one of the real up-to-the-minute advertising aids that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation offers its patrons in connection with "A Society Scandal." The back page is two-thirds blank, to allow for local advertising, which should more than pay for the price of the little magazine.

Old Lady Astor Says

YOU can't keep a good man down—or a good woman either. We have in mind two players who have just come into their own in the way of substantial recognition. One of these is Adolphe Menjou, one of whose hits was in "A Woman of Paris." Of course, it was no sudden accession of ability that blazed forth so brilliantly in that production. It was simply the opportunity presented by the character, the opportunity presented by the producer and the opportunity given to the actor to bring into play his splendid powers of characterization. And Menjou certainly made good, to the delight of uncounted millions of men—and women, too. There have been other appearances since that of the Chaplin picture, all of which demonstrated that what he did was no flash in the pan, but just an everyday sample of what he has got up his sleeve. Famous Players is to be congratulated on its acquisition, and the party of the second part, too.

THE woman to whom reference was made is Laura La Plante, who after four years of "trouping" at Universal City is to be starred by Big U. Come to think of it it was pretty nearly two years ago that this journal in its short subject department, after having commented on the work of this young woman in a serial, hinted that there seemed to be indicated the possession of real feature material. Miss La Plante was given a trial in "Excitement," which proved to be so effective that the company has mapped out a schedule of starring subjects for her. The young woman radiates wholesomeness. She is the absolute antithesis of stagey—she is just like some of the girls back home.

EDDIE CAREWE, finishing up his work on "A Son of the Sahara" at the Eclair studio in Paris, is expected to depart for New York soon after the first week in Paris. We've got a sneaking hunch that the producer is going to show us something worth while in that desert stuff. There are those who say that deserts are all alike—that what can be secured in Sahara is laying around loose in California or somewhere in the west. Maybe so. We'll have a chance to find out. We are banking on the Sahara being different, nevertheless. Certainly the architectural backgrounds, the towns, will be.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS will open "The Thief of Bagdad" at the Liberty Theatre in New York on Monday, March 17. He has installed offices in the Liberty Theatre Building. Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford, when not attending to details connected with the premieres of their productions, are getting ready for their European journey. The date for the opening of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" has not yet been set.

CHARLES CHAPLIN is to go to Alaska to get the real thing in snow scenes, according to word from the Chaplin studio. The story on which he is working is a burlesque of the mining camps of the early gold strike in Alaska, with the comedian back again in the character of the oldtime funmaker. Mingled with the laughs will be a leavening of the tragic, giving Chaplin an opportunity for the portrayal of pathos, which as those who have followed his career know he can do most effectively.

PHILIP V. KROHA, manager for Richard Walton Tully's production on the west coast, is in New York for consultation with his chief regarding "The Bird of Paradise." That's the bird which Mr. Tully plans to go to the Hawaiian Islands for, as we were saying last week.

LOYD HAMILTON is to be seen in another full-length comedy, "The Goof," to be produced by J. K. McDonald and to be directed by William Beaudine. With the comedian is young Ben Alexander. If the feature is as funny as "My Friend," in which this week we saw this comic chap at the Rialto here, it will get by with a whoop. There are several situations in this Educational comedy that are not only unusually funny but really are novel—and all the funnier on that account. Why is it as soon as a man gets established as a comedian of the first rank in the two-reelers some joy-killer shows up and induces him to join the feature ranks? And with the result that instead of seeing the man a dozen times a year we are lucky if he comes to the bat on four occasions in that period?

DIMITRI BUCHOWETZKI, directing Pola Negri in Paramount's "Men," is conducting a conservatory of languages out on the Lasky lot. This latest representative of the foreign invasion quite naturally finds inadequate the small amount of English he has been able to assimilate in the course of his short stay. So he converses with the star in his native Russian, which she understands; in French with the staff. The director also is the author of the story of Paris and Marseilles; in German with some of the others, and in English with the cameraman and staff. The director also is the author of the story he is putting on.

DR. RIESENFELD is extending his "classical jazz" program at the Rialto and Rivoli in a manner that not only is novel but highly effective. All the theatres named this week there is presented "Song Cartoons," an innovation which is the joint product of Charles K. Harris, the song writer, and Max Fleischer, the "Inkwell" creator. Imposed over the notes of, for instance, "Come take a trip in my airship," are the words of the song in railroad train information. As the words travel across the screen a cartooned figure skips from one to the next the orchestra meanwhile playing the music in classical jazz. Many laughs accompany the combination, the hilarity being heightened by the work of Drummer Max H. Manne. A comedy follows the novelty, the subject at the Rialto being Educational's "My Friend." Right in the spirit of the foregoing Emanuel Baer, assistant conductor at the Rivoli, has devised a classical jazz accompaniment, which rounds out a diversion that plainly pleased a large house.

JAMES ROSS GRAINGER, general manager of sales for Goldwyn, has started on another of his flying trips to exchanges and the west coast studio. It is Mr. Grainger's intention to call on exhibitors as well as branch managers. In Los Angeles he plans to remain two or three weeks.

BRUSSELS had its look-in on "The Covered Wagon" the night of February 15. Gathered for the Belgian premiere was what is described as one of the most distinguished and enthusiastic houses that ever greeted a motion picture in that country. Wires report the production playing to capacity, equaling the run in Paris at the Cinema Madeleine, where the subject now is in its third month.

HERMAN STARR, Warner's executive, who for the past six months has been studio manager at the West Coast studios, is back in New York for "keeps." Incidentally, he brought back with him a print of "Beau Brummel," which has been given the o. o. by the home office gang, all of whom have inscribed their o. k. on the John Barrymore picture.

Advertising Aids Prove Their Value

Consistent Plugging With Proper Material Will Win

WHAT consistent advertising, with proper advertising aids and mediums, will do, was demonstrated in Paterson, N. J., when the Lyceum, a legitimate theatre off the beaten path, decided to run pictures.

First it was necessary to educate the public to thinking of the Lyceum in terms of pictures. One month was devoted to this work with the result that the theatre was able to show features with 85 cents top price in competition with three other houses whose top prices ranged from 35 to 55 cents.

In view of this the advertising was started on Sunday, December 9, in the Chronicle (the only Sunday newspaper) announcing in a 40 inch advertisement that beginning New Year's Eve matinee, a season of big pictures would be run at this theatre. In this advertisement, the four pictures were named and a short story of each run in connection with each picture announcement.

There are three daily newspapers in the town, one morning (Call), two afternoon, (Press Guardian and News). To tie together the big Sunday ads that were run, there was run twice in each daily during the week, a six inch ad with a special border telling of the coming of the pictures. Monday and Thursday in the Morning Call; Tuesday and Friday in the Press Guardian; and Wednesday and Saturday in the News. Copy in each of these advertisements was changed daily.

The second Sunday of the campaign another 40 inch ad was taken in the Chronicle, which stressed the point that these four pictures, "Rosita," "One Exciting Night," "A Woman of Paris" and "The White Rose," were run on Broadway for indefinite runs at $2.20 and were coming to Paterson at popular prices. In this ad was run under each pictures announcement the criticisms from New York critics and also the fact that the seats were now on sale.

By CHARLES E. MOYER

The movie houses in Paterson run continuous performances. The Lyceum ran two shows each day, with all seats reserved.

For the beginning of the next week the six inch ads were continued. Nine days before the opening of the shows it was announced that "Rosita" would be the first attraction. This ad was 20 inches followed by four more 20 and 16 inch ads until Thursday before the opening when there was utilized the press book advertisements cuts in connection with the campaign.

The Sunday ad before the opening of "Rosita" was 70 inches the illustration and title taken from the press book ad but was aided by special copy.

The pre-opening campaign of advertising so set the minds of the people to thinking of the Lyceum Theatre in terms of motion pictures instead of stock and legitimate productions, that the following weeks was easier, and the ads were run in sizes of from eight to 40 inches instead of from 6 to 70 inches.

In all instances the Sunday big copy in the Chronicle was always run in the Morning Call which catered to the best clientele in the town while the afternoon papers on Mondays were given other copy, generally half the size of the Call and Chronicle.

No motion pictures had ever been advertised in Paterson more than two or three days in advance of a showing, prior to this engagement, but this campaign for the month of four big pictures at the Lyceum so speeded the managers of the three regular movie houses up that they took half page ads themselves a week in advance of the "Rosita" showing, telling the public how good they were going to be to them at no advance in prices.

This campaign certainly woke the town up and the movieites never had so many big pictures to digest in a single month before in their lives.

Everybody did wonderful business, hampered only by about 25 per cent of bad weather. Rain early in January and bitter cold the latter part.

Plugging with the proper aids cannot fail to bring about results. It has been demonstrated time and again and each time has come through with flying colors. It is essential that the right mediums be chosen and the copy prepared in a readable and entertaining manner. A little care will pay big dividends.

WONDERS
can be performed by the proper use of advertising. The selection of material is the prime factor. Press books offer a wide range and with the use of cuts and consistent plugging the public can be educated. The layout here shows some excellent forms of patronage builders. That can be used by every exhibitor.

An Advertisement from  Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The purpose of this nation-wide cooperative organization of theatre-owners is to foster independent production, develop new talent and elevate the standards and art of the screen.

"Lilies of the Field"

A GAIN Comme Grainh and again Conway Tearle—this time in a rich drama of society, "Lilies of the Field." Pictures like this come only too rarely, for seldom does the screen catch the atmosphere of those dizzy heights of a world.

Beginning, March 17th this dramatic picture—the story of a devoted wife, a sort of "Julie" "Lilies" pretty hot-house flowers of society, and a man, cynical of the morality of Acquainted with the Mob—will attract itself in a way of the most successful features in the "showing" entertainment. It looks like a success, and so it will, from the very nature of the story and theme of a film picture.

Who or what could fill the void when her baby was taken from her? Was there anything big enough or strong enough to hold her? Problems such as these make this fascinating story ideal screen entertainment.

A strange contrast here—the young mother whose heart is held fast in the tiny hands of her baby, cast in the midst of the gay "lilacs," richly gowned and jewel bedecked. Drama, threatening and swirling like a storm cloud, hovers over this luxurious dinner party—a scene from "Lilies of the Field."

"Sundown" Grows Bigger

BEN ALEXANDER, 104 years old, has earned an important place in the cast of "Summertime" as the passing of the old West. The big cast of favorites now includes Gus Stewart, Bevie Love, Robert Rosworth, Fife Marshall, Hal Wilson, Charles B. Crockett and Ben Alexander.

"Summertime" will be proof that the history of the present holds as much romance as the story of pioneer days.

"The Perfect Flapper"

On HEN MOORE'S next picture, Flaming Youth, we had so many people ask us, "Will you show 'Flaming Youth' and 'Painted People' and waited more of them, Colleen. The news is out at last. It is to be 'The Perfect Blunder'." And who would better fit in such a picture than pretty, gracious Colleen?

It looks like a duplication of the success of "Flaming Youth," for plans call for Milton Sills to appear again in Miss Moore's leading man.

The Great Screen Jury

The highest paid jury that ever sat in judgment of a case will appear in "The Woman on the Jury," a ten-drama which will appear on-air.

The jury box will be filled with eleven good men and true and one woman, even truer. Sylvia Browner will be "she," the central figure in the whirl of drama and froak. Maybelle, others in the cast will be Lea Cook, Bessie Lane, Hubert Browarti, Mary Carr and Fred Schling.

"Flowing Gold" in Flannery

FILMING a burning oil well is a lot different if only conscientious cameramen don't come to put out the blaze. This is what happened to Richard Walton Trafts when he was photographing "Flying Gold" and it took half a dozen permits to argue the fire fighters out of the picture. But the result remains, including the daring scene.

Count on Rex Beach any time for thrills and adventure. He has long written better than Hollywood could.

Movies in the Sahara

And now the eye of the camera's lens appears in the Sahara. This is no Hollywood camel; nor is it Arizona sand. Edwin Carewe sends us the picture from Algeria, where he is filming "A Son of the Sahara," and fortunately wrote us the name of the soldierly cavalier who does his romancing in the shade of the camel's back. It is Bert I. Well, bewinkered and uniformed almost beyond recognition.

The Carewe company will return any day, and with the completed picture, "A Son of the Sahara" will soon be at your theatre.

"Torment"

Torment indeed when a world of brick and mortar tumbles about you and death stalks near. Characters change in such an hour; forgotten days and dreams return; avarice and ambition become silly futilities.

Bessie Love and Owen Moore have the leading roles in this new Torment picture.

Boston Named for M.P.T.O. Convention

Plan to Make Sessions Most Beneficial Ever Held

THE Committee on Convention comprising M. E. Comerford of Scranton, Pa.; Glenn Harper of Los Angeles; Fred Seegert of Milwaukee; John Schwalm, of Hamilton, Ohio; R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; Joseph W. Walsh, of Hartford, and Sydney S. Cohen of New York, designated at the last meeting of the National Board of Directors, has selected Boston as the city for the 1924 annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to be held the latter part of May.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Massachusetts a resolution was unanimously adopted inviting the National Organization to hold the meeting in Boston, and this was supplemented by similar action on the part of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

It is expected a large number of delegates from all over the United States will be at the Boston Convention and that that aggregation will be increased by the attendance of many exhibitors from the Canadian division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Plans are being laid to make the coming convention the most beneficial yet held, to the industry generally and to the Theatre Owners in particular.

The definite time of the convention together with the special convention committee, convention hotel and further details will be announced at a later date.

MISSOURI THEATRE MEN RAISE FUND

Committee Named to Supervise Plans for May Convention

A FUND for initial expenses and the preliminary organization of the M. P. T. O. Western Missouri, was raised at a special meeting Thursday at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, of representative exhibitors of

Her first picture under her new Graf contract will be "The Wise Son" for Metro. She has just completed her portrayal of Mary Queen of Scots with Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Western Missouri. The fund was not in subscriptions—it was in cash or checks.

A committee, composed of A. M. Eisner, A. F. Baker and Jay Means, all of Kansas City, was appointed to supervise arrangements for a convention, to be held in Kansas City early in May. Mr. Baker was named as acting secretary-treasurer. Final incorporation and election of officers will be at the convention.

Eight exhibitors, representing fourteen theatres, volunteered as delegates to visit or communicate with all exhibitors in Western Missouri, in an effort to obtain a record at the convention.

The exhibitors are A. F. Baker, Springfield, Joplin and St. Joseph; Thomas Clark, Maryville; Hugh Gardner, Neosho; F. G. Weary, Richmond; G. R. Wilson, Liberty; S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield; C. T. Sears, Nevada, Brookfield, Marshall and Booneville; Jay Means, Kansas City, and A. M. Eisner, Kansas City.

At the convention in May the selection of a business manager, which has been delayed, will be made and headquarters established, probably in a suite now occupied by the Kansas City Division of the M. P. T. O. A. at Eighteenth and Wyandotte Streets, Kansas City. The proposed consolidation of the Kansas City and Western Missouri bodies also will be decided definitely.

KANSAS EXHIBITORS APPOINT CONVENTION COMMITTEE

The M. P. T. O. Kansas has adopted a new plan to increase attendance at its semi-annual convention in Emporia, April 1 and 2. A committee of nine exhibitors, geographically selected, has been appointed to write personal letters to exhibitors in their territory, urging them to attend the convention.

This procedure will be in addition to the usual form letters sent out from M. P. T. O. K. headquarters and stickers posted on film boxes. The attendance goal for the convention this year is 200, according to C. E. Cook, business manager of the organization.

The road showing of feature pictures, which the trend of sentiment among Kansas exhibitors is against, and the showing of film in schools and churches in opposition to theatres and legislative recommendations will be the principal issues at the convention, in addition to an annual election of officers

THEATRE OWNERS OF OHIO TO CONVENE MARCH 6

The third annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio will be held on Thursday and Friday, March 6 and 7, 1924, in the Hotel Chittenden, Columbus, Ohio.

The convention will convene early Thursday, with further business sessions on Friday.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; other national officers, and exhibitor leaders from all over the country will deliver messages of importance.

A definitely constructive program is being prepared. The sessions will be devoted exclusively to exhibitor problems and to the making of such plans and arrangements as seem best suited to care for them.

A banquet will be given Thursday evening at which men and women of state and national prominence will make addresses.

RUTH ROLAND PLANS TO MAKE FEATURES

With Tod Browning She Launches Production Organization

RUTH ROLAND, motion picture star, and Tod Browning, prominent director, have launched a new organization for the production of feature length photoplays in which the popular actress will be starred.

The organization surrounding Miss Roland and Mr. Browning will be known as the Co-Artists Productions. Active preparations are already under way for the filming of the first picture, tentatively titled "Extravagance." It will be made under the direction of Browning at the F. B. O. Studios. While nothing of a definite nature is known about the cast, it is the purpose of the organization to secure only acknowledged artists for Miss Roland's initial venture into the feature field.

The production of "Extravagance" will mark the first feature length attraction in which Miss Roland has appeared for six years. The formation of the new organization is the culmination of Miss Roland's ambition to break into the feature field anew. The organization has therefore made it a point to surround her with a capable and efficient production personnel. For the past few years Miss Roland has been appearing in serials in which she has starred.

The first Ruth Roland feature is described as a warmly human, romantic comedy drama, the continuity of which is being written by Fred Stowers. Tod Browning, one of the earliest of film directors who has a long list of screen successes to his credit, recently completed the direction of "White Tiger" and "The Day of Faith."

BLANCHE SWEET

She is now completing her work in "Those Who Dance" and will soon play the title role in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" under the direction of her husband, Marshal Neilan, for Goldwyn Pictures.

AL CHRISTIE COMPLETES CAST FOR FEATURE

Dorothy Devore, Walter Hiers and Tully Marshall Signed

THAT Al Christie is lining up a galaxy of stellar lights for his forthcoming feature on the Hodkinson program is indicated by the announcement that Tully Marshall has been added to the cast headed by Dorothy Devore and Walter Hiers.

Jimmie Adams, featured Christie comedian, has been assigned a difficult comedy role; while Jimmie Harrison, the capable young juvenile who has appeared with Constance Talmadge and in numerous Christie Comedies, will also play a prominent part.

Priscilla Bonner, who has appeared in many dramatic productions, has been chosen to play the second feminine lead, and Rosa Gore, former favorite on the legitimate stage, has been selected to portray a leading feminine characterization.

Patricia Palmer, whose latest work at the Christie studio was with Bobby Vernon in "A Perfect 36" has returned to play an important part in the new feature.

Jay Belasco, Lincoln Plumer, George Pearce, Victor Rodman, and Earl Rodney, who have all appeared in Christie Comedies, have been signed to play parts in the feature.

Tully Marshall's popularity has been responsible for a continual demand for his services from nearly every producer in the motion picture field and his delineation of comedy roles has stamped him as being one of the most versatile actors who has ever appeared on the screen.

With the signing of Tully Marshall the Christie Feature will go into immediate production. Scott Sidney, with Jimmie Clemens as his assistant, will assume the directorial responsibilities of the new Christie product, which will be released through Hodkinson.

NIGHSMITH WILL PRODUCE FULL LENGTH FEATURE

Following the completion of "Her Memory" and "The Guest," the second and third of Nigh's Miniatures, the one reel dramas being distributed by Pathe, the announcement is made by Nighsmith Pictures, Inc., that work will begin upon a full length drama of six reels entitled "The Tumble Weed," an original story by William Nigh. The story, which is laid in the middle West, is of the rugged, melodramatic type. It will have a cast in which Lucille LaVerne, who gave such a thrilling portrayal of the old French mother in "Among the Missing," and star of "Sun-Up," will have the principal part. Will Nigh, who will direct the picture, also will have the part of the son who goes through fire to regeneration.

"The Tumble Weed" contains the heart interest and human qualities of other Nigh stories. This drama is the first of a series to be produced in conjunction with the Nigh Miniatures.

'WHY GET MARRIED' WILL BE RELEASED MARCH 9

Andree Lafayette is the star in "Why Get Married," which Associated Exhibitors has set for release March 9. This photoplay poses the questions, generations-old: "Can a girl be a success as a wife and a business woman at the same time"—and answers it.

The two principal women characters, impersonated by Mlle. Lafayette and Helen Ferguson, are friends who marry at almost the same time. One yearns for home life. The other prefers a business career—and independence. The picture shows them both, with their husbands, during the first year of wedded life.

This feature is not a highbrow picture, according to all reports, but is chockful of entertainment and box office appeal. One of the high lights is a thrilling fight between one of the husbands and a troublemaker who tries to cause an estrangement in each of the two families.

Besides Helen Ferguson, the cast supporting Andree Lafayette includes such popular players as Jack Perrin, William H. Turner, Orpha Alba, Bernard Randall, Edward B. Tilton and Max Constant. William M. Conselman wrote the story and Paul Cazeneuve directed the production.

PRISCILLA DEAN TO RELEASE THROUGH HODKINSON

Contracts have been signed by Hodkinson for a series of elaborate Priscilla Dean pictures through Charles R. Rogers, president of Priscilla Dean Productions, Inc., and Raymond W. Pawley, treasurer of the Hodkinson Corporation.

The pictures will be produced in Los Angeles under the supervision of Hunt Stromberg, and negotiations have been started for two well-known Broadway stage successes and for a popular recently published novel.

The pictures will all be elaborate society dramas pointed for the finest first run theatres. They will be built with unusual exploitation in mind and a special budget has been provided to herald them in an unusual manner in behalf of the exhibitors.

Actual production work on first production will start by April first.

'TWENTY-ONE' MAKES GOOD

The box office value of John S. Robertson's production of "Twenty-One," starring Richard Barthelmess was put to the test at the Rialto Theatre, New York, during the week of February 17. "Twenty-One" met the test successfully. The week's receipts were $26,285, the largest in many months despite the fact that business was off on two days in the week caused by snow, rain and slush.

AUSTRALASIA TO STAGE PARAMOUNT DRIVE

One Month to Be Devoted to Showing of Paramount Features

THE greatest motion picture drive in the history of Australia will be launched officially on Saturday, March 1, by the Paramount organization in Australasia under the name of Paramount's first Greater Movie Season. Scores of theatres throughout Australia and New Zealand have co-operated with Managing Director John W. Hicks, Jr., of Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., to make the drive a complete success by booking Paramount pictures solidly for the month.

All previous box office records are expected to be completely eclipsed during the month of March as the result of the largest exploitation and advertising campaign ever conducted within the picture industry in the antipodes. Perhaps the biggest surprise of the campaign was the issuance of a proclamation by the acting premier of Australia, Dr. Page, calling upon all Australian citizens to support the movement launched by the Paramount organization. This is the first time in the history of the screen that any government official has given such unqualified support to a campaign launched by any one organization.

BABY PEGGY HAS BIG ROLE IN 'THE LAW FORBIDS'

Universal is preparing to launch "The Law Forbids," a Universal Jewel production. Baby Peggy plays an important role. It is the second feature which Universal, in connection with the Stern Brothers, has made with Baby Peggy, the first being "The Darling of New York," now playing successfully throughout the country.

"The Law Forbids" is a modern divorce problem picture with a child as the central figure. It was written by Bernard McConville, scenario expert and head of Universal's Jewel scenario department. Lois Zellner and Ford I. Beebe put it into screen form. It was directed by Jesse Robbins.

Robert Ellis has the leading male role. Elinor Faire plays the wife, and Baby Peggy the child. Winifred Bryson has a strong part as "the other woman."

BARBARA LA MARR

She is now busily engaged in making "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" from Robert Service's poem. She has the role of "the lady that's known as Lou."

Screen Nothing to Fear from Radio, Says Schulberg Producer Points Out How New-Comer Helps

WHAT effect, if any, is radio having on moving pictures? Is the new invention recruiting fans at the expense of the silent drama? According to B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures who is in New York temporarily from the coast, moving pictures have nothing to fear from the advent of this new form of amusement.

"It is ridiculous to suppose that a medium so totally different in its appeal would make any inroads whatever on the attendance at film theatres," says Mr. Schulberg. "It would never occur to anyone to say that the phonograph—which like the radio makes its appeal entirely to the ear—would ever prove a rival to the opera which carries also the appeal of the spectacle.

"Likewise, tennis has never been considered a detriment to the baseball season for the simple reason that they are two entirely different types of diversion.

"This argument about radio affecting motion pictures recalls to my mind a simithe two years during which radio has become popularized attendance at motion picture theatres has been on the upward grade and is greater today than ever.

"In many ways radio is helping the film industry. In New York City, Marcus Loew, one of the best known motion picture executives, controls Station WHN, through which his chain of New York houses becomes known to thousands, S. L. Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, broadcasting the programs from that house, has brought increased patronage to it.

"From the stations in Los Angeles the screen stars speak to thousands, and from scores of other points photoplay reviews and news are sent out on the air, gaining new friends for the motion pictures."

PATHE NEWS SCORES SCOOP IN LENINE FUNERAL FILM

Pathe News scored another scoop last week in being the first news reel to bring views of the funeral for the late Russian dictator Lenin to theatres all over the country. The pictures were given their initial presentation at Broadway houses on Sunday, February 10, appearing on the programs of the Rialto, the New York, Keith's Palace, Moss's Broadway, and the Cameo. The Pathe News scenes of the Lenin obsequies were also shown this week at the Brooklyn Mark Strand.

John Dored, Pathe News cameraman who filmed the views, is at present in a Moscow prison being held by the Soviet authorities for his violation of their prohibition against the use of cameras during the funeral. Pathe has cabled the Russian Foreign Ministry with a view to secure Dored's release, and has also appealed to the good offices of the Russian envoy in England and the unofficial Russian envoy at Washington for the same purpose. Representations have also been addressed to the United States representative in Latvia looking to the cameraman's release.

Irving Cummings will start production at Universal City in a few days of Gerald Beaumont's famous Tia Juana race track story, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." Creighton Hale, Ethel Shannon and George Cooper will head an all-star cast of players in the film play.

The story, originally published in the Red Book Magazine, will be filmed as a feature production and released in five or six reel length. Hale will play the role of a race track "tout," the male lead in the picture, and Cooper will play the part of his aid-de-camp, also a follower of the ponies and a tipster in the battling arena. These made them in his series of race track stories.

Miss Shannon, heroine of "Maytime" and one of the screen's best known leading women, has the feminine lead, that of a Tia Juana dance hall girl. Other members of the cast will be selected in the next few days.

ADE TO WRITE MEIGHAN TITLES

Arrangements have been made with George Ade to write the titles for Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "The Confidence Man," a story by L. Y. Erskine and Robert H. Davis. VITAGRAPH ENCOURAGES TEAM WORK

Seeks Closer Co-operation Between Sales and Production

CLOSER co-operation between the sales force and the production department of Vitagraph is the objective upon which President Albert E. Smith and John B. Rock, general manager, are centering their efforts since the elevation of Mr. Rock to his new office. Suggestions from the sales organization concerning plays and stories for pictures are to be considered in the selection of material for new productions by Vitagraph.

To stimulate the offering of likely stories and plays Mr. Rock has offered a prize of $100 to any employee of Vitagraph who submits the name of a play, story or novel that is accepted by President Smith for production.

Vitagraph now has in production on the West Coast "Borrowed Husbands," a picturization of Mildred K. Barbour's novel, under the direction of David Smith; "Between Friends," from Robert W. Chambers' novel, which J. Stuart Blackton is producing, and is now preparing to produce "Captain Blood," by Rafael Sabatini, which will be made in the late spring, and "The Clean Heart," by A. S. Hutchinson.

lar discussion that came up when it first became plain that films were here to stay. The cry then was that they would hurt the stage attractions, but today there are neither enough picture houses nor enough legitimate theatres on Broadway.

"The introduction of a new diversion does not endanger other amusements in the least. The pleasure seeker finds time for them all. The average film fan goes to moving pictures two or three nights a week. If he is also a radio enthusiast there's ample time left for the new hobby.

"But if none of these arguments stood, the fact would still remain that motion pictures will continue with the same degree of prosperity, because they make a far greater play on the imagination than the radio. The charm of the story-teller's art is as old as history and the screen offers a medium for it that has fewer limitations than any other.

"And where all other proof fails, statistics will answer the whole question. In

LOWELL PRODUCTIONS PREPARE FOR NEW FEATURE

Word is received from the offices of Lowell Film Productions, Inc., that L. Case Russell, author of "Floodgates," the picture they are now distributing, is hard at work on the continuity of the next production, the working title of which is "Open Places." This is from an original story by Mrs. Russell which appeared in People's Magazine recently. Mr. Lowell states that production on this picture will start in the Spring and that it will be ready for early fall release.

Lowell Productions announce that the advertising material on "Floodgates" is now ready.

DOUGLAS MACLEAN in THE YANKEE CONSUL

DOUGLAS MACLEAN in THE YANKEE CONSUL. A story of love and adventure and fun setting a new pace by this versatile star.

ABOVE is Patsy Ruth Miller and Douglas MacLean in a balcony scene. Douglas looks as though he is going to like his diplomatic job and Miss Miller seems satisfied that he has been sent as Yankee Consul to her country, where revolutions thrive.

THE advertising aid shown on the left gives a good tie-up example. There are many opportunities to tie-up with drug stores where there is always a good display available. This form of advertising will show its worth at the box office.

THE example on the right shows a good form of newspaper ad for "The Yankee Consul." It is snappy and will attract attention. The cuts obtainable from the picture company greatly aid in advertising campaigns. The copy should be peppy and in keeping with the variety of the picture exhibited.

First National Permanently Enters Producing Field

INDICATION that First National has permanently entered the production field, is read by the industry in the announcement of the formation of First National Productions, Inc.

With all details of its incorporation complete, the subsidiary company was officially announced recently in Los Angeles by John McCormick, Western Representative of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Richard A. Rowland, general manager of Associated First National, is president of the new corporation. John McCormick is vice-president; Earl Sudson, secretary and Clifford P. Butler, treasurer. These executives will additionally serve on the board of directors with Sam Katz, Sol Lesser and J. G. Von Herberg, three famous exhibitors who individual theatre affiliations cover the country.

Primarily the forming of the new organization was to separate producing and distributing affairs of the parent company for the purpose of administration and furthermore to give Earl Hudson direct control of the organization's producing entity.

Earl Hudson will be entirely charged with supervision over production. To him will go the credit for the success of forthcoming pictures, now contemplated and in which an effort will be made to equal the record of the first four filmed under his guidance.

The structure of the original company remains unchanged but the personnel of First National Productions, Inc., will include Clifford Butler as comptroller; David L. Thompson, as production manager; Marion Fairfax as scenario counsel, with such capable writers as Kenneth Clark, Fred Stanley and Earl B. Snell as staff contributors. Milton Menasco is the art director.

'WILD ORANGES' AT CAPITOL THEATRE MARCH 2

Goldwyn's second King Vidor picture, "Wild Oranges," taken from the novel by Joseph Hergesheimer, will have its first showing in New York City at the Capitol Theatre beginning Sunday, March 2.

The cast is a small one, but is unusually capable, for the roles call for very careful acting. Frank Mayo is seen in the role of John Woolfolk and Virginia Valli in that of Millie Stope. The three other roles are acted by Ford Sterling, Nigel De Brullier and Charles A. Post.

This Hergesheimer story is destined to have as big a success as his "Tol'able David," for it is just as dramatic and much more unusual in its situation and in its character development and its presentation.

MINORITY PATRONS MUST BE SATISFIED

Herbert Brenon Says Special Films Will Be Produced

THERE is a film renaissance drawing near, in the opinion of Herbert Brenon, Paramount producer, who has just arrived in New York from the Coast to film "The Mountebank," with Ernest Torrence featured in the title role.

"Speaking broadly," said Mr. Brenon, "the aim of the motion picture producer today is to provide entertainment which appeals to the greatest number. I reveal no secret when I say that there has always been a minority who remain unsatisfied with the present day film and who are eager to view pictures which cater to their own peculiar tastes.

"I believe the day is coming, when stories will be filmed especially for these people. Producers will continue to make pictures as they are made today, of course, because they appeal to the vast majority. Those whose tastes differ are entitled to film entertainment of their own choosing, however, and the industry will one day make a product to satisfy them.

"Grand opera is a case in point. Only a comparative few are interested in grand opera, yet they are willing to pay high prices to attend and would consider it a hardship if they were deprived of their favorite entertainment.

"Motion pictures destroyed a form of amusement which they must replace. In the old days there were different types of theatres. One always knew what class of entertainment would be found in each one. The motion picture came along and swept away the various types, replacing them with a theatre which is generally of one type and which provides one type of entertainment. With the making of special forms of film entertainment, the old classifications in theatres will again appeal."

BETTY COMPSON SEES 'WOMAN TO WOMAN'

Betty Compson, star of the Selznick picture "Woman to Woman," saw that finished production for the first time recently when it was shown at the Fairfax Theatre, Miami, Florida. Miss Compson was at Miami Beach on location for a new picture, and the management of the Fairfax obtained "Woman to Woman" for showing before any other theatre in the South.

PATHE REORGANIZES TWO DEPARTMENTS

Arthur Brilant Joins Exploitation Staff Under P. O. Parsons

A REORGANIZATION of the Pathe Exploitation and Publicity Departments was effected this week in accordance with plans recently perfected by Elmer Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., looking to improved service and greater efficiency in the operation of these two departments.

Under the plan of reorganization adopted the exploitation and publicity departments, which have been amalgamated during the past two years, will hereafter be conducted as distinct units, the exploitation department coming under the supervision of P. A. Parsons, advertising manager for Pathe, and the publicity department functioning as a separate unit. Arthur M. Brilant has been named exploitation manager, and E. F. Supple has been appointed publicity manager.

Mr. Brilant has been affiliated since 1916 with the publicity and exploitation staffs of Famous Players-Lasky, Associated Producers, Cosmopolitan, Mack Sennett Comedies and Universal. Mr. Brilant has also acted as personal representative of Robert Vignola, the director.

Mr. Supple was engaged for several years in the trade paper field and at the time of his joining Pathe was serving as Assistant Managing Editor of Motion Picture News. More recently he has been attached to the Pathe Publicity Department, in charge of trade paper publicity.

'WOMAN TO WOMAN' COMES TO BROADWAY MARCH 16

"Woman to Woman," the Selznick production starring Betty Compson, will have its first Broadway showing at either the Rialto or Rivoli on March 16, according to David R. Blyth, Selznick Director of Sales and Distribution.

Mr. Blyth reports that hundreds of first-run theatres throughout the country, together with leading circuits, have booked or are playing "Woman to Woman." McVickers Theatre, in Chicago, emphasized the fact that Miss Compson plays the part of a dancer and that many of the scenes are in dance places, by putting on an elaborate dance review, employing thirty persons, and with special musical accompaniment.

FLORIDA HAS THEATRE BUILDING BOOM

Many Imposing Structures Under Way Indicate Prosperity

THEATRE building activities throughout the Florida territory at the present time reaches an imposing figure when compared to other sections of the southeastern territory. The southern winter resort places seem to be in the midst of their greatest season of prosperity, which makes Film Row happy around Atlanta. The activities reported during a single week are as follows:

Carl Kettler is at present putting the finishing touches upon an imposing new palace at Palm Beach, and has noted scenic artists there now installing equipment.

Tampa, soon will open its Franklyn Theatre, with a seating capacity of 1200 and one of the finest houses in Tampa.

W. G. Strawn, of Bradentown, is soon opening his new theatre there and is also making plans to build one in Palmetto.

Fred Bryan will open his house in Coco, the latter part of February.

J. E. Posten has reopened the Royal, West Tampa, after extensive improvements.

Judge Titus has recently opened his theatre in New Smyrna.

A group of business men are promoting a theatre for Zephyr Hills, to be called the Zephyr.

FRANK ZAMBRENO'S SALESMEN GIVES HIM SURPRISE

What is probably the most unique drive of its kind in the matter of securing new business is the one just announced by the sales force of Frank Zambreno's Progress Pictures Company of Chicago.

Without any assistance from their chief the sales force of Progress got together and decided that the greatest tribute of loyalty they could show to their boss was by putting over a concerted sales drive and "Say it with contracts."

A committee was appointed among themselves to work out the details quietly and get out such necessary literature and printing as was required—the sales force even going to the extent of paying for this printed matter themselves, and it was a distinct surprise to Mr Zambreno when Charlie Pyle, a well known exhibitor from Champaign, Ill., called on him a few days later and said he wanted to sign the first "Zambreno drive contract." When Zambreno expressed ignorance of any drive, Charlie pulled out the circular he had received from the sales force and showed it to him and also signed a contract for all the product available for his theatre.

YALE UNIVERSITY WILL START NEW PICTURE

'The Puritans' Will Be Produced by Guild-Made Pictures

YALE UNIVERSITY PRESS announced this week the completion of arrangements whereby Guild-Made Pictures (The Film Guild) will immediately start production of "The Puritans," one of the forthcoming "Chronicles of America" pictures distributed by Pathe. While Guild-Made Pictures is entrusted with the actual shooting of the film, the work will be done under the supervision and control of Yale University Press, whose experts will approve the selection of all actors, models of settings, locations, the daily review of scenes taken, and similar important details.

Fred Waller, of Guild-Made Pictures, will be in active charge of production. Frank Tuttle will direct. Professor Charles M. Andrews, of Yale, the country's foremost specialist of colonial history, and Mrs. Andrews, herself an authority of note, will act as historical experts throughout the production of "The Puritans." The finished picture, like all of the "Chronicles of America," will bear the sanction and approval of a distinguished Board of Editors. Preparing the Council's Committee on Publications of Yale University.

Three complete production units are now at work on the Yale "Chronicles." With Mr. Tuttle starting on "The Puritans," Webster Campbell in the midst of directing "Yorktown" and Kenneth Cobb completing "The Declaration of Independence," every effort is being made to satisfy the demand for more of these unique features of authentic romance and adventure interstred by the dramatic story of our nation. An intensive production schedule will be carried out until all thirty-three of "The Chronicles of America" are completed for distribution by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

LATIN AMERICAN CONSULS ARE ENTERTAINED

Attend 'The Yankee Consul' and Will See New Marion Davies Picture

THE growth of ever closer relations between the United States and the South American republics, and the part which motion pictures may play in this movement both were attested in New York last week. Incidentally the managements of two photoplays threatened for a time to suspend diplomatic relations.

As a considerable part of the action in "The Yankee Consul" is laid in South America all the South American consuls-general in New York were invited to attend a Spanish Day performance during the run of this Douglas MacLean attraction at the Central Theatre. The management of the Marion Davies production, "Yolanda," also announced a Consul-General day for Miss Davies.

Peace was restored, however—or unpleasantness averted, when it was found there was no conflict in the dates of the two celebrations. Among the envoys who saw "The Yankee Consul" and applauded the performance of Douglas MacLean were Consuls-General Helio Lobo of Brazil; Eduardo Higginson of Peru; Gustavo Munizaga of Chile; Jorge Boshell of Columbia; Felipe Toboaday Ponce De Leon of Cuba; Eduardo Valasquez of Guatemala; Toribio Terjerino of Nicaragua; Belisario Porras, Jr., of Panama; Ernest Leys of Haiti; Leonilo Montalvo of Salvador; and Pedro Rafael Rincones of Venezuela.

The Broadway run of "The Yankee Consul" demonstrated absolutely that Douglas MacLean has arrived as a picture star. On the opening day and on the second Saturday and Sunday it was necessary to close the box office three times, as the house was literally packed. The business was all the more remarkable when the character of the Broadway opposition was taken into consideration. Just a few doors away "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Scaramouche" were playing their first New York engagements, and in the same immediate neighborhood were "The Ten Commandments," "The Covered Wagon," "Abraham Lincoln," "The Next Corner," "Yolanda" and "America." Any star or production that battles successfully against such competition certainly would seem to bear watching.

'DESERT ROSE' IS NEXT HARRY CAREY PRODUCTION

Hunt Stromberg announces that the next Harry Carey feature for release through the Hodkinson Corporation will be an adaptation of Shannon Fife's "Desert Rose" with dainty Virginia Browne Faire in the leading feminine role.

While this story is an American "western" it has a predominating Spanish atmosphere that permits a display of gorgeous costuming and artistic backgrounds and unlike most westerns it provides a strong acting part for the feminine lead. This role according to reports from Mr. Stromberg is ideally suited to Miss Faire, who is by appearance and temperament the perfect embodiment of the fearless, impulsive girl of Spanish-Celtic extraction that she will visualize in the production.

SWEDISH STAR WITH CHADWICK

Sigrid Holmquist, one of the most famous of beautiful international stars, has been signed by Chadwick Pictures Corporation for a principal role in "Meddling Women," which will be produced jointly by Ivan Abramson and Edmund Lawrence. Lionel Barrymore, who is starring in "Laugh Clown Laugh" at the Belasco Theatre, New York City, will head a distinguished cast of established box office stars, and featured. Another important star, is Dagmar Godowsky, acknowledgedly the foremost "vampire" type on the screen today.

Quebec Court Returns Print of "Flaming Youth"

THE print of "Flaming Youth," which was seized at Quebec City in a raid on the Empire Theatre during its presentation in that house on an order of the local court and which was "confiscated" by the court when the theatre manager was convicted of the alleged offense of exhibiting an immoral picture, has been recovered by Associated First National Exhibitors of Eastern Canada Limited, and the same print is now being exhibited in theatres of other cities of the Province of Quebec before capacity audiences.

The print was returned by the Quebec Court when the appeal from the decision of the court was dropped by the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association of Toronto, which had decided to make a test case of the conviction.

Wide interest was aroused in the case because the Empire Theatre management was prosecuted for showing the picture after it had been duly approved for public presentation by Count Roussy de Salles, chairman of the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors, Montreal.

The Canadian Distributors decided, however, to press for a ruling from the Quebec Provincial Government on the status of an exhibitor in screening a film that has been passed by its own censor board.

Announcement also has been made at Montreal that a large deputation of local exhibitors will shortly await upon Premier Taschereau of the Quebec Government to ask for amendments to the Provincial laws to provide legal protection for exhibitors of the Province when they screen approved film subjects.

HOLLYWOOD IS THRILLED BY RICHARD TALMADGE

Performs Hair-Raising Stunts That Cause Traffic Block

BLASE Hollywood, accustomed to thrills, sat up and took notice last Sunday morning, when Richard Talmadge, star of Truett Film Corporation, and the players making, "In Fast Company," went to Vine Street and Hollywood Boulevard for the final scenes of the picture and for three hours almost stopped traffic on the main thoroughfare of the motion picture city.

Two nine story buildings in the course of construction had been selected by James Horne, the director for Mr. Talmadge, to perform, one of the most sensational scenes in the production—a swing in the air from the ninth story of one building, across a 150 foot space to the top of the building opposite, carrying Mildred Harris in his arms. Sunday morning was selected to avoid the crowds, but preparation and several minor stunts by young Talmadge occurred just at the hour when people were on their way to church, and several pastors opened their services that morning with small congregations.

From nine o'clock in the morning until after the noon hour, the streets about the locations were jammed with a crowd that got the full benefit of what a real thrill artist can do. Beside the principal stunt, Talmadge gave an exhibition of nerve by riding nine stories clinging to the bottom of a frail elevator used to lift materials to the workmen, made a climb up the outside of the building and did a daring aerial leap from a window.

By the time the main stunt was ready, traffic in the vicinity was congested. Finally Director Horne gave the word to go. Talmadge made his swing safely with Miss Harris and received a big cheer from the crowd in the streets nine stories below. Several news reel cameramen were on the job and caught the stunt for their weeklies.

'LEND ME YOUR HUSBAND' IS UNDER PRODUCTION

C. C. Burr started production this week on "Lend Me Your Husband" at the Burr Glendale Studios. This is the third of the announced "Big Four" independent specials for the 1923-24 season. William Christy Cabanne, who recently completed "The Average Woman" for Burr Pictures, Inc., is directing the current production.

"Lend Me Your Husband" is an original modern-day society drama written directly for the screen by Marguerite Gove. The title stimulates the imagination and should prove a box-office magnet, while the story, itself is unusual in its development.

As usual, Mr. Burr is assembling a cast of stellar players whose names mean money to the exhibitor, and the sets will be even more lavish than in the previous pictures of the current series.

HIERS FOR CHRISTIE FEATURE

According to official confirmation from Los Angeles, another familiar face on the Paramount program will be seen in one of the coming Hodkinson specials. Walter Hiers has been engaged by Al Christie to co-star with Dorothy Devore in the coming big feature comedy, "High and Dry" that will be released through the Hodkinson Corporation.

PAY TRIBUTE TO OLCOTT

A large delegation of exhibitors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State visited Sidney Olcott at the Long Island Studio of Famous Players-Lasky in tribute for the wonderful work he has done in the last year. He is now engaged in directing "Monsieur Beaucaire" with Valentino. In the center are William Brandt, president of the New York State organization, and Sidney Olcott. At the left of Mr. Brandt is Mr. Valentino, and on Mr. Olcott's left are Lois Wilson, Lowell Sherman and Bebe Daniels. The theatre owners were entertained at luncheon and saw several scenes photographed.

HAL ROACH ENGAGED ON EXTENSIVE SCHEDULE

Providing New Features and Short Comedies for Pathe

IN response to the heavy demand being experienced for the caliber of feature releases and short-subject comedies distributed by Pathe, the Hal Roach Studios are speeding up work on an extensive production schedule, which includes the making of two feature-length pictures as well as a wide array of short-subject comedies.

Production work has recently completed on the first of two comedy-dramas provided for on the Hal Roach program of feature activities. This comedy-drama made under the title of "The Fighting Tylers," is a story of small-town politics laid in the Middle West. Glenn Tryon and Blanche Mehaffey appear in the leading roles.

Mr. Roach, in the short-subject comedy department, has just launched a new producing unit in which James Finlayson, who has been appearing in important roles in the Stan Laurel comedies, will be prominently cast. Other comedians under contract with Hal Roach will be presented in these comedies, including Charles Puffy, a 350 pound funster recently from Europe. George Jeske is directing the first of this new group of comedies.

Will Rogers has just completed work on a two-reel political satire in which he is elected to Congress. This subject was directed by Robt Wagner, who is now engaged on a new production with Rogers in the stellar role.

The "Our Gang" players are continuing their schedule of two-reel comedies under the direction of Bob McGowan. "The Spat Family" group, with Frank Butler, Sidney D'Albrook, and Laura Roessing, are again embroiled in their domestic difficulties for the screen with Jay A. Howe directing. The Charles Chase single-reel comedy vehicles are being continued with Ralph Cedar handling the megaphone.

'RIGHT OF THE STRONGEST' FOR SELZNICK

The Selznick Distributing Corporation announces that it has acquired and added to its list of releases for the coming month "The Right of the Strongest," a Zenith Pictures Corporation production featuring E. K. Lincoln.

The picture has a strong cast supporting the featured player, including such favorite names as George Siegmann, Helen Ferguson, Tully Marshall, June Elvidge, Niles Welch, Tom Santschi and Robert Milasch.

"The Right of the Strongest" is adapted from the novel of life in the back-woods of Alabama, written by Frances Nimmo Greene, author of the screen success "One Clear Call," and gives a stirring picture of the battle between the savage squatters of the region and the forces of progress. The adaptation was made by Doty Hobart, and the titles are the work of Katherine Hili-ker. Edgar Lewis directed.

The picture is melodramatic in nature, among the features being a fight scene of unusual vividness and action, and a realistic storm scene. Seigmann and Lincoln are the opponents in the fight.

HEPWORTH STARTS DISTRIBUTION OF BRITISH PICTURES

With Cecil M. Hepworth, founder and managing director of the house of Hepworth which has just turned over a big list of productions for American distribution, having instructed his American offices of Hepworth Productions, Inc., to go ahead and arrange for a special presentation next month on Broadway of his superproduction, "Comin' Thro' the Rye." The American offices are a veritable beehive of activity, with Jos. DiLorenzo, general manager and R. T. Cranfield, president, having mapped out a campaign of work that includes extensive exploitation for all Hepworth productions.

A special news bureau and exploitation department has been installed by Messrs. Cranfield and DiLorenzo, with Jesse Well having been especially engaged to handle this particular work. Mr. Weil was formerly connected with the Universal and Film Booking offices and has handled some of Broadway's biggest successes.

HARRON OPPOSITE MACKAIL IN WOODS PRODUCTION

Frank E. Woods, has announced that John Harron has been signed to appear opposite Dorothy Mackail in the production he is starting this week at the Fairbanks-Pickford studio for release through the Hodkinson Corporation.

John Harron has forged rapidly to the front as one of the best of the screen's young players through his splendid work in Mary Pickford's "Through the Back Door," "Penrod," "The Five Dollar Baby" and the F. B. O. special "Westbound Limited."

The Woods production is the first "outside" picture to be made at this studio. Heretofore only Mary and Doug's pictures were given the advantage of the special equipment housed in the F. and P. studio.

ERNST LUBITSCH WILL DIRECT POLA NEGRI

Jesse Lasky Announces Deal Which Brings Celebrities Together

ERNST LUBITSCH has been engaged to direct a picture starring Pola Negri, according to an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production.

"The circumstances attending this engagement," said Mr. Lasky, "are unusual and give every indication that the next Lubitsch-Negri picture will show Miss Negri in a production that will enable her to duplicate the success she made in 'Passion' and 'Gypsy Blood.'" It has long been Miss Negri's wish to work once more under the direction of Mr. Lubitsch. On the other hand, Mr. Lubitsch has had a story in his mind for more than a year which he wanted to do but which was suitable only as a vehicle for Miss Negri's unusual talents. Contractual obligations prevented him from carrying out his desire to direct Miss Negri in this picture, but, by courtesy of and through arrangements with Warner Brothers, we have at last been able to bring these two wonderful artists together again.

Mr. Lubitsch will begin work in the Lasky studio in June, following the completion of Miss Negri's next picture, "A Woman of the Night," which is to be directed by Dimitri Buchowetzki, following Mr. Buchowetzki's present picture, "Men."

CHADWICK LEASES TALMADGE STUDIO FOR FEATURE

Announcement was made this week by I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, of the leasing of the former Talmadge studios, East Forty-eighth Street, New York, by that firm. There the eastern unit of the Chadwick producing organization will turn out four production slated for release in the independent market during 1924-5. The first production to be made will be "Meddling Women," starring Lionel Barrymore, with a cast of distinguished players including Sigrid Holmquist and Dagmar Godowsky.

Ivan Abramson and Edmund Lawrence will collaborate in the making of "Meddling Women." Mr. Lawrence is now in New York perfecting the cast, which will be a replete with established box office stars as is Hunt Stromberg's melodramatic special, "The Fire Patrol," which is the first Chadwick release.

BEBE DANIELS IN 'WILDCAT'

Madge Tyrone, veteran screen writer, is now engaged in preparing the screen play of "The Wildcat," the popular Spanish opera by Manuel Penella which George Melford will produce in the near future for Paramount.

Antonio Moreno is the only featured player definitely selected for the cast of this production. Bebe Daniels, who was announced as a featured player with Moreno, will remain in New York for another picture instead of returning to California.

The Exhibitors' Round Table

Dismiss Rialto Receivership

Y. E. Hildreth, chief stockholder in the Rialto Theatre at Fort Worth, Texas, owed a note for $12,000, which he was unable to pay immediately. The holders of the note held stock shares in the Rialto as security for the note. The holders applied for a receivership for Hildreth and included the Rialto in the application. After investigating the condition of the theatre operating company by testimony Judge Hal S. Lattimore dismissed the receivership for the theatre; and between the holders of the notes and Hildreth the debt was settled by agreement.

Theatre Construction Notes

The Roanoke Theatre, a suburban house of KANSAS CITY, has been purchased by L. J. Lenhart, formerly of the Gladstone Theatre. The seating capacity of the Roanoke will be enlarged about 200, while a new front and decorations will be added.

Two theatres of the Atlantic Coast section of Canada have permanently returned to exclusive moving picture policies. One is the Majestic Theatre at HALIFAX, N. S., which had a long season of dramatic stock presentations, and the other is the Queen's Square Theatre at St. John, N. B., which had been playing stock musical comedy.

The Rex Theatre at DALLAS, TEXAS, is a thing of the past, as the owners sold their lease to a New York millinery firm for $80,000 and the theatre will be transformed into a business house in the near future.

A new motion picture theatre is under construction at BIG LAKE, TEXAS.

The Majestic Theatre at MAGNOLIA, ARK., is opening under new management.

The Star Theatre, in NORWOOD, N. Y., has changed hands, having been bought by Maurice Osgood, of Potsdam, for $15,000. The house was built just recently by William Gregg who intended to run the theatre himself but found such impossible through ill health.

The new Lee Theatre, THOMASVILLE, N. C. in which Colonel Henry B. Varner owns a half interest, will soon be ready for formal opening. It will seat 900 and be the last word in convenience to patrons.

B. O. Shepherd is contractor for a 25x120 foot theatre building at SAND SPRINGS, OKLAHOMA.

Round Table Briefs

John Green, popularly known as the "grand old man," of the Capitol Theatre, GUELPH, ONTARIO, has just recovered from a severe attack of rheumatism.

G. P. Stewart is building a new house in POWERS, OREGON. He will probably close the Pioneer, his present house, on completion of the new.

Jack Roth is again manager of the Isis Theatre, KANSAS CITY, after being associated with several houses in the last few months. He will be succeeded as manager of the Apollo Theatre by "Rube" Finkelstein.

Benjamin Apple, owner of the American in TROY, spoke at a Kiwanis club meeting in that city last week.

George Graham, well known exhibitor of Western Canada, has re-opened the Classic Theatre, WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, which had been closed for a lengthy period.

Jack Gross, formerly of EL DORADO, KANS., has been named as manager of the Crane and Royal theatres, Carthage, Mo. For the last three years Mr. Gross has been manager of the El Dorado and Palace theatres in El Dorado, Kans.

Gus Bergstrom has bought the American MOLSON, WASH., from Tom Watkins.

Jacob E. Tarsches, part owner of the Leland Theatre in ALBANY, is one of the incorporators of a new sheet music publishing company, in that city.

Sam Mendelsohn has taken over the former Rialto Theatre, ANACORTES, WASH., and reopened it as the Victory.

Chamberlain has taken over the management of the DeGraw Theatre at BROOKFIELD, MO.

E. J. Myrick, will build on University Way in SEATTLE, if plans now under discussion mature.

Halberg and Davis who own the Mack and Lincoln theatres, PORT ANGELES, WASH., have recently consolidated their bookings.

Charles H. George has reopened the Dream, PORT ANGELES, after it had been dark for some months.

G. L. De Nune has recently purchased the Lincoln Theatre at FULTON, ILL.

Stone Leases House in Jersey

Abe Stone, former owner of the Rialto, in Schenectady, and Morris Silverman, another exhibitor of the same city, have leased a new house in northern New Jersey and Mr. Stone will move there to run it.

Bedell Back in Fold Again

They can't stay away from this fascinating film fold. There is W. R. Bedell, for many years manager of Atlanta's Rialto, who tired of the constant strain and resigned last Fall to enter the insurance business.

He's back again, but in a different capacity, as sales manager for Graphic Film Corporation, a new Atlanta concern specializing in the making of commercial films, announcement trailers and in renovating and cleaning film.

Fire Destroys Derry's Theatre

The Kenora Theatre at Kenora, Northern Ontario, the proprietor of which was Joe Derry, was destroyed by fire on February 13 with a loss of $65,000 partially insured. The cause of the fire was unknown. Mr. Derry occupied apartments above the theatre.

Johnson's Local News Reel a Hit

Mr. Johnson of the Liberty Theatre, Kelso, Wash., finds patrons much interested in his efforts to give them local news events in a weekly "Kelso News" made up of local events and happenings. He has operated this for three months, with growing success. His operator "shoots" the pictures, which embrace news of Kelso and nearby towns.

THE arrival on the public screen of "America" is an event of importance in motion picture circles. Seldom if ever has there been a subject carrying so distinctly a nationalist flavor as does this product of the Griffith studio. If the picture fail in all respects to meet the expectations of those who go to see it there may be said in explanation if not in extenuation that very likely we have come to expect too much from Mr. Griffith.

Glancing over the reviews in the New York newspapers there seems to be marked unanimity as to the power of the production, the dramatic force with which its message is conveyed.

That end, after all, was the one the producer sought. According to what precedent he had to guide him, precedent far more intangible and indefinite than tangible and definite, Mr. Griffith threw discretion to the winds and set out to make a picture that came under the proscribed headings of

Battle pictures.
Single nation pictures.

He has demonstrated that precedent does not count. What does count is the arousing of interest on the part of his public. And he has done that abundantly.

The "great American picture," like the "great American novel," may never be produced, that is, to the satisfaction of the ultra-critical.

Before we are in a position to attempt an estimate of what constitutes "great American" it will be necessary to agree on the controlling factors, as to what percentage among others shall be allotted for construction, for appeal, for national flavor, if any.

As to the latter it would in some respects seem proper that a subject to come within the description specified should be of America as a whole and not of a part of it or of another nation.

And that very much narrows the field.

It would eliminate "The Birth of a Nation," a tale mainly of the South, and "The Covered Wagon," which deals with the conquering of the West. It might include "Abraham Lincoln," to cite an example.

What is of practical importance in the case of "America" is that it most vividly presents the principles on which the American Nation was founded.

It does it so strikingly as to impress not only the mind of the child or of the new-comer to our shores, but also of those natives of maturity whose interest in the sacrifices of the forefathers has been submerged if not forgotten in the activities of today.

Dignified Exploitation

WORD comes from Chicago as to what may be accomplished with serious and dignified exploitation. With its aid Jones, Linick & Schaefer have been enabled to break records at their Orpheum Theatre in that city with "A Woman of Paris."

The production is now in its seventh week, with indications pointing to at least three weeks additional.

It is stated the gross intake has averaged better than $13,000 a week. And the Orpheum is an 800-seat house, operating from 8:30 to midnight, with an admission of 50 cents.

The management featured the statements that the subject was directed by Charles Spencer Chaplin, that "Mr. Chaplin positively does not appear in this picture," and that it marked the debut of a new dramatic star.

Increasing the public interest editorials appeared in three of the city's daily newspapers.

The result of the Orpheum's work in arousing public interest will have value for every ambitious exhibitor.

It will prove that in the case of what sometimes we are pleased to call a "first-class patronage" your public responds to a plain appeal to its intelligence when that approach is made in language that is convincing, and stronger because of the evident effort to avoid deception.

Radio and Screen

THE widely interesting question of what effect, if any, the growth of radio installation will have upon the attendance at motion picture theatres is boldly tackled this week by B. P. Schulberg, who declares it is ridiculous to suppose that a medium so totally different in its appeal will make any inroads whatever on attendance.

The Preferred executive quotes the original belief—and there was a time when there seemed to be a basis for it—that the growth of motion pictures would in the end spell disaster for the speaking stage. He draws attention to the very evident fact that today there are not enough houses, devoted either to the stage or screen, to accommodate the throngs that seek entertainment on Broadway.

Of course, the situation in the metropolis may be far different from that in other places, but there can be no question as to conditions here.

Point is made of the custom of the genuine film devotee attending a theatre two or three times a week, thereby allowing sufficient opportunity for following any additional diversions.

Another factor Mr. Schulberg calls attention to is the increase in attendance at theatres in the past two years, the period that has marked the rise of the radio.

We have seen figures quoted within the week that there now are about two million installations in the United States. Cut that number in two, and we still have a respectable array of listeners-in.

There are several theatres in the United States that are using every effort to tie in to their enterprises the far-reaching wireless. Among these are Mr. Rothafel's Capitol and the State Theatre in New York.

Also in various cities each week reviews of current motion pictures are broadcast.

Why should not the exhibitor make every effort to bring this new and rapidly expanding entertainment to his aid? It is to his advantage to study it, to develop his knowledge of radio technique, so that on occasion he may employ it.

If announcement be made a few days in advance that the president of the United States is going to make an important announcement to the people of the country what is to prevent an exhibitor advertising that on that evening he will suspend his program for the stipulated time if the address be short and permit his patrons to hear the message of the Chief Magistrate of the nation?

Will any one seriously contend that announcement will not bring to his doors a larger number of persons than ordinarily?

There must be in radio some phase that will help the motion picture theatre owner.

Disregarding the suggestion that the new-comer may hinder the development of the theatre let's go out and impress it into the service of the exhibitor.

LEADERS ALL

John B. Rock, a Chip Off the Old Block

IT was as a boy sixteen years old that John B. Rock made his entry into the film business. The young son of the president of the newly organized Vitagraph company—we are now back in 1899—asked no odds on account of the relationship. He went out to pick up the ropes as a rank outsider would be forced to do, not expecting to sit in at the officers' mess until qualified by experience.

The company maintained quarters in the Morse Building in Nassau street, New York, at that time and was producing pictures—very short ones, to be sure. Among these were "His First Cigar," pretty nearly fifty feet in length; another was "The Magician."

A third subject was "The Hotel Windsor Fire," which had been made in miniature, perhaps the first attempt of this kind. It was during the photographing of this subject that what was intended to be a small explosion proved to be a large one. J. Stuart Blackton, who with Albert E. Smith, the present president of Vitagraph, was staging the "production," was badly burned as a result. But the picture was shown at Tony Pastor's on the evening of the same day.

The Vitagraph Company had a contract with Bostock's Circus to show pictures in a black top. When the members of the old Vitagraph triumvirate, Messrs. Rock, Smith and Blackton, arrived on the ground it was learned the operator had not put in an appearance.

YOUNG Rock, who was in the party, volunteered to pinch hit. His father was more than skeptical, not knowing the youngster had accumulated quite a bit of experience by accompanying J. B. French at showings in churches and at banquets.

A try-out demonstrated that the lad could fill the bill, and he was duly installed as operator. As a result he accompanied the circus to Richmond, Va. There among other pictures he projected was "A Bullfight in Spain," several hundred feet in length. Young Rock continued with the show until it finished its tour in Newark, N. J.

Mr. Rock began work with the Vitagraph company as office boy at the Morse Building headquarters, passing through all departments. Among these were the developing and printing room—and "room" is right, in speaking of those days.

LEADERS ALL—JOHN B. ROCK

BECAUSE the enthusiasm with which as a boy he started in the business has never waned; because he has wide experience in the physical handling of film, not only in the exchange but in the theatre and in the projection booth as well; because in the few years that he has been actively out of the industry he has demonstrated his ability to administer with success large affairs of a nature entirely different from that of the film business.

Then the young man went on the road, playing Vitagraph pictures at a vaudeville theatre in Waterbury, Conn., followed by a stay in New Bedford, Mass. He was two years in the Music Hall in Boston and for three seasons in Atlantic City.

In 1906 the company determined to open a general office in Chicago, and the young man was called to New York and told he had been appointed sales manager, with a territory extending from a point a goodly distance east of Chicago right through to the west coast.

It was October 13, 1906, when he took charge of the office. He was not superstitious as to the date. Just at that time a Cohan play was making much of the figures "23." Mr. Rock noted with interest his telephone number in his new quarters was 5238, the outside figures of which represented 13, leaving 23 as a remainder. When this was called to his attention he laughed, but said he would take the chance.

THE young Vitagraph executive sold the first bill of goods to Carl Laemmle following the purchase by the future Universal chief of the White House Theatre in Halsey street, in Chicago. At their first meeting Mr. Laemmle had complained of his inability to secure a product in Chicago from the so-called exchanges.

Mr. Rock fixed him up, among the product which Mr. Laemmle bought outright being "Automobile Thieves," a Vitagraph product. Also it was one of the first sales Mr. Rock made.

Other customers in those days were Robert Lieber, now president of Associated First National, who was buying for the exchange of H. Lieber & Co. of Indianapolis, and John Frueler and Harry E. Aitken of Milwaukee.

It was with a representative of the Pathe company that Mr. Rock visited the last two named to interest them in the purchase of film. Both after became prominent in the film industry, especially in the days of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Aitken is now as active as ever, with Tri-State Pictures.

Eugene Cline in Chicago made one purchase that in those days was considered large, a bill of $30,000. And there are exchange men who today would consider it sizable if they were making the purchase.

Mr. Rock was an active part of the development of the Vitagraph company and of the General Film Company.

After the formation of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay in 1914 he moved to the new offices as manufacturer's agent.

IN 1915 "A Million Bid" was put on by the Vitagraph at the Criterion Theatre, then known as the Vitagraph, and made a hit. Mr. Rock was called to New York and given instructions to make a tour of the company's exchanges and give advance showings.

HAROLD LLOYD'S well known horn rimmed spectacles, shown in the center, are probably the best known motion picture accessory. There are trick shoes, moustaches, canes and costumes but Lloyd's "specs" surpass them all for real advertising value.

IN "Why Worry" and "Grandma's Boy," the famous comedian brings his glasses into play to arouse sympathy and assume an air of innocence. When the name of Harold Lloyd is mentioned one unconsciously pictures a pair of large round spectacles.

The Lloyd Advertising Urge And the Epic of His Spectacle Frames

THEN it comes to advertising aids, Harold Lloyd's well known spectacles come close to heading the list. If any picture theatre in the country should hang out a huge pair of spectacles without a sign, practically every movie patron would draw the conclusion that a Harold Lloyd picture was in the offering.

It is doubtful if the comedian realized, in his early pictures, that the spectacles would become a synonym for clean hilarious comedies, nevertheless, exploiters of his pictures are cashing in on the strength of the well known "cheaters."

The latest advertising aid to his pictures is the distribution of cardboard spectacles to youngsters. They are exaggerated in size and carry the Lloyd ad on rims and sidepieces. It is no trouble to induce any number of youngsters to wear them and the advertising comes cheap. With a crowd of boys parading the streets wearing spectacles, one is not permitted to forget that a Lloyd film is being shown.

Regarding the origin of horn-rim spectacles, the Optical Products Corporation of New York says: "Chinese Spectacle Lore reveals the information that in the reign of Cho Tso Spectacle Frames were considered so valuable that single pairs were traded for fine horses. Today one man in the motion picture industry considers one pair worth five thousand dollars.

"The ancient Chinese lay first claim to shell spectacle frames. In the middle kingdom of China Cho Tso caught his own tortoises and gathered his crystals in the babbling brooks at the foot of the sacred mountains. Spectacle frames were a badge of superior intelligence among the Chinese. Judges wore them and the larger the rims worn the greater was the rank of intelligence. In those days it was considered impolite to talk to a person of superior rank without removing one's spectacle frames. As a token of respect men removed their spectacles when meeting a lady in the same manner as Americans doff their hats."

There should be no difficulty in arranging with opticians to tie-up with a Lloyd picture exploitation by displaying an array of spectacles in a setting of Harold Lloyd pictures.

THAT the advertising value of Lloyd's spectacles is fully realized is demonstrated by the fact that his latest pictures are receiving advertising by giving out imitation Harold Lloyd spectacles to youngsters who parade the streets.

IN "Captain Jack" paper hats were distributed to youngsters and they proved valuable advertising aids to the picture. The hats are cheap and form an effective means of advertising that would be otherwise unobtainable. Exhibitors should take advantage of these aids.

Up and Down Main Street

TO OPEN 'FOOLS HIGHWAY' IN BOWERY HOUSE

Theatre in Heart of District Which Is Picture's Locale

AMONG the openings of this week is that of "Fools Highway," the Universal-Jewel in which Mary Philbin makes her first stellar appearance following her great success in "Merry-Go-Round." This opening will be unique in many respects. Instead of opening at one of the big Broadway houses, it will open on the Bowery. Through the courtesy of Frank Koren and Albert S. Goldberg, proprietors of the Atlantic Garden at No. 50 Bowery, the Universal will hold the world premiere of its picture on Friday night February 29 within a block of the corner on the Bowery where the great majority of the action takes place.

After painstaking research and with the help of almost every newspaper morgue in New York City, the Production Department at Universal City built what is regarded as a perfect replica of the corner of Pell Street and the Bowery, including the elevated road, the street cars, wagons and buildings, and paving of thirty years ago. Its interiors were developed from photographs of well-known saloons of the period of 1890, including that of Steve Brodie and other refreshment purveyors as well as the interior of Suicide Hall, McGuirk's and several establishments of lesser note.

The opening will be an invitation affair entirely and invitations are being issued by the theatre management and the Universal Pictures Corporation. Already the elite of the Bowery, its political, business and social leaders, have accepted invitations. A short program of the songs popular on the Bowery on that day will precede the showing of the picture. Senator James J. Walker will be master of ceremonies of the occasion and Governor Smith, one of the best known products of the Bowery, will make an address. Mayor Hylan whose first occupation when he came to New York City was conducted in connection with the elevated railroad when it ran steam trains, in replying to the invitation which was extended to him, expressed his regret at being unable to accept because of the fact that he will be out of town at the time, extended his congratulations to Mr. Laemmle on the occasion of his anniversary month, and expressed his hope that the production will be a tremendous success.

A determined attempt will be made to turn the Atlantic Garden into its former estate. Prior to its becoming a moving picture house, Atlantic Garden had a history as a restaurant and entertainment hall dating back through the entire history of the Bowery to the days of 1776, when it was the Bulls Head Tavern. The lobby will be returned to the period of 1890, the ushers and the orchestra will be dressed in the costume of that period, and the decorations will be of the same period.

NUMBER OF BOOKINGS FOR 'AFTER THE BALL'

According to reports of contracts received, an unusually large number of groups of theatres have arranged for the showing of the first Theatre Owners' release. The booking of important individual theatres throughout the country is said to be proceeding with very gratifying results while it is said that it is establishing a booking record in the industry as far as number of circuits that have closed for it are concerned.

Managers of the larger circuits seem to feel that it is decidedly desirable to obtain an early run of the screen version of the famous song, "After the Ball" since there are great exploitation possibilities in the national tie-up with the old time favorite song.

"Through the Dark," the newest Colleen Moore feature, is having an eminently successful run at the Miller Theatre where it is said to be duplicating its eastern triumph.

"The Great White Way" the story of New York, which has but recently closed at the Cosmopolitan Theatre in New York to make place for Marion Davies in "Yolando," is now showing at the California Theatre where it is attracting as much interest as it did in New York and the other big cities where it has already been shown.

The third of the trio is Robert Mantell's starring vehicle, "Under the Red Robe." This is now at the Rialto Theatre where it is creating the same favorable impression as it did in the other cities where it has already been seen by several hundred audiences.

'BEAU BRUMMEL' OPENS IN LOS ANGELES

Print Has Already Arrived in New York for Early Showing

CLYDE FITCH'S immortal "Beau Brummel" in screen form will make its formal bow to a waiting motion picture world when it opens at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, where it is to have its world and western premiere, on March 8. Because of the fact that John Barrymore has the stellar role in the picture, especially high hopes are held out for an overwhelming success, and for this reason arrangements have been made for an extended run at the Miller Theatre after the first showing at the California.

Following its western premiere the film will come to New York where Warner Brothers are making arrangements to procure a prominent theatre for the first showing. The prediction of a long run is said to be justified by the reputation of John Barrymore as one of the foremost American actors not only on the legitimate stage but on the screen as well.

Moreover his work on this film is said to be especially fine since the production is unusually lavish and fine in every detail. And Barrymore gives a spirited presentation of the role of Beau Brummel, the most picturesque figure that ever hobnobbed with royalty, and played for high royal stakes.

Seemingly spurred on by the performance of the star the entire supporting cast has been moved to greater effort with the result that each in his own role has given a remarkably fine interpretation. Among these players are Irene Rich, Carmel Myers, Willard Louis, Richard Tucker and others.

The picture was directed by Harry Beaumont, the adaptation of the story being done by Dorothy Farnum. A print of the picture reached New York last week where it was shown for the producers and a group of their friends who declared that it upheld all the boasts made for it.

THREE NEW FEATURES ON SELZNICK PROGRAM

Several feature release dates for the coming month have been made public by the Selznick Distributing Corporation and it is noted that among them are "Flapper Wives," the Jane Murphie production with Rockcliffe Fellowes and Mal Allison, "Pagan Passions" in which June Elvidge and Tully Marshall play prominent parts, and "The Right of the Strongest," a Zenith picture, with E. K. Lincoln and Helen Ferguson.

All three pictures are reputed to be features in every sense of the word and it is anticipated that they will be well received when they make their separate bows to the public.

'LOVE'S WHIRLPOOL' TO OPEN EARLY IN MARCH

Definite release dates for the new Hodkinson pictures announced this week, places the James Kirkwood-Lila Lee Production "Love's Whirlpool" as the first to go to the exhibitors during the month of March. It is set for release on March 2, followed by the Samuel Grand super-comedy special, "Try and Get It" with Bryant Washburn and Billy Dove on March 9.

"His Darker Self" the blackface comedy feature starring Lloyd Hamilton is set for definite general release on March 16.

SPLENDID SUCCESS FOR "THE WHITE SISTER"

Film to Be Generally Released by Metro Starting March 17

THE WHITE SISTER," the King Vidor production starring Lillian Gish, was forced last week to terminate its very successful Broadway engagement due to the fact that it was scheduled among the Metro releases for March.

However, before its general distribution it was scheduled for a pre-release showing at the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee. It scored such a tremendous success during the first week of its showing that it was held over to accommodate the great number of people who wanted to see the production and hadn't gotten the opportunity.

According to the statement of Leo Landau, owner of the theatre, the picture did a record breaking business. In a telegram to the Metro representative he said:

"Lillian Gish in the 'White Sister' opened Saturday to one of the biggest days the Alhambra has ever had. Sunday business was bigger even than Saturday and the third day, Monday, is keeping right up with the opening days. Consensus of opinion by our patrons contends that 'The White Sister' is not only excellent entertainment, but is really a very beautiful production.

"I have no hesitancy in recommending this production to all exhibitors as one of the year's biggest box office attractions."

Another Metro release that is receiving an almost unprecedented amount of glowing praise is "Scaramouche" which is showing at a great number of theatres in various parts of the country.

"The Law Forbids" is the April release and was written specially for Baby Peggy by Bernard McConville, supervising editor for Jewel productions. The picture tells a human interest story of a little girl who is torn between two loves by the divorce courts.

"The Storm Daughter," the May release, presents Priscilla Dean in a new thriller. The story concerns the struggles of a girl, forced by accident aboard a sailing vessel manned by a hard, brutal skipper. Plenty of thrill in the form of sensational escapes and recaptures are said to add appreciably to the colorful character of the picture.

CONVICTS SEE SHOWING OF "IF WINTER COMES"

"If Winter Comes" was recently taken to the Massachusetts State Prison for a screening before the convicts there. From a review of the picture the following week in "The Mentor," the prison magazine, the audience was not only much impressed by the story but deeply moved.

Despite the fact that the men all are acknowledged to be "hard guys" the reviewer in talking of the effect of the picture mentioned a number of incidents where some of the members of the audience were seen to be actually crying. According to this critic, never before was the audience so moved by a picture as when they witnessed the screening of "If Winter Comes."

Sounds like a pretty good testimonial of the humanness and depth of the story with the average audience which is by nature a great deal more emotional than an audience of men whose contact with life has made them hardened and callous.

'TWENTY-ONE' CROWDING RIALTO THEATRE

Return of Barthelmess to Modern Parts Delights Audiences

FOR a long time the fan public has been waiting for the return of Richard Barthelmess to modern parts. His last few pictures have been in costume and the public has shown a decided desire to see him back.

"Twenty-One," playing this week at the Rialto, New York, is the name of this newest picture and judging by the crowds that are jamming the theatre at every performance, First National has here given the public what it wants.

The story is that of a young man of wealthy parents who loves a poor girl and leaves his home to work in order to marry. When the story opens we see Richard as a child of seven. This part is portrayed by a youngster by the name of Howard Merrill who, besides looking remarkably like Richard Barthelmess, is a very capable little actor. There can be no doubt that the little fellow idolizes his father and is heartbroken when domestic misunderstandings between the husband and wife rob him of his hours with his father.

Though young Merrill is only seven years old he shows a remarkable understanding and appreciation of the part he is playing, and there is reason to believe that he has a real future before him.

The work done by Richard Barthelmess is of the same high caliber as his past performances, and it is little wonder that the public idolizes him as it does. He not only looks like a youth of twenty-one but he gives an honest portrayal of a young man who feels he has reached the heights when he has attained to the dignified years which the law chooses to call "his majority."

Nancy Montague, daughter of a Tory justice, sees her father wounded by a militiaman at Concord and her brother, Charles, who had fought with the Continentals, brought home dead. Nathan Holden, a dispatch rider before the war and an officer in the American Army afterward, is in love with Nancy. Captain Butler, with the consent of the British commander, brings into the war as allies the Indians of the Six Nations, and leads the red men in ravaging the country. He is a suitor for the hand of Nancy, but she is a witness of his barbarity and very nearly a victim of his drunken lust, being saved by the insistence of the Indians on starting the pillage. Holden spies on Butler, learns his plans and rides to warn the countryside and summon the soldiers. At the battle of Fort Sacrifice the colonists are saved by the arrival of the soldiers and Nathan and Nancy are united.

GRIFFITH has "done it again!" He has given us another great picture. "America" is great from the dramatic viewpoint, particularly in the first half; it is great historically, all the way; it is great patriotically, burning into the consciousness the fundamental American principles; it is great pictorially, abounding in remarkable photography of scenes of natural beauty and of backgrounds devised by his artistic aids.

Nothing more thrilling and exalting has been thrown on any screen than the break-neck ride of Paul Revere, as his marvelous animal hurdles fences and stone walls in his successful efforts to evade his pursuers, or the charge of the American cavalry led by the inspired Holden, who is battling against great odds not only to relieve the garrison at the fort but also to save the life of the girl he loves.

Nothing more deeply moving has been thrown on any screen than the bringing to the bedside of the wounded Tory father of the body of his son killed by a British bullet at Bunker Hill as the lad tried to get powder across the open to his fellows—and the covering by his daughter of the body for a moment with a British flag for fear the truth would extinguish the fluttering spark of life in the sire so bitterly antagonistic to the colonials.

Movement Is Fast

Where "The Birth of a Nation" revealed the trials of the South following the civil war and "The Covered Wagon" is devoted to the struggles of the empire builders of the early west, "America" aims to portray to the hundred-odd millions the sacrifices of the forefathers in creating a nation—and gloriously succeeds. In other words, the vital appeal is to a whole country, not to a section of it. We have referred to the dramatic force of this story, "particularly in the first half." It is a fact that the story from the side of its heart interest reaches its peak in the first division; that there is a fall with the passing of young Montague from which it does not recover.

"America" hits its stride right at the beginning. The movement is fast. Quickly passing in review are the meetings of the enraged colonists in Boston, the House of Burgesses in Virginia and the House of Commons across the water—all vividly and humanly portrayed. They are real.

We are shown, too, the home of the Montagues—the father a staunch defender of the existing order, of the Crown; of the son just returned from abroad, and of the daughter who sees things with the eyes of her father.

In his home we get the first glimpse of the future Father of His Country—an interpretation that is impressive throughout.

The story turns on the love of Holden for Nancy, and of the interest of this altogether charming child of luxury in the roughly garbed son of the soil who is so thoroughly imbued with the new spirit of his countrymen.

Throughout the two hours and a half or more of its showing the production is just one notable setting after another.

Some of these are of the legislative gatherings referred to; of the King of England in his cabinet; the streets of Boston with the old church at the head of the highway; the view of the Charles River, with the church at the opposite end of the rays of the moon across the water and the two lights showing in the tower.

There are the towns of Lexington and Concord, of the conflicts of the handfuls of Americans with the trim "redcoats" as they are still called in that country; the battle of Bunker Hill, the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the granting of the commission to Washington.

There are the scenes of Valley Forge, of the shoeless Americans fighting cold and starvation; of the debauchery of Butler and his cohorts in the home of the Montagues—and the thrilling sequences of Holden spying upon the British and Indians; of his temptation to go to the rescue of Nancy instead of performing his larger duty of warning the countryside of impending devastation and massacre.

There are the harrowing views of the assault of the allies upon Fort Sacrifice, of the stirring ride of Holden to arouse the soldiers and the forced ride to the relief of the stockade, and of the final surrender at Yorktown.

Hamilton Ideal

These are some of the highlights—just some of them.

The work of the players is superb—that's the word.

Neil Hamilton as the young patriot and the lover of Nancy gives a portrayal that is ideal—as natural as life itself. It is one that will stir the admiration of his countrymen.

Carol Dempster is the only woman in a cast of a score and a half—Miss La Verne appears for just a bit—but so completely does she fill the eye and the thoughts of the observer that the disparity is unnoted. Grave or gay she charms and appeals most notably.

Charles Emmett Mack is the third of the younger players who are given the centre of the stage—and holds it. His is a heroic role, and it is heroically interpreted.

Lionel Barrymore is cast in the unspeakable part of Captain Butler and plays it with absolute self-effacement. Erville Anderson, in spite of his role of the Tory, never loses the sympathy of the observer.

Louis Wolheim as Captain Hare is properly reprehensible, while Riley Hatch is the dignified chief of the Mohawks—a strange figure.

Arthur Dewey as Washington upholds the best traditions of the First President—reverential, impassive, altogether admirable.

The picture runs the whole scale of human emotions, from the tenderness of love scenes to the savagery of cruelties enacted by white men out-doing their red allies in unmitigated barbarity.

There are the leavening Griffithian touches, relieving the high tension at most unexpected moments and at most welcome ones—but always in good taste.

England Won't Like It

The production is frankly American—and made for no other country. England is not going to like it—and hardly can be expected to. At the same time her feelings have been conserved. George III is treated far more tenderly than is the usual rule with American historians. Then, too, the appearance of Pitt in the Commons pleading for the Colonists and later of Burke with a similar message will go far to soften national reaction.

The second half is too long. This we understand is being remedied, as the production has been undergoing the cutting process steadily following the premiere.

The scenes of debauchery in the Montague home, where Butler and his men have taken possession, and also of the attack on Fort Sacrifice are drawn out. In the case of the latter the feeling persists in spite of the spectacular and dramatic ride of Holden to save the situation. That, in any event, was the very definite impression of one beholder. But, after all, it's a matter of individual temperament.

Continuing in the same vein, the musical acceleration is overdone. The brasses are too loud, at times pushing the story into the minor position. When music is heard rather than sensed it is wrong.

Getting back to the main theme, the story as a whole, it is possible that in "America" we may have the great American picture. Time will tell.

And just a word as to the titles. They are exceptionally good. Especially is this true in the case of the dialogues between the two lovers. The lines of young Holden are marvels of restrained nobility, matching the faultless demeanor of this character of whom millions of Americans are going to be genuinely proud.

We reiterate, Griffith has "done it again!"

HAS GREAT SCENIC CHARM

'The Blizzard' Combines Photographic Beauty With Unique Spectacular Appeal

THE BLIZZARD. Fox Photoplay, Author, Dr. Selma Lagerlof. Director, Mauritz Stiller. Length, 5,890 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Gunnar Hede	Einar Hansson
Ingrid	Mary Johnson
Madame Hede	Mary Johnson
Nurse	Pauline Brunius
Blomgren	Teckla Ahlander
Mrs. Blomgren	Adolf Olachansky
	Stina Berg

Gunnar Hede, young Swedish violinist, has a mother who is opposed to his musical tastes. He joins a band of strolling players and falls in love with Ingrid, one of the troupe. Gunnar undertakes to drive a herd of reindeer. The animals stampede in a blizzard. He escapes with his life but is temporarily insane. Later, when safe at home, Ingrid plays to him and he recovers. They are wed.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THE entertainment values of this picture lie chiefly in its scenic beauty, the photography including a large number of beautiful exteriors filmed amid the snow wastes of Scandinavia. Chief among these "shots" is the wild stampede of a herd of reindeer in

The feature is a Swedish production, with a plot adapted from a story by Dr. Selma Lagerlof, winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature. It is forceful, and at times rather gruesome drama, but on the whole, preserves its interest throughout the six reels and achieves a happy ending. Considered as a program attraction, "The Blizzard" should make a satisfactory box office score.

The feature's sentimental issues are developed in the romantic attachment which arises between the young violinist hero and Ingrid, member of a band of strolling players, whose fortunes he determines to follow after he has quarreled with his mother. The youthful pair win a good deal of sympathy, but interest centers principally in Gunnar's narrow escape from death amid the stampeding reindeer, his insanity and subsequent recovery.

The episode dealing with the young fellow's mental lapse is dramatically perfect but not particularly pleasant to see. His recovery under the tender ministrations of Ingrid, whose music dispels the shadows clouding his mind, has a more cheering effect, and comes as a grateful surprise after the stark realism of the preceding situations.

The reindeer stampede over the white wastes of the Northland is a tremendously spectacular affair, destined to linger long in the memories of those who witness it. Snow, sleet, a furious hurricane blowing, hundreds of panic-stricken animals plunging madly for the distant hills, leaping into the turbulent waters of a swiftly flowing river, the hapless hero being dragged at the heels of a leader—this scene is a genuine thriller and unique in the annals of filmdom.

Mary Johnson, the "European Mary Pickford" as they call her across the water, is a pleasing little person who fills the role of Ingrid adequately. Elinar Hansson plays the part of hero with commendable artistry and spirit and the other players, none of whom are known to American fans, furnish good support.

Your best bet in exploiting this picture is to play up the big reindeer stampede as one of the most spectacular incidents ever filmed. Stress the admirable photography, the story's romantic side, and mention the author as the winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature. The "European Pickford," is another item likely to arouse your patrons' curiosity.

'Gambling Wives' Preaches Moral, but Entertainment Prevails

GAMBLING WIVES. Arrow Photoplay. Story by Ashley T. Locke. Adapted by Leota Morgan. Directed by Dell Henderson. Length, 6,438 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ann Forest	Marjorie Daw
Vincent Forest	Edward Earle
Sylvia Baldwin	Betty Francisco
Duke Baldwin	Joe Girard
Polly Barker	Florence Lawrence
Van Merton	Ward Crane
Madam Zoe	Hedda Hopper

Vincent Forest is a young bank clerk who, lured by a desire for gambling, visits a fashionable gambling house run by Madam Zoe, who is being maintained by Van Merton. A friend of his wife tells her what is happening and advises her to play his game in order to win him back. Since the husband is infatuated with Madam Zoe, Sylvia arranges to have Ann interest herself in Van Merton. The usual complications arise, and the husband realizes what is happening just in time to save his wife and restore real happiness to both of them.

By HENRIETTE SLOANE

WHILE this picture will probably never be hailed as a great screen drama it is a pretty sound guess that it will give satisfaction at the box office, since it is fair entertainment of the type that appeals to the average audience.

Marjorie Daw is a sweet, demure, trusting wife, but one might perhaps feel more sympathy for her if she were not quite so demure and showed a bit of fight when her husband continued his campaign of neglect.

Hedda Hopper as the gambling siren looked well enough in her clothes, but hardly beautiful. She impresses one as being very luring when she is baiting her prey, but unnaturally softly sentimental for a woman of her type when she is trying to get Van Merton to consent to marry her.

Probably the best acting is done by Betty Francisco, who, as the wife of a "tottering old darling," gave an amusing performance as a bred-in-the-bone gold digger who married for money and didn't care who knew it.

However, despite the conventionality of the plot the picture should find a fertile market, for it has a broad field of exploitation. There are the merchant tie-up possibilities in the elaborate women's costumes, of which there are a generous and highly colorful collection. In connection with window displays featuring this phase of the picture there has been designed a new and highly attractive type of window card that will do much to add tone and interest.

The lobby should be made attractive by the use of stills and posters, especially cut-outs of the devil who, as a symbol of evil, appears in a fade-out on the screen as each new character enters the plot.

You might also arrange to have special playing cards printed, the outside of which should bear the name and date of showing at your theatre. These, generously distributed in the neighborhood, will probably arouse a lively interest in the production.

MILDLY ENTERTAINING DRAMA

'Love Letters' Is Romantic Story With Some Interesting Twists

LOVE LETTERS. A Fox Production Written by Fred Jackson. Adapted by Doty Hobart. Directed by David Solomon. Length, 4,749 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Evelyn Jefferson	Shirley Mason
Jimmy Stanton	Gordon Edwards
Julia Crosland	Alma Francis
Don Crosland	William Irving
Thomas Chadwick	John Miljan

Julia Crosland is living very happily with her husband and her sister. Evelyn Jefferson is equally happy with the thoughts of her approaching marriage to Jimmy Stanton, who has just accepted a position as secretary to Thomas Chadwick. He rents a house for his employer next to the Croslands, and when the sisters meet the man they realize that he is the man they both loved and secretly and wrote passionate love letters to. Evelyn attempts to get the letters, but is unsuccessful. At this point Chadwick is killed, and when the morocco box containing the letters is opened it is found that the man has personally destroyed all evidence of his past amours.

By HENRIETTE SLOANE

IT doesn't seem at all unusual for young girls to write love letters. Why, then, should there be so much fuss over a few mild love letters written by a woman before she became a wife, and by a girl who has just become engaged?

Yet such flimsy stuff provides the entire plot for "Love Letters," which is a very mildly entertaining picture, in which a man about town reads all his past love letters as the average man reads his daily morning and evening newspapers.

Shirley Mason, as usual, is a very pleasing morsel to look upon, when she is crying as when she is laughing, and it almost seems a pity to waste her on a story as inconsequential and unsubstantial as this one.

The production, however, is finely staged, with lovely gowns and beautiful homes aplenty, both of which elements will probably do much to give the production a fair standing.

Briefly the picture is of a type that may appeal in neighborhood houses and small communities with highly romantic audiences which are not too much interested in the foundation on which the romance is laid.

Its selling power through exploitation is good since the name is likely to attract interest. Therefore, the name should be placed in the foreground and used as a catchline or teaser in every possible connection.

It might also be a good stunt to get up a series of mild love letters and send them to a mailing list of girls. A similar letter sent to the married women of the vicinity and signed by Thomas Chadwick will also start much helpful chatter. In these letters you might also arrange a date mentioning as the place of meeting, the lobby of your theatre.

'FLOODGATES' A THRILLER

Action and Heart Interest Strong in Lowell Production

FLOODGATES. Lowell Film Productions Picture. Story by L. Case Russell. Directed by George Irvine. Length, 6,435 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dave Trask	John Lowell
His sister, Ruth Trask	Evangeline Russell
His wife Alice	Jane Thomas
His daughter, Peggy	Ivy Ward
Lem Bassett	William Calhoun
His nephew, Tom Bassett	F. Keating
Leslie Morton	William Cavanaugh

Lem Bassett, mill owner, desires to erect a dam for water power, and in order to secure permission from the land owners in the district he persuades Dave Trask, his mill foreman, to encourage the measure. Trask has implicit faith in Bassett and through his influence the landowners agree. Later Bassett floods the land in an effort to purchase the land surrounding the lake. The landowners object and accuse Dave of cheating them. Tom Bassett is in love with Dave's sister and while motoring his car strikes Trask's child, paralyzing her. The child is taken to Tom's house for an operation and while the operation is in progress Dave blows up the dam. The flood reaches Tom's house and Dave rescues the child. Tom is wounded and cannot reach safety. The flood sweeps the house away with Tom clinging to a piece of debris. He is rescued by Dave after a heroic struggle.

By LEN MORGAN

THERE are plenty of thrills in "Floodgates." With daring automobile driving a real stand-up-knock-down fight and a spectacular flood scene the audience is kept on edge every minute. It is a gripping picture and should prove a good box office attraction.

John Lowell is a two fisted individual and he is required to use his fists in several scenes. He is an excellent type for the part, which requires ruggedness and stamina. In the fight scene between himself and "Lovely" Regan, he takes and gives enough punishment for several reels of ordinary picture. It is a regular he-man fight and a thriller.

Evangeline Russell, as Ruth Trask, is called upon but little for emotional acting, but the parts assigned her are well done.

The big scene of the picture is staged as a finale. In it Trask dynamites the dam and the rushing waters sweep everything before it. It is a big scene and well done. It is photographed in such a manner the rushing water can be followed through the valleys and its path of destruction depicted. The water picks up a house bodily and carries it along to destruction.

This picture will appeal to any kind of audience. It has enough heart appeal to make it popular with those who like sob stuff and its thrilling action will satisfy the most blasé.

In exploiting the picture emphasis should be placed on the wonderful flood scenes. Gates can be erected in the lobby in such a manner that when they are swung open there will be a poster picture of the flood scene.

'Thy Name Is Woman' a Tense, Forceful Drama With Colorful Atmospheric Appeal

THY NAME IS WOMAN. Metro Photoplay. Adapted from Benjamin Glazer's American Version of Karl Schoenherr's Stage Play. Director, Fred Niblo. Length, 9,087 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Pedro	William V. Mong
Guerita	Barbara La Marr
Juan Ricardo	Ramon Novarro
Captain Roderigo	Wallace MacDonald
Commandante	Robert Edeson
Juan's Mother	Claire MacDowell
Dolores	Edith Roberts

Juan Ricardo, Spanish soldier, is assigned to get evidence against Pedro, an old smuggler. His acquaintance with Pedro's wife, Guerita, ripens into mutual love. She is stabbed and killed by her husband. Juan is arrested, charged with having failed in his mission. The intercession of Dolores, the commandante's daughter, who loves Juan, brings about his release.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

BOTH from a commercial and artistic standpoint there is much to be said in praise of this Metro attraction, which seems to possess alluring box office possibilities and fills the entertainment demands of all classes of theatres.

It is a tense drama, with a note of tragedy injected which might appear exaggerated if screened amid less romantic surroundings. But the colorful Spanish atmosphere, skillfully developed and maintained, is exactly in keeping with the story of love, intrigue and treachery here unfolded. The exotic backgrounds, superb acting of the cast and Fred Niblo's fine direction combine to place "Thy Name Is Woman" in the van of the season's big pictures.

The action begins deliberately enough with the arrival of the young Spanish hero, several artistic shots of the mountain ranges where the smugglers abide, a trifle of comedy relief, and then the pace quickens as the love affair between Juan Ricardo and Guerita enters its initial stages.

From that time on complications come thick and fast, as Guerita first lures the youthful soldier, yields gradually to an infatuation for him and he, on his part, finds that in playing with fire he has burned his fingers and is swayed by passion for the woman he had intended to use to obtain evidence against her smuggling husband.

The suspense thus established by these contending currents of emotion never loses its grip. It is impossible to anticipate the action, to make a correct guess as to what turn events will take next. Also, one's sympathies are curiously divided and switched from this character to that. Guerita's elderly husband comes in for a due allowance of pity, the wife herself, although caught in the meshes of an illicit love, is not altogether without excuse for the tortuous course she adopts, Juan is hardly to be blamed under the circumstances—all these people are very human, if not particularly moral, who war with destiny in this forceful drama enacted under the glowing skies of sunny Spain.

The big scene is put over with tremendous effect when old Pedro, just as Guerita is about to depart with Juan, approaches under pretence of giving her a farewell kiss and stabs his victim during that last embrace. Pedro dies from the reactive shock of his own deed. This is undoubtedly the highlight of the picture and what follows has naturally an anticlimax flavor.

But nevertheless, the interest holds to the end, when Dolores, the commandante's daughter, intercedes and saves Juan from punishment for having failed in his military mission. This takes the sharp edge off the tragic episode, and supplies the sort of finish that usually produces satisfactory box office results.

Barbara La Marr has never appeared to better advantage than as the beautiful, seductive Guerita, she of the coquettish wiles and tempestuous passions, William V. Mong is excellent as the ancient, crafty Pedro, Ramon Novarro scores in the lover role, Edith Roberts is captivating as the commandante's pretty daughter, and better support could not be desired. The photography is rich in scenic beauty, and governed by perfect lighting.

You can safely exploit this as a heart drama of intense power, strong in suspense and romantic lure, with thrills galore and wonderfully life-like atmosphere. It is an unusual picture, with a cast of talented players, most of whom are well known to the fans and can be featured in your advertising.

HECTIC, LURID MELODRAMA

'Flowing Gold' Offers Strenuous Tale of Life in Oil Country

FLOWING GOLD. First National Photoplay. Author, Rex Beach. Director, Joseph De Grasse. Length, 8,005 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Allegheny Briskow	Anna Q. Nilsson
Calvin Gray	Milton Sills
Barbara Parker	Alice Calhoun
Henry Nelson	Craufurd Kent
Buddy Briskow	John Roche
Tom Parker	Charles Sellon
Pa Briskow	Bert Woodruff
Ma Briskow	Josephine Crowell
Suicide Blonde	Cissy Fitzgerald

Calvin Gray, ex-soldier, arrives in the Texas oil fields. He meets the newly rich Briskow family and becomes involved in a medley of adventures, saves the Briskows from business ruin, rescues the son, Buddy, from a foolish marriage, revenges himself upon a perjured officer who caused his dismissal from the service and wins the love of Allegheny Briskow.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THE melodramatic pot boils over fiercely in this picture, providing appetizing, red-hot diet for those who prefer a compilation of lurid incident, physical combats, high-speed action and exciting, if somewhat improbable, situations, to films of a milder tone. "Flowing Gold" will in all likelihood prove satisfactory entertainment for the average audience. It is timely, both in location and theme, owing to the publicity given the Government oil scandals by the daily press.

A little prudent cutting would improve the feature. Too much footage is allotted to superfluous details which have no particular bearing on the development of the plot.

Money has been spent with a lavish hand on the production. There is an abundance of fine photography, the flood scene is a whooper of realism, with the oil burning on the waters, and the gusher going up in flames when struck by lightning. The rescue of the hero by his devoted sweetheart in the midst of this hurly-burly of furious Nature is a striking bit of melodrama, well staged and putting the thrill stuff over with great effect.

Milton Sills plays the hero with his customary dash and energy. Anna Q. Nilsson registers well in the role of Allegheny Briskow, Alice Calhoun is charming as Barbara Parker, Cissy Fitzgerald successfully portrays the adventuress, Craufurd Kent gives a good performance as the villain, and the support is adequate.

Play up the Government oil scandals in your exploitation, in featuring the story's theme. You can praise the picture as offering many thrills and a romantic love yarn. The leading players, Anna Q. Nilsson, Milton Sills, Alice Calhoun and Craufurd Kent should be prominently featured.

Hattie Harkness leaves her country home and becomes a maid in the Van Gore family. Spencer Van Gore inveigles her into a mock marriage aboard his yacht. Learning of the deception, she leaves him. Later, with her baby, she goes to the Van Gore home. Grant Van Gore falls in love with her. It transpires that her marriage was legal. Spencer's death leaves her free to wed Grant.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

NOT much out of the ordinary! "The White Sin" may render tolerably good service as a program attraction, in theatres where a frequent change of bill occurs its shortcomings will not matter greatly, but it does not measure up to entertainment standards of houses catering to critically inclined patrons.

In justice to Director William Seiter it must be admitted that he has performed the difficult task of shaping ancient, shopworn plot material into acceptable picture form, with good taste and judgment. A less intelligent, or an inexperienced producer would have become hopelessly bogged in an attempt to swing the story's familiar action out of a rut and keep its interest alive. But the astute Mr. Seiter, loyally backed by his competent players, has twisted and trimmed many a conventional situation until a fair degree of suspense is established and the net result is not bad.

The average screen follower always pities a heroine who is shown from the start as getting the worst of it, a fact scenario writers are well aware of and thereby governed in the moulding of their script. So, when Hattie Lou Harkness is first led a dog's life by a bigoted aunt, her claim to sympathy earns the O. K. stamp immediately. And, of course, when she is fooled by a mock marriage and driven to tell an untruth in order to provide for herself and baby, there is no fear that the audience will fail to pronounce the falsehood a justifiable one or be reluctant to share her burden of sorrows.

In the long run it turns out that the supposedly false marriage was the real thing after all, and Hattie's reputation is consequently untarnished. The villain is disposed of by having him perish in a convenient fire and this flaming episode is the big thrill of the picture. As a matter of fact, the fire scenes are splendidly handled and register as an unusually fine bit of camera work, providing an excellent climax.

Madge Bellamy plays the heroine role and gives a performance notable for its vivacity and emotional power. John Bowers is pleasing as the lover, and Hal Cooley impressively convincing in the disagreeable part of Hattie's bold, bad betrayer. The cast is a large one and the principals are well supported.

The title has a sensational sound and should prove helpful in exploiting the film. It refers to the subterfuge employed by the young mother in order to obtain shelter for herself and baby and suggests a catch-phrase asking whether a falsehood is not pardonable under such conditions. Play up the story's romantic trend and melodramatic phases, for your patrons who have a taste for such fare. The names of Madge Bellamy, John Bowers and Hal Cooley are worth featuring.

Jed McCoy is told by his father that the land he owns in the southern mountains is rich in coal. His father is slain in ambush and the deed to the land stolen. Jed suspects Groundhog Spence, whose niece, Emmy Lou, he loves. Outsiders try to buy the land, but Jed defeats their designs. After many adventures, he avenges his father and recovers the deed. Groundhog Spence is drowned. Jed marries Emmy Lou.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE'S a whole lot of genuine human interest packed into this picture, as well as suspense, melodramatic vigor and timely comedy relief. Director George Hill had a good working plot to start with, and the manner in which he handled this stirring tale of life among the Southern mountaineers is sufficient proof that he didn't overlook a single opportunity to make the most of its screening possibilities.

We'll say that he succeeded too! "The Hill Billy" is "classy" in every sense of the word, a drawing card the power of which should find cheerful reflection in the box office mirror of every theatre, great or small, where it is shown, also it presents Jack Pickford in a role for which he is eminently suited. In fact, the writer is willing to risk his opinion that the brother of "the only Mary" makes a more, definitely dramatic hit as Jed McCoy than in any characterization he has attempted on the silver sheet.

You right away get in sympathetic touch with these humble, untutored folk of the Kentucky hill regions. Their pleasures, feuds, quaint customs and readiness to fight at "the drop of the hat," all seem natural and convincing, because, somehow, they fit in exactly with their surroundings. And for this reason not one of the many tense, melodramatic situations which develop carries the slightest suggestion of exaggeration.

The conscientious work of a brilliant cast strengthens the sense of realism. Such scenes as the barn wedding, for instance, and the court trial, are as true to life as artistic talent can make 'em; punctuated with snappy thrills and shot through with flashes of peppery humor. The summary fashion in which the hill men dispose of the strangers who attempt to get possession of the coal lands, and Jed McCoy's furious scrap with the villain in a roaring torrent, which results in the well-merited drowning of the latter, are episodes aglow with sizzling action and wonderfully well filmed.

Indeed, the excellent photography counts heavily in the summing up of "The Hill Billy's" market values. Superb lighting effects abound, the mountain scenery is ruggedly impressive in its stern grandeur, and the skill with which long shots and closeups are executed deserves unlimited praise.

The love romance between Jed and Emmy Lou will appeal particularly to the women patrons, it so delicately worked in through the meshes of a plot in which spectacular action is predominant. Jack Pickford registers as a thoroughly capable lover, as well as a fighting chap whom nothing can daunt. His Jed McCoy is a regular fellow, a true son of the hills; and Emmy Lou, as portrayed by Lucille Ricksen, captures all hearts with her sunny smile and pretty ways. Frank Leigh scores as the ruffianly Groundhog Spence and splendid support is in evidence.

Exploit this as Jack Pickford's best picture up-to-date. Stress the story's romantic lure, its melodramatic strength, bright comedy and artistic photography. Besides the star, the names of Lucille Ricksen, Frank Leigh, Jane Keckley and Ralph Yearsley can be featured.

'HAPPINESS' FOR EVERYONE

Laurette Taylor Makes a Pleasing Picture from Ordinary Theme

HAPPINESS. Metro Pictures Corporation. Adapted from J. Hartley Manner's Stage Play of the Same Name. Director, King Vidor. Length, 7,700 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jenny Wreay Laurette Taylor
Fermoy MacDonald Pat O'Malley
Mrs. Chrystal Pole Hedda Hopper
Philip Chandos Cyril Chadwick
Mrs. Wreay Edith Yorke
Mr. Rosselstein Lawrence Grant
Sallie Perkins Patterson Dial

Jenny Wreay, the sole support of her mother, obtains work in a modist's shop. She is called upon to deliver several gowns to Mrs. Pole. Mrs. Pole, who is bored with life, becomes interested in Jenny philosophy of happiness and induces her to make her home in the Pole mansion, but Jenny tires of it and goes back to Brooklyn. She continues to cultivate the friendship of Mrs. Pole, who aids her in her efforts to own a modist's shop. Fermoy, an electrician, falls in love with Jenny and they marry. In several years Jenny is able to have a shop of her own and continues to spread happiness.

By LEN MORGAN

LAURETTE TAYLOR is her own peppy vivacious self in "Happiness" and her picture will please that large class that like clean, wholesome entertainment rather than thrills and gore.

The picture does not approach the standard of "Peg O' My Heart," but Miss Taylor radiates her personality to such an extent that one is willing to overlook a few shortcomings in the way of plot and exaggeration.

The picture is almost entirely devoid of plot and there are no outstanding situations. It is merely a series of incidents in the life of Jenny in which she gives her philosophy on happiness and how to attain it.

In several scenes the star becomes too exuberant and lets her pep get the best of her with a result that it is obviously overdone. In spite of the few flaws, however, the little Irish girl wins her audience with the same ease that she did as "Peg."

Pat O'Malley, an electrician and potential Edison, gives an excellent interpretation of an Irish lover.

Hedda Hopper, as Mrs. Pole, has a prominent part and she makes the best of every opportunity.

Miss Taylor's ability to spread sunshine and happiness is brought forward in this picture. However, were it not for the united efforts of an excellent supporting cast the picture would drop to the mediocre class, but with its strong support the story is developed into very pleasant entertainment.

Miss Taylor appears in practically every scene, and it is only through her efforts that the picture retains its value. Without her it would be worthless, but with her it is a good box office bet.

In exploiting the picture it would be well to play up heavily on the reputation of the star. Make it known that she is the famous Peg of "Peg O' My Heart" fame. Bluebirds, symbols of happiness, can be made of cardboard and used as lobby display, and in such towns and cities as have Happiness candy stores a good tie-up should be easily arranged.

Bud Watkins is in love with Betsy Burke. She shows a preference for Cocopah Kid, a bandit. Gambler Slade cheats Bud out of his ranch. The Cocopah Kid dies suddenly. Bud disguised as the bandit, has a variety of wild adventures. He defeats Slade's plot to gain possession of the newly discovered gold diggings, rescues Betsy from Slade's clutches and eventually wins the girl.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS is a typical Hoot Gibson Westerner which ought to please the many admirers of that energetic star and prove a valuable box office asset for the neighborhood and smaller theatres. Like most of the melodramas in which Mr. Gibson keeps things moving at a mile a minute clip, the picture balances its thrills and hair-breadth escapes episodes with a generous amount of lively comedy.

There is a savour of burlesque about the action which prevents the spectators from taking its serious moments too seriously, or stopping to reflect on the probability of the plot. Once you get interested in the varied, fly-by-night adventures of the hero in his impersonation of the Cocopah Kid, a peculiarly reckless sort of bandit, you won't stop to argue whether it's convincing stuff or the reverse. The point is that "Ride for Your Life" registers as amusing entertainment and will please that large majority of movie fans who like this sort of picture.

Bud, trying to serenade his willful mistress and being chilled in his outpourings of passion when she compares him unfavorably to the bad but dashing Kid, is a woefully comic figure. It is this freezing turn-down that drives him to heroic extremes and results in his assuming the gay outlaw's personality, after the latter passes suddenly away.

There is any amount of gun play, spectacular scrapping and hard riding. With the villainous Slade in control of the town and the heroine in his power, matters assume a grave aspect and here is where the resourceful Bud Watkins and his faithful pal, Plug Hanks, get busy and start a successful offense. One exciting situation overlaps another, with flashes of humor injected at timely intervals, and suspense cleverly maintained to the last.

Hoot Gibson is always thoroughly at home in roles like that of Bud Watkins, a versatile comedian, stunt-actor and lover, he works at top speed from the first to the final reel, earning the sympathy and liking of his audience. Laura La Plante figures as a very pretty and engaging heroine, Harry Todd, as Bud's pal, and Robert McKim in the part of gambler Slade, give excellent performances, the Western types are convincing and the support worthy of the principals.

The Western atmosphere is well developed, the photography including many fine exteriors and effective lighting. It is mostly out-of-door stuff, depicting cattle ranch.

You can safely exploit this as a slam-bang, bullet-dispensing, hard-riding Westerner, with romance, thrills and comedy dished up in a whirl of thundering action. Boost it as a Hoot Gibson winner and draw attention to the big cast, playing up the names of Laura La Plante, Harry Todd and Robert McKim.

Players We Know

IT'S better business for you to supply the film fans in your town with news items of the stars. Naturally they want the news and it turns their attention to your theatre. You can work it in conjunction with pictures you run. So to supplement the information in the recent "Players Number" and to keep your data on players up-to-the-minute, these columns are intended.

B

BETTY BLYTHE, who returned from Europe recently after completing "The Recoil," made in Monte Carlo, Nice and Paris, had not been in New York twenty-four hours before she was engaged by Christy Cabanne to play the leading role in "Plaster Saints," the screen adaptation of Frederick Arnold Kummer's story. Betty claims that she had but one day to select costumes for this picture and she leaves it to her sex if this wasn't the job of a super-woman.

HOLBROOK BLINN, ever to be remembered for his "Bad Man," has just been added to cast of "Janice Meredith." He will play the part of Lord Clowes. Mr. Blinn portrays a leading part in Miss Davies production of "Yolanda."

C

JACKIE COOGAN has accepted a story from the pen of Willard Mack. This is the first time Mr. Mack has written a role for a child, but when he saw Jackie in "Long Live the King" he made up his mind to dedicate a plot to him.

PEDRO DE CORDOBA wires from Havana that he feels very much at home there. Mr. De Cordoba, it will be recalled, is a Spaniard and on his maternal side, Cuban. He is very busy looking up relatives when he is not occupied shooting exteriors for the Tom Terriss' production, "The Bandalero."

D

A delegation of Pueblo Indians, on their way to Washington to protest before Congress against the move to suppress their tribal dances, visited MARION DAVIES, at the Biograph Studio, and adopted her into their tribe. It was the first time that Indians have ever been inside of a motion picture studio, and they were deeply interested in the filming of "Janice Meredith," story of the American Revolution in which Miss Davies is now engaged, and in which she is to star following her appearance in "Yolanda."

The silent drama woos more stars of the legitimate from their first love each day. This time it's HELEN DUBOIS who's played leading roles in the "Irene" company and "Oh Boy." She is to make her screen debut in Paramount's "Icebound."

F

FARINA, the unbleached American child who is a "she" in those delightful Our Gang Comedies, has arrived at the age where he wishes to claim his manhood. He (for that's just what Farina is) doesn't want to bother about "keeping that schoolgirl complexion" but does want to acquire pants and suspenders an' everything.

Having worn his hair long and unkempt for more than twelve months, DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS was privileged last week to hear the snip, snip, of the barber's scissors. And now the immaculate Douglas is himself again. The role he played as "The Thief of Bagdad" necessitated flowing Bagdalian locks. He and Mary Pickford are soon due in New York for the premiere showing of this picture. "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" will be ready about the same time.

JULIA FAYE is to please your fans once more and in a similar part of a "society cat" played in "Don't Call It Love," and "Saturday Night." This time it's in Cecil B. De Mille's "Triumph."

G

CORINNE GRIFFITH, whose new production "Lilies of the Field," has just been completed is now busy having her new Los Angeles home, purchased last fall, completely redecorated. She will make a short trip to her home in Texarkana, Texas, before beginning work on her next production which Mr. Edward Small, her producer, is now arranging for.

H

GEORGE HACKATHORNE who has played drug addicts and cripples so often, actually refused such a part recently. He had just finished the part of "Bibbs" in Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil," and announces his intention to stick to straight parts hereafter.

KENNETH HARLAN wants all the fans to know that he considers his performance in "The Virginian" his best, because it helped him convince film producers that he could really do something besides the conventional dress suit roles. Ambitious? And then some! He says, "A reviewer whose hand I would like to grasp wrote this:

"Harlan has been given too many thankless cake-eater parts. He finally has found himself."

L

When Maurice Tourneur gets out of the hospital and BARBARA LA MARR finishes "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," and Conway

Tearle completes his vacation and Albert Shelby Le Vino finishes the script, the picture of M. C. Levee's, "The White Moth" will be started at the United Studios.

Edith Allen is no more. All because that fair lady changed her name to HEDDA LIND out of respect to her Scandinavian ancestors. Hedda for "Hedda Gabbler" presumably and Lind because the famous Jenny Lind was a friend of Edith's grandmother. Hedda is a Rex Ingram "find." She was a cabaret artist in Chicago and New York before she played in "Scaramouche." This makes Hedda the tenth screen actress to date, of Scandinavian parentage.

M

Valentino has nothing on ADOLPHE MENJOU when it comes to satorial attire. While working in Warner Brothers' "Broadway After Dark," his wardrobe of sixty suits, eighteen pairs of shoes, walking sticks and whatnot—were pressed into service, as props. Can this be a trend of savings in studio costs? Some of this masculine splendor can be viewed in Warner's "Marriage Circle," just released.

O

When "Fools' Highway" is shown publicly, PAT O'MALLEY who plays the male lead opposite Mary Philbin, is expected to enter the ranks of stardom. Pat's performance in this picture, originally known as "My Mamie Rose," is declared by critics who have previewed the film, to be the most notable portrayal of his career and one of the outstanding characterizations of the current season.

R

Little JOBYNA RALSTON, leading woman for Harold Lloyd himself in "Why Worry?" and also in his forthcoming feature comedy for Pathe, temporarily entitled "The Girl Expert," was a stage dancer under the tutorage of the past master of zippy, actionful stage dancing, Ned Wayburn. So well did she respond to his coaching, that it was no time at all before she found herself the possessor of a small part in Cohan's musical comedy, "Two Little Girls in Blue."

The name of HERBERT RAWLINSON's current Universal attraction has been changed from its working title of "Virtuous Crooks" to "Stolen Secrets." This picture was made from a story by Richard Goodall and was directed by Irving Cummings.

S

Now that STRONGHEART is a full fledged star with a nice fat salary he's decided to step out. He and Mrs. Strongheart arrived in New York last week, checked their bags and hurried right over to the dog show. Shouldn't be surprised if Mrs. Strongheart were wishing by now that they had stayed to home—away from the wicked vampires on Dogshow Row.

JOSEF SWICKARD as Desnoyers in "The Four Horsemen" will long be remembered. Now he's to appear with Pola Negri in "Men," which Dimitri Buchowetzki is producing for Paramount. Here's a secret. He's praying to the high heavens he won't be murdered in this film.

Just how far reaching the results of a movie marriage may be, was proved when ETHEL SHANNON, admitted that two months ago she became the bride of Robert J. Carey, young Los Angeles insurance man. The wedding took place on the evening of the day Miss Shannon was the camera bride for Preferred Pictures' film version of "Maytime."

They deferred their honeymoon until work on the picture was finished.

'The Buccaneers'—Pathe

2 reels

Mickey captains these bold bad pirates and he's as hard as scrap iron—and almost as rusty! Let's hope the day will never come when, with an eye to impressing the fair sex, he tries to remove even one "rusty" freckle.

Fatty with his "chaw" of licorice and patched eye is delightfully funny. And there's the woman in the case, Mickey's girl. All the other pirates blame her when their ship refuses to float.

Marines and the crew aboard a U. S. warship are extras! They sight the pirate flag, haul the gang aboard and set them to work scrubbing decks. Of course every pirate ship carries a parrot and so does the gang's—but this bird proves he's modern by singing "Yes, we have no bananas."

This new Our Gang comedy is certainly up to scratch. It will prove 100 per cent entertainment, both for youngsters and grown-ups, who will live their childhood days over again—remembering how they, too, played at being pirates.

'The Ant Lion'—Educational

Secrets of Life

The ant lion otherwise known as the doodle bug, makes in interesting study due to its many peculiar habits, one of which is always backing into the sand (rather than head first) so as to be ready for its prey. Tolhurst, while dealing with a scientific subject has managed to present it in a highly interesting and sometimes funny vein. The titling is cleverly done and easily understood by the layman. If you have booked these before, you can judge their suitability to your patrons—and if they like them you can promise them that "The Ant Lion" is equally as entertaining as the ones that have gone before.

'Swing Bad, the Sailor'—Universal

2 reels

This time Billy Sullivan as Kid Roberts is appearing in an open challenge act in vaudeville while waiting for some title contender to appear. He knocks out Matt Larsen, tough mate of a schooner due to sail for China. In doing this he unwittingly wins the unrestrained infatuation of the Captain's daughter, and the hatred of Larsen. That night he is kidnapped and learns he must fight Larsen with his bare fists. Fay Tincher plays the part of the Captain's daughter and is just as funny as she ever was. Fans will remember and welcome her and it goes without saying that they'll be highly entertained by this corking good short. And by the way, let your patrons know that these series are adapted from H. C. Witwer's short stories running in the Cosmopolitan magazine. Such advertising will pull. Remember the value of author's and director's names.

'Getting Gertie's Goat'—Educational

2 reels

Dorothy Devore who, by the way, is to star in some new Christie feature comedies, portrays the flapper Gertie. She's determined to marry Jimmie (Jimmie Harrison) against parental wishes. Jimmie has the marriage license, tickets for the honeymoon and some traveler's cheques all ready for the elopement—but they are so excited that there are many slips, the last of which lands them both in jail.

Dorothy Devore's "pep" is contagious and all types of audiences will like this fast-moving, clean little comedy. No mistake in booking it—a certain laugh-provoking comedy.

it. Then follows action shots, some in slow-motion, of Sarazen's, Sweetser's, Jones', and Hagen's individual technique.

The "duffer who plays and pays" will get a good laugh from those who know nothing about the game as well as those who are devotees. One of the best of the series that can't fail to amuse all types of audiences.

There are comedy gags aplenty in this Century Comedy and Jack Earle's enormous height exaggerates the incongruous situations and comedy effects.

To a number of people Jack Earle's tremendous height is enough to provoke hearty laughter. That combined with some original gags marks this Century Comedy of averages entertaining value. Jack Earle and Harry McCoy are pals, both in love with sisters. Father's strenuous objections get them into all sorts of scrapes. The fade-out shows Jack in a maid's outfit and father trying to make love to him.

Poodles Hanneford, the clown comedian, is featured in this Tuxedo comedy. His pantomime as well as that of another character in this comedy, bearing the name of Bleary-eyed Bill "a bad egg," is superb and sure to be appreciated by the sort of audience that doesn't always appreciate slapstick.

Hanneford as the sheriff falls in love with a Spanish senorita but when he sees the new school teacher, education's the thing for him. A pickaninny and a dog figure in the case and all do their bit to rescue the teacher from Bleary-eyed Bill. Sure to get many hearty laughs and to hold the interest throughout.

SHOWMANSHIP

Compiling a Direct-by-Mail Advertising List

This is the Fourth and Concluding Article of the Series on Building More Business With a Mailing List

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

THREE previous articles on the subject of direct-mail developed in logical sequence the principles inherent in the production of copy which (1) created good will as a foundation for all future dealings between theatre owner and prospect; (2) sold the prospect on a definite program; (3) adapted to showman's individual needs the form and content of letters used with success by other exhibitors.

The fourth and concluding article on the subject brings up the oft-recurrent question, "How shall I compile my mailing list?"

Before answering this directly it might be well to state that the most important thing in determining the success or failure of a mail sales campaign is the mailing list itself. In most businesses, regardless of how careful a plan and its execution are worked out, unless a proper analysis of a mailing is made there is bound to be wasted effort through indiscriminate mailing. In other words unless a list includes only the types of prospects to whom a firm's proposition offers a real appeal and unless these prospects can follow desire with buying action, a mail campaign is a risky and expensive proposition.

In this respect the motion picture theatre man is thrice blessed. His logical field of patronage includes practically all families in his community in which at least one member is endowed with ordinary eye-sight and a weekly entertainment budget of twenty-five cents. It needs very little imagination to qualify the breadth and scope of a public that comes under such a classification.

Thus, even a house to house canvass in which the theatre employees take the names from letter boxes, would make a logical prospect list for the theatre owner, where the same procedure would be out of the question for a concern that can justify the expense of a mail campaign only when the prospects are worthy "hazards." In other words an automobile concern could very ill afford to pick names at random and expect the return on its campaign to justify its expense. The automobile can be sold only to a certain type of person—in whom essentially the financial qualification is assured. Analogously, a mail drive on the sale of vacuum cleaners would have to concentrate on a list of names which for the most part included housewives, hotels, boarding houses and the like.

The showman, fortunately, fires at a broader, closer target, no matter in which direction he aims. Every person in his neighborhood who isn't physically hampered in coming to the theatre, is a logical prospect. Thus, for him, clubs, associations, local officials, the city directory, Chamber of Commerce, tax lists, permit records, license records, building permits, registration lists, local papers (marriages, births, etc.) Y. M. C. A., Boy Scouts, the telephone book, public schools and high schools offer a variety of sources from which the desired names may be procured. After compiling the names, all that is necessary is for the showman to use his own judgment in eliminating the names of in the neighborhood. A more reserved method—and one just as efficacious — of getting names from a school is to offer a five-dollar essay prize, the contestants to enter their names and addresses at your box office. The nature of the essay or the prize is incidental, and need give no intimation of the name-and-address motive behind the stunt. You get these just the same, and a lot of good will to boot for promoting educational interest among the school children of your neighborhood.

Lobbyology

Merchandising Your Show

In simple terms merchandising is the exchange of one commodity for another. The exhibitor exchanges entertainment for its equivalent in money.

The modern method of merchandising is not to wait for folks to come to you. The slogan is: Go get them! Tell them! Show them!

Direct-by-mail advertising offers you a chance to merchandise your show the modern way.

The accompanying article tells you how to equip yourself for the task. Take the hint and watch box-office figures leap and grow.

those who reside too far from his theatre to be considered logical prospects.

A METHOD of procuring names of actual movie goers—that is, those who have patronized your theatre at least once is to run a slide to the effect that you understand that everyone has preferences in motion pictures and that often folks see pictures that disappoint them. Tell them that you would like to accommodate them by letting them know when a picture corresponds to their tastes. To do this it will be necessary to distribute blanks on which your patrons may write their names and addresses and their preference in pictures.

Another method is to get your local school board to endorse a Saturday morning educational child's program. At this showing announce that a prize will be given to the youngster who will bring to the box office the greatest number of names and addresses belonging to people

IT might be well here to give a few particulars concerning postal information, the knowledge of which will prove of value when the letters are ready for mailing.

If the envelope is sealed in such a manner as to prevent ready inspection of the contents without breaking the seal, two cents an ounce or fraction thereof is charged. This is called first-class mail.

Third class mail, the only other class with which the exhibitor is here concerned, embraces unsealed printed matter, and form letters on which a different name and address can be filled in on each letter and signature can be signed by pen without affecting the postage rate. The rate for this class is one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof.

On government postal cards, whether wholly or partly in writing, the postage rate is one cent. Printing must conform to regulations, otherwise letter rates will be charged. The local post office will furnish particulars as to the regulations mentioned. Folded advertising cards and other matter entirely in print, arranged with a detachable part as a post card, are mailable as third-class matter.

The last and final injunction on the mailing list proposition is to keep it up to date—in other words, free from dead matter, such as bad addresses; addresses of those who have moved and so forth. Postmasters are not required to return undeliverable third-class mail unless of "obvious value." They are supposed, however, to send you a notice. This is not always done.

To be assured of the return of all your undeliverable third-class mail, print in bold-face type "Return Postage Guaranteed" right under the stamp or under your name and address. This is more effective than to use the wording suggested by the post-office department, "If undeliverable please return after.....days. Postage for return will be paid upon delivery to sender."

Thus your list will be kept up to date and free from all dead matter. How well this list works out for building up community good-will and increased patronage for your house depends entirely on the sincerity, the personality, and obvious conscientious intent you instill into the all important two-cent carriers.

Title interest alone is almost sufficient to sell C. C. Burr's "Three O'Clock in the Morning." But the producers weren't satisfied to let the advertising power rest there. Thus the distinctive array of ads and suggestions herewith displayed, which gives the exhibitor very little over which to cudgel his mind.

THE TREND IN ADVERTISING AIDS

Based on a Check Up of What the Exhibitor Wants and Keeps on Wanting

By L. F. GUIMOND

Director of Advertising and Publicity Selznick
Distributing Corporation

THE proof of the effectiveness of advertising aids is in their continued use by exhibitors, big and little. We are past the day when men with no real knowledge of motion picture showmanship map out ideas and advertising that sound fine in press-books, but get the fishy eye from a dyed-in-the-wool theatre owner or manager at first glance.

The trend in the use of advertising aids is towards the more dignified ones, more time and care being put on these rather than in getting out freakish stunts and ideas. The conclusions reached here are not the result of personal choice or opinion, but follow from a careful check-up of what the exhibitor wants, and keeps on wanting.

There have been many complaints from exhibitors that the advertisements and other aids shown in the usual run-of-the-mine press book are not readily adaptable for their individual use. From newspaper clippings and other sources, however, a check-up of the material of this kind issued by the Selznick Company, showed that a surprisingly large percentage of the ads, publicity stories, production cuts, etc., of the Selznick campaign books were used in the newspapers.

The principles in the production of such usable material are very simple, and should be understood by the showman in order that he should get the greatest benefit from their use. Simplicity in the ads used comes first. Line-cuts of drawings are far preferable to half-tones for newspaper reproduction, and the exhibitor who passes by the drawing and picks out a photographic scene to use in his ad is on the wrong track in most cases.

The lettering in the title of the picture, known as the "billing" is more important than is generally known. It should be done at the same time as the drawing, and should be big enough, and striking enough and well-placed enough to get the maximum attention, without violating ordinary good taste.

This is the only lettering I include in the ad cut. For the advertising copy, a mortise should be allowed in the cut, of sufficient size to allow the showman to suit his individual needs and make his own choice of selling talk. On the art work, the appeal should be single—that is, don't try to crowd in too many scenes or ideas, which results only in confusion. The drawing itself should be as "open" as possible, with no shading, so that it does not clog up in printing.

Sometimes an exhibitor will spoil a good ad cut by the way he uses it. The chief fault is trying to crowd too much type in the space, so that the copy is set too small and has no white space to help it in an effective display.

Window display, slides and lobby cards are all important and effective as advertising aids. The store tie-ups, to be worth while, must present some interesting angle of the production, so that the attention attracted by the display will be naturally diverted to the theatre. Window cards are good if the picture is big enough to back them, but should not be used otherwise.

POPULAR SHOP GIRL CONTEST
PACKS LOEW'S TORONTO

"Only a Shop Girl," a C. B. C. picture which recently ran at Loew's Yonge Street Theatre in Toronto for a period of several days played to a capacity house at every performance and was declared to have been one of the greatest moving picture successes in that city for some time. This was in great part the result of the "Most Popular Shop Girl Contest" conducted at the theatre, which attracted the attention of thousands of people in Toronto, rich and poor alike, whose interest was avowed by the fact that over 50,000 votes were cast for the twenty prize winners, according to the "News Mirror."

Maggie MacMillan, a shop girl well over fifty years of age won first prize. Her age and poverty touched the heart-strings of those who knew her and an "over-flow" audience came to the theatre the final night to show their pleasure in this unique event where a lonesome hard working woman, who probably had enjoyed few pleasures in life was finally to experience a never-expected happiness in the form of popular acclaim, kindness and consideration, and last but not least, a one hundred dollar check.

On the night of the awarding of prizes there was a short picture to show a beautiful car "calling at the New Method Laundry to notify Maggie of her success, taking her home in style amidst the cheering ranks of her co-workers in the laundry, waiting for her to leave the humble house in which she lives, and arriving with her at the stage door and driving right on the stage with her."

"Here is Maggie herself," said the announcement. The curtain rose and sure enough the machine was on the stage with Maggie. A wonderful demonstration was accorded the winner by an audience that was obviously touched with this unusual sight.

The action of the Loew Theatre made a wonderful impression on the people who voiced their hearty approval, by sending many letters to the manager. What more could an exhibitor desire?

ADVERTISING AIDS

Universal pulls a big league advertising tie-up when it printed these milk bottle caps with the inimitable Baby Peggy's face smiling up at the milk drinkers. An aid to health and the exhibitor's box-office receipts at one fell swoop.

Curiosity Wins

In the belief that exploitation has to be varied constantly to retain public interest Schade reverted to "just plain talk" with explanations or adjectives when he showed First National's ASHES OF VENGEANCE at the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio. He announced it in advance as "the biggest attraction in Sandusky that week. All he mentioned after that was Norma Talmadge's name, the story adaptation and some of the characters.

He worked on public psychology by repeating this ad for several days before the opening, prefixing each bit of copy with a line as to how many days it would be before the picture reached his house.

Schade made one distinctive touch that shows how important it is for a theatre manager to be a part of his community and to know who's who. He saw the name of Kenneth Gibson in the cast. Knowing Gibson's real name and the fact that he was a Sandusky boy, with relatives in the town, Schade played this up. It built up extra attendance from those who knew Gibson and wanted to see him work on the screen.

Put Want Ads to Work

Press agents, take heart. There's still something new under the sun, and it was left for C. O. Haug, Metro exploiteer, to discover it for the campaign he put over with the Rialto theatre of Augusta, Georgia, for Buster Keaton's engagement in OUR HOSPITALITY.

On the surface it didn't appear to be more than a "Free Tickets to the Movies" stunt, with the Augusta Herald acting as host to its subscribers, but when for ten days before the showing of the Keaton picture the whole population of Augusta poured over the classified advertising columns of the Herald, to see each evening what five lucky subscribers had their names printed, entitled them to two free tickets, all of Augusta knew by the time the Metro picture opened that "Our Hospitality" was playing at the Rialto.

The paper scattered five names picked at random from their subscribers list over the classified page of each issue. That made it sure that their classified advertisers would benefit, as all the ads on the page necessarily had to be looked over to find the five lucky ticket-holders.

And in every issue for ten days the Herald carried on the front page a boxed notice, mentioning the Metro picture.

'Bargain Day' Gets Results

It cost money to "put it over," but R. H. Klock, of the Pittsburg (Kas.) Amusement Company asserts that a "bargain day" advertisement, much on the same order of a department store's ad, brought the business. The ad, about 9x6 inches, was headed by the wording, and put the picture over to big business.

"First Sale of Its Kind Ever Attempted." In the middle of the space, "Our First Clearance Sale" and "50 per cent. Discount" greeted the reader. In smaller type, all about the edge of the ad, were humorous and catchy lines, such as, "They tell me this sale will be a 'flivver'; What if it is; that's $465." The prices were 15 cents for adults and 5 cents for children and the stunt brought many new patrons to the theatre, Mr. Klock says.

Goldwyn Issues Valuable Press Hints

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan has issued another in the series of beautifully printed and helpfully prepared exhibitors' press and service books for its picturization of the old Owen Davis melodrama, NELLIE, THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL, directed by Emmett Flynn. The cover is a reproduction of the window card showing a full length figure of Claire Windsor as Nellie, with an inset which pictures the elevated train coming to a stop almost upon the figure of the girl bound to the tracks.

A distinctive note is lent to this book by the makeup of the inside front cover which tells the story of the play in checker-board fashion; a reproduction of the still in one square, with a printed paragraph on a red background in the square next to it.

A full page ad bearing the heading, "Intimate Life Secrets of the Model," is an audience-pulling affair, which will be found particularly valuable in the smaller towns.

The service book contains the usual colored reproduction of the posters, of the accessories, a page of live exploitation suggestions and four pages of newspaper publicity material and photographs.

Mae Murray Contest

Mr. Brown issues a theatre program which carries interesting items about pictures coming to the Astor. It has a circulation of thousands weekly among his patrons among whom it has assumed the role of a family organ. In this program Mr. Brown printed a picture of Miss Murray in character and in an accompanying story invited his patrons to guess what star the picture represented. Those who guessed correctly were presented with free admissions to the Astor to see "Fashion Row." The stunt attracted many hundreds of the Astor patrons

Library Stunt Should Win

Exhibitor Berry of the Gem Theatre, Lawrence, Okla., is utilizing the special photoplay edition of Emerson Hough's novel, THE WAY OF A MAN, in a rather novel way for the exploitation of Pathe's serial adaptation of this story, which the Gem Theatre will present.

Mr. Berry has purchased ten copies of the Grosset and Dunlap photoplay edition of the novel and plans to select ten residents of Lawrence to whom he will lend out the books for about three days. As soon as each one of the ten has finished reading the book and returns it to Mr. Berry, it will be passed on to another patron for his perusal. The Gem's manager expects he will have placed a copy of the book in the hands of practically every citizen in the town before his engagement of the Patheserial opens.

Mr. Berry's idea of a "Rotary Library" is especially adaptable to the small town where the exhibitor enjoys a wide acquaintance in the community.

Dollar Sign Attracts

Reducing the theme of a picture to a dollar sign for an effective lobby display was the manner in which the People's Theatre, Portland, Ore., made its public appeal on First National's THE WANTERS. The dollar sign was stuck up in the lobby. It was stuck up so prominently that all who passed could see. It carried its theme so forcibly that those who saw the sign left their dollars at the box office.

The main display consisted of a background panel of the trousseau bride and the dollar sign.

The obvious connection between the two carried the idea over. It was supplemented by a new array of poster frames that were attached to the dollars outside the theatre.

Thrill Contest Staged

One of the exploitation stunts suggested in the press book on IN SEARCH OF A THRILL, is a contest in which the theatre invites its patrons to send in reports of the greatest thrill in their lives. The winner of the most thrilling thrill is given some prize. This stunt gets newspaper space readily as it is a circulation builder of the highest type.

The Criterion of Oklahoma City, took this stunt to the papers and both played it up big. Forty dollars in prizes were given away, five dollars each day to the first winner and five dollars in tickets to the theatre to the second. The stunt lasted four days and attracted bigger business to the Criterion than at any time during the year. It caused general comment throughout the city and hundreds of people participated in the contest.

The picture set new records for the Criterion and the press book played an important part in the campaign.

ADVERTISING AIDS

When preparing advertising copy the exhibitor should use care in selecting material. In the use of cuts those showing action or strong emotional appeal are the pulling power. In the "Try and Get It" ad, shown above, one can immediately determine that the action will be swift and money the goal. In "Grit" it almost screams crooks and a moral. In "His Darker Self" one expects a hilarious comedy. The scenes which show the highlights of the picture should be displayed. Pictures are better than words to convey an impression. With the proper advertising a picture public can be pepped up to the point where they feel they simply must see the picture.

Make 'Em Look Up

Manager Field of the Garrick Theatre in St. Paul, Minn., ran Universal's super production THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME, during one of the coldest spells that cold city has ever experienced. It was so cold that people walked through the streets only when they were obliged to and then they buried their faces in their coat collars and looked at nothing but the sidewalk in front of them.

This presented a serious problem for Field. He must attract attention to passersby that he was showing "The Hunchback." All the signs and electric lights weren't of much use if the people wouldn't look up. Field had a huge bell installed under the marquee. His stenographer pushed the button every thirty seconds or so and just as often the passersby raised their heads from the interior of their coats and saw that "The Hunchback" was being shown at the Garrick and that it was the one picture they should not fail to see. The bell could be heard for blocks. By using other stunts suggested by the Hunchback exploiter Jay Barnes, Field had a wonderful showing at the end of the run.

Novel Press Book Idea

Something of a distinct novelty in press books is being gotten out by the Hodkinson Corporation for the Samuel Grand Production, TRY AND GET IT, starring Bryant Washburn and Billy Dove.

In size and in all general appearances, this press book will be almost a facsimile of The Saturday Evening Post, in which the story of the photoplay was originally published.

This similarity to the famous weekly periodical is carried throughout the entire book. The cover design is faithful in color and general make-up is startlingly like the familiar appearance of The Saturday Evening Post and the inside pages are exact duplicates of the distinctive type style and general aspect of the magazine's pages.

Toys Help Exploitation

One of the most attractive of the multitudinous exploitation lobbies to appear on First National's CIRCUS DAYS hails from the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.

Under the covering of a miniature tent all the animals of the circus were assembled. It was a regular toy store Christmas array for the children of Knoxville, many of whom traveled miles to see the parade.

The labor involved in getting up the display was tremendous; but the result more than repaid the manager. In word of mouth advertising and newspaper stories that one display obtained more patrons for the Riviera than any amount of money spent in other ways could have. Quick to recognize the pulling power of this lobby the theatre also had it mentioned in the newspaper advertising.

Strongheart Does His Bit

Strongheart, the film dog star, made his first show appearance at the New York dog show for the benefit of theatres that would show First National's THE LOVE MASTER. Despite the crop of pseudo-Stronghearts that have cropped up in various parts of the country since Strongheart made a name for himself in pictures, it is a fact that this is the first time that the canine star has allowed himself to be publicized by a personal appearance on a stage outside of the studios.

New York newspapers gave Strongheart immense publicity and photographic evidence of his attendance at the show. With the canine star was Lady Julie, his wife, featured worker, best adviser and sternest critic in "The Love Master."

The transfer advertising idea is original and one that will take with the public. Everyone is accustomed to seeing transfers and the wording on the one above will bring a chuckle. It is so much in line with the picture that it cannot help but bring results to the theatre that uses this method of advertising "Conductor 1492." Exhibitors should fall in line with this aid.

'Ponjola' Haircuts Popularized

Giving his patrons a PONJOLA trim right in the lobby of the theatre was the exploitation stunt put over on the First National attraction by assistant manager Vison of Loew's Vendome Theatre, Nashville, Tenn.

The stunt obtained its origin, of course, from Miss Nilsson's heroic feat in having her hair amputated to do the double male-female role.

A "beauty" shop was rigged up in the lobby of the theatre. Manager E. B. Fain secured the services of one of Nashville's best beauty parlor experts. During the week's run there was a strong demand for the "Ponjola" hair cut supplied free.

The innovation scored by its novelty, was publicized by the papers and got even more business than a personal appearance would have done. The beauty parlor stand, incidentally, was inside the theatre, past the ticket man and not in the outer lobby.

Mailmen Co-operate

Putting behind THE MAILMAN, the full power of their great national influence among the laboring classes, the leading postal authorities of the West Coast have sent broadcast to postmasters throughout the nation a letter asking them to get behind the Johnson picture and boost it to the limit of their capacity.

More than twenty names of the foremost postal workers of Los Angeles appear on the communication. They praise the Johnson production not only for its tribute to the mail workers, but for its strong entertainment potentialities.

Clever Cut-Out Arrangement

A very ingenious device to play upon public appeal was used in the lobby dressing of First National's POTASH AND PERLMUTTER at the Hamilton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa.

The miniature stage constructed in the center showed Potash and Perlmutter in telephone booths at each end. In the center a cut-out and centerpiece of models from the production were used. Above were two streamers of ribbons, representing telephone wires that connected the conversation of the two partners.

Their "line" consisted of witty sayings, notably the subtitles for the picture.

Old Fashioned Waltz Week

In making a tie-up with the local dancing parlors and other places of amusement in Portland, Oregon, as well as in the surrounding towns, A. A. Bruce of Film Booking Offices is arranging a "Bring Back the Old Fashioned Waltz Again" week to take advantage of the interest being shown by the public in Theatre Owners production of AFTER THE BALL. He is using a new orchestra arrangement of the popular old Charles K. Harris song to induce the musicians to co-operate with him in putting the idea over and also make "After the Ball" the predominating waltz played for all public dancing during the week. Mr. Bruce is also using the new edition of the song with the star of the photodrama appearing on the cover to get special window displays in the stores that handle sheet music.

Baseball Fan Bait

The Kansas City American Association baseball club arranged a deal with Pathe this week, which is considered a "gilt-edge" advertising plan. The club left Wednesday night for the Pacific Coast to do spring training. A reel, consisting of 200 feet of "cut outs" of the high spots of the 1923 season with the ball club, taken at various times last summer, will precede the club a week in each of the towns where exhibitions are scheduled to be played, creating advance interest on the part of fans.

Paramount Tried and Proved Advertising Aids

When the paper on Paramount Pictures leaves the shop it carries with it solid-as-rock, guaranteed-to-sell advertising aids. Here are samples of a wide variety of selling talks each one of which carries its own message. It is these ads that have been largely responsible for the success of these pictures whose box office records have placed them among the foremost Tried and Proved Pictures. Since these ads have proved their pulling power they have earned a place for themselves as Tried and Proved Advertising Aids. Exhibitors booking these pictures will find the use of these ads in conjunction with the showings an immeasurable help.

THE perfect ad tells its message at a glance. Note that each of the above samples strikes the dominant note of the story. It is immediately perceptible, for instance, that "Is Matrimony a Failure?" is a mirthful comedy, just as surely as "Ruggles of Red Gap" is an old time thriller; "Her Gilded Cage" the story of a dancer; "To Have and to Hold" a stirring romance. The pictures tell the stories. The printed matter adds a few of the details and helps create the desire to see the film.

'Brass'

Marriage Drama Released by Warner

BRIEF: A young man born in the country leaves the farm to engage in business in the city. He marries for the first time when he is still very young, finds the match a failure, gets a divorce and starts life again. The hopelessness of life as far as happy marriage is concerned, soon forces itself on the young man whose only brief period of happiness is enjoyed while he is living with a woman who really loves him and sacrifices her life for him.

WHEREVER this picture has played in the many months since its first release it has been eminently successful and has caused much comment there being a great number who agree with the opinions of the author while just as large numbers disagree with him.

Besides the great big tie-up that comes from the book which had a large sale before the picture appeared and after it was released, there have been devised a number of advertising aids that should materially aid in selling the picture to audiences for either the first time or a repeated showing.

There is the novelty herald made to resemble a jeweler's ring box. One side of the herald shows the plain wedding ring in the box, with merely the words, "Is your wedding ring of 'Brass'?" printed on the inside cover. The reverse side bears the name Warner Brothers in the cover, and in the box itself is printed the message: "A powerful screen re-creation of the popular novel by Charles Norris in which the golden glamour of matrimony turned to the tinsel tarnish of 'Brass.'"

Another novelty is a two color sticker which is a replica wedding ring on which is printed a message very similar to that in the herald. These have been designed for use on all mailing matter as well as for sticker purposes on packages leaving stores and such.

Interest arousing in its novelty is the fake marriage license which has been designed in imitation of the real marriage license, and the decree of divorce also in imitation of the original. These used as heralds having the name of the theatre on the reverse side have proved very clever in arousing interest in the production and in starting word to mouth advertising that has proved very helpful in all communities.

There has been arranged by Warner Brothers a big national tie-up with the "Life Saver" Candy Company of which every exhibitor who books "Brass" is at liberty to take advantage. Full particulars as to the details of the scheme can easily be gotten either by communicating with the Warner Company or by reference to the press book in which the entire plan is outlined.

'Dream Street'

Dramatic Comedy Released by Associated

BRIEF: Gypsy Fair, a young dancer, is forced through circumstances to live in the London Limehouse district and to associate with the other residents there. Through her courage and loyalty she is forced into numerous hazardous situations from all of which she emerges untarnished. Finally she marries the man she has reformed and finds true happiness with him.

THE best bet for this production, which has been successful for a considerable length of time in a very wide variety of houses, is increased advertising and bill posting. The picture is pictorially extremely attractive and you should have no difficulty in getting some of its beauty into the ads in such a way as to crowd your house at every performance.

In New York when the picture was presented at the Town Hall, privilege was obtained from the Board of Aldermen, to change 43rd Street on which the theatre is located,

Tried and Proved

Advertising Aids

A LARGE part of the success of Tried and Proved Pictures can be directly attributed to advertising! It is not enough to put a good picture on the market. It must be backed up by sound advertising if it is to do big things at the box office.

Producers of Tried and Proved Pictures have placed good pictures in the hands of exhibitors, and with them have gone advertising ideas that sell.

Every Tried and Proved press book fairly bristles with clever and unusual advertising aids. There are accessories, heralds, posters, newspaper mats, unique novelties of a wide variety, all of which have thrust the picture directly before the public eye with an irresistible appeal.

These advertising aids have sold the picture. They have been the means of letting the public know that a good picture is in town. They have been a real factor in elevating Tried and Proved Pictures to the high place they have attained.

When you book a Tried and Proved Picture you let yourself in for a broadside of Advertising Aids to "Dream Street," and at all intersections the sign "Dream Street" was posted. This created a great deal of comment and it can be done easily in any community.

Choose some brilliant color to light the exterior of your theatre. Make it an unusual color, if possible, and then flood the interior of the house with the same color. In New York the theatre management advertised that the theatre was located on 43rd Street, or Dream Street. At the Light of the Great Red Flare.

On the roof of the theatre they set off tremendous amounts of red lights, each evening, which attracted a great deal of attention. This idea could be used in any theatre anywhere, with whatever lights would best suit the purposes of the individual exhibitors.

As further advertising aids there are the posters and cut-outs which suggest the atmosphere of the picture and should be used in reproduction in newspaper and window ads as well as for decorating the lobby. These with details of the various novel ways of using them may be procured at any of the several United Artists' exchanges.

Billboarding is another form of advertising to which you should give studied attention when considering the exploitation of this picture. Arrange for as much space as you feel you can afford and procure the most striking lithographs so that they catch the eye immediately. These can be made even more unusual by substituting cut-out figures for the painted figures and attaching them to the background so that when the wind blows they will move. This animated appearance will certainly attract many an eye and cause favorable comment.

'Foolish Wives'

Foreign Intrigue Released by Universal

BRIEF: "Count" Sergius Karamzin, an adventurer, and two supposed cousins lease a villa in Monte Carlo where they cultivate the friendship of the American envoy, Mr. Hughes, and his wife. The Count swindles Mrs. Hughes and makes love to her. It is then that Mr. Hughes discovers that the trio are fakirs and he plans to take action when the Count is killed by a counterfeiter whose daughter he has attacked. A reconciliation is finally effected between the husband and wife.

SINCE the first release of "Foolish Wives," Erich Von Stroheim has scored many notable successes which have added tremendously to his popularity among movie goers. Whereas at one time his name meant no more than that of any other director, now it acts as a drawing card.

This then is another reason why "Foolish Wives" should find easy and extensive bookings in territories where it has not yet played or where it will readily stand a second run. At its first release the picture was a decided success and there is every reason to believe that it will be even more patronized now that the director has a larger following.

Its previous record of bookings is perhaps the best testimonial that could be urged. To date the picture has been booked 5800 times and has played every large and important circuit in the country.

Of course, this record was not achieved merely because of the merit of the picture. No picture can run along on that alone. Wherever it went it was backed by an exploitation campaign that represented a dynamo of energy. Such a variety of stunts have been used to bring the picture to a smashing success it is scarcely to be wondered at that it has become so well known.

One suggestion is to arrange a tie-up with a local merchant of high grade women's wear using the name as the connecting link, in this respect: Have an attractive display of up-to-date clothes with pictures of stars in their most elaborate gowns as a background. Then there should be a conspicuous sign reading: "Women of judgment shop here, 'Foolish Wives' go elsewhere and pay more for less."

Another good line of approach is to suggest the Monte Carlo atmosphere in the lobby display. It is against the law to operate a roulette wheel but you might get special permission to do so in the interests of charity. Arrange with some charitable organization to have them operate a roulette wheel in the lobby of the theatre, its sole purpose being, apparently to get money for a good cause. But it will at the same time prove good advertising for you.

You might dress the theatre attendants like French gendarmes and have the man operating the wheel attired in full evening dress of the type affected by Frenchmen in that position. The lobby should be lavishly plastered with posters and stills on which the name of the picture is very prominent and plenty of space should be devoted to a description of the Monte Carlo scenes which directly tie-up the picture with the wheel.

madge, who is a most appealing comedienne, are probably entirely responsible for the very obvious popularity of this film since its first release on October 15, 1922.

The picture has played in large cities and in small towns and has met with equal success in both places since romance always finds a wide appeal and a popular actress like Constance Talmadge has a ready made following.

The best way to sell "Romance and Arabella" is by means of advertising that stresses the story element and the name of the star. The newspaper ads besides carrying a humorous cut or two should quote lines from the titles which will concretely suggest the theme and atmosphere of the story. The production cuts which have been prepared by Selznick for this purpose suggest the highlights of the story and should be generously used.

Plenty of lobby posters should appear outside the theatre and in the lobby while the name of Constance Talmadge should be made prominent wherever possible. Play up, too, the name of Monte Blue, who is also fast becoming a very popular star and who has a considerable following.

As a special advertising aid there have been prepared a series of multi-colored slides announcing the coming of the picture to your theatre.

These are for sale at the various exchanges and should be used a week or two before the showing to stir up an advance interest. You might also try getting up a special handbill in the form of a plain postcard. The card should be addressed to "Dear Arabella" and should be signed "Bill." Have these widely distributed in the neighborhood and have each carry a special catchline, being sure, however, that each arranges for an appointment at your theatre at a definite time.

Moreover, since this picture is a revival, the Selznick publicity department has been concentrating on it with the same care that they put on a new picture with the result that the picture has been retitled, re-edited and equipped with an entirely new line of advertising accessories which should help the exhibitor launch the picture as though it had never been shown before.

"Her Gilded Cage"

Love and Sacrifice Released by Paramount

BRIEF: In order to support a crippled sister and cure her if possible, Suzanne accepts a position as a cabaret dancer. An American traveling in Paris falls in love with her, but when he learns of her profession he will have nothing to do with her. Broken hearted she comes to America and meets his brother who falls in love with her, too. He is warned that the girl is not worthy, but disregarding his brother's warning, he continues in his course. When it is finally discovered that she is doing all this for her sister everything ends happily for all persons concerned.

A SERIES of dramatic incidents culminating in a scene where the truth is at last learned, and the cripple is miraculously restored to health, give the exhibitor splendid material to harp upon when he books or re-books this very successful Gloria Swanson feature. It should help him to duplicate the success a great many others have had on this very popular story so well enacted by the publicly-adored star.

A variety of single column cuts have been arranged for which suggest a very pertinent form of advertising. These cuts are all of Gloria Swanson in a variety of different poses and may be advantageously used with just a pertinent line or two and the name of the theatre. These should appear in the local newspapers and if possible arrange for some sort of a news story on the picture to appear on the same page.

Another means of getting advertising attention is through a special herald which pictures Gloria Swanson in her cabaret costume stepping out of the door of her gilded cage.

This is done in several colors and should immediately attract the eye. The inside pages carry a brief poignant sales talk which should help the exhibitor to get the interest of the public. Plenty of space has been left on the back cover to allow for the name of your theatre and the date of showing.

Then there is the personal invitation which gives tone and dignity to any campaign. These can either be used in connection with a select mailing list or as a herald or throw-away. Like any other formal invitation it is printed on plain white stock and bears the message: "Miss Gloria Swanson invites you to step into 'Her Gilded Cage' any afternoon or evening next week at the..... Theatre and assures you a cordial welcome and a most enjoyable showing of her newest Paramount Picture. De Luxe music. Other features."

There are also a brilliant collection of colored postcards in lobby and window size all of which emphasize the theme of the picture and are at the same time extremely decorative for any purpose you might choose.

'The Lesson'

Marriage Drama Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Helen Drayton, bored with her small town sweetheart, elopes with an architect from the city. He allows her very little money, though he spends a great deal on himself. She supports herself secretly by doing interior decorating. She finds he is being unfaithful, leaves him, secures a divorce and marries her former sweetheart who has also come to the city.

PERHAPS no role better fits charming Constance Talmadge than that of the unsuspecting, betrayed wife and as Helen Drayton she gets plenty of opportunity to make the most of her role. Her wholesome charms are delicately becoming to the lovely country sets and the modest city apartment with the result that "The Lesson" is an entirely refreshing and delicate play.

It is the sort of "sweet picture" that goes over big with the average audience and this one is by no means an exception in this respect. Moreover, it numbers Tom Moore and Walter Hiers among the cast which nicely rounds out the pulling power of the film.

Exploitation which plays up the names of the three stars in advertising, lobby displays and ballyhoos will carry the film over with flying colors. Here's a chance to put over a picture that you know is good.

The interior decorator will probably fall right in with a plan to tie-up with you and you couldn't ask for anything more pertinent. Get him to arrange a window display featuring Constance Talmadge in various scenes from the picture, especially those in which she is engaged in her interior decoration work.

You might also try a teaser ad campaign with such lines as "Old loves like old friends, are best. When you've learned this you've learned 'A Lesson.' A friend in need, is a friend indeed." Any number of these can be used to fit the circumstances.

As for a street bally, one can easily be arranged which will be cheap yet effective. Hire a small open truck and put several chairs on it. In these have several small children. In the front should be a black board on which are written sums. A man dressed like a country school teacher could pretend to be conducting the class. On all sides of the truck should be signs announcing the coming of "The Lesson" to the..... Theatre. This driven through the more crowded streets is sure to start a lot of chatter and will help the exhibitor duplicate the success which others have had with this picture which was originally released July 21, 1923.

You know you will make money on these pictures!

They have been tried and proved real money-makers at box offices throughout the country

'Colonel Heeza Liar'

Cartoon comedies have shown in the past two years or so that they are a very popular form of entertainment. They no longer serve merely to fill in on a program but they have become a feature in themselves.

The Bray "Colonel Heeza Liar" series, based on the human weakness of exaggerating, is an extremely humorous but of entertainment and audiences have now come to look forward to them with a great deal of anticipation. These films are no longer in the experimental stage. They can and do get the laughs. They are Tried and Proved Comedies, as are the other Bray shorts which include the Bray Magazine and Bray Nature Pictures.

"The Law and The Woman"

Murder Mystery Released by Paramount

BRIEF: A newly married man who has told his wife of his past relations with a professional vamp, is held for the murder of his ward who claimed to have been married to the vamp. It is this woman's evidence which is responsible for his conviction and he is to be executed. His wife's faith in him never wavers and finally on the day of the execution she obtains his exoneration by means of a confession from the vamp, who is the real murderess.

A FINE, stirring court trial is the real big highlight of this very successful murder mystery which features Betty Compson in the leading role. Aside from the popularity of the star, the picture itself is engaging both in the story and in the manner in which it is told and has proven itself a good box office attraction in communities of various sizes.

For purposes of exploitation there have been prepared several colorful slides which, if used for a week or more before the showing, are almost sure to interest the patrons of your theatre.

Then there is a fine collection of large lobby photos which if used with the gilt frames which are available will make a very pretty lobby effect.

Letters and post cards carrying the message that the picture is to appear soon at your theatre, may be had at the exchanges and should prove valuable for use in connection with your mailing list. Or they might just be distributed like heralds or handbills and in that way they will get wide circulation in the neighborhood.

Titles taken from the film should prove real good catchlines for any number of uses. Several of these under one of the highlight scenes should make an attractive window card.

The title suggests newspaper features in the form of debates relative to woman's place in the government, her ability as a lawmaker, the advisability of having women on the jury, and the like. This sort of thing always gets a rise out of the public and you can work right in with it by running ads on the same page as these articles appear on. You might even announce that you will run some of the more poignant arguments on the screen before the showing of the picture. This you can easily do with the use of slides.

'Hunting Big Game in Africa'

Adventure Story Released by Universal

BRIEF: An account of the three-year trip of the Snow African Expedition, constitutes this story. What happened to the company, how they lived and hunted, what the hunt netted them, the hardships they encountered, the dangers they escaped, are the thrilling incidents which make not only a remarkably entertaining picture, but an educational one as well.

SINCE the great bulk of the population of this country and every other country, must depend on books and pictures for its knowledge of other lands and other peoples it is not to be wondered that a film which pictures an African expedition just as it happens, should demand the interest of vast numbers of people.

Soon after its release it became known that "Hunting Big Game in Africa" was the sort of adventure picture which could take an audience out of itself and carry it to the very shores of the land of the elephant. The first audience to see the picture carried stories of its merit to others which has resulted in a wide spread mouth to mouth publicity campaign which has made the picture tremendously popular.

The tone of the picture and its adventurous atmosphere have been caught in the startling fine lobby card and billboard posters which have been prepared for the use of exhibitors. These used in connection with a display of animal heads, skins and the like would certainly do much to throw the theatre into the limelight.

A number of single column cuts each one representing some different African animal are available for newspaper advertising. This is good method to employ in creating interest in the picture. Probably most of the readers have never seen or even heard of most of these animals and there will be awakened an interest to get some knowledge concerning them.

The more pictorial the ads can be made, the larger the space you use, the greater will be the attention you will get. For all ad purposes there are available at the Universal exchanges, mats of various sizes and designs and they can readily be procured and used to advantage.

'The Abysmal Brute'

Brute Love Released by Universal

BRIEF: An uncouth brute of a prize fighter is finally brought to an appreciation of the finer things by the force of a girl's love. He wins her esteem and puts the final clamps on her affections when he forcefully carries her off and marries her.

NOTHING stands as such a convincing testimonial of the drawing power of a picture as the past record of that picture. In this connection this film ranks among the foremost. Many exhibitors who originally booked the picture for a three day run were forced to hold it over for a week (and even two weeks in the case of the Randolph Theatre in Chicago and the Pastime in Youngstown), to satisfy the public demand. And every report that has come in has been of splendid business.

The best sort of advertisement is that carried in the news columns of the local papers. If you can get the paper to carry a story, you will immediately create interest in your showing. Try this method. After carefully considering which newspaper man can do you the most good, approach him with the following tie-up: Suggest that, for a certain period, beginning three days or a week before your engagement, and continuing until its close, the newspaper run a "Every Reader a Reporter" column. Ask the question: "Do you know an 'Abysmal Brute'?" If you do, tell the News about him; where you met him; what he did; why he was so called; if it represented his true character; was he so called, etc." One dollar should be paid for every story published in these columns. For the best story published up to a certain date, offer a prize of newspaper subscriptions of admission tickets to the theatre.

You will be delighted with the amount of publicity a stunt like this will give your showing and with the number of people who are drawn to the box office by a curiosity to find out what it is all about.

Another fertile stunt is to use the throw-away cut of the scene in which the Abysmal Brute carries off the girl. If very little printed matter is used in connection with this cut it will take the form of a teaser and you will soon have folks asking what it's all about. Then when you announce the showing of the film you will find you have won a waiting audience whose curiosity has been roused by the appearance of the throwaway.

'Main Street'

Small Town Life Released by Warner

BRIEF: A young city girl with advanced ideas marries a small town doctor, gentle but crude, and goes to live in a backwoods burg. Her irritation at the small talk and petty incidents which make up the lives of these people, finally culminate in her leaving home and going to work as a government clerk in Washington. After a time her husband follows her there and there is a reunion.

WHEN Sinclair Lewis' book first appeared on the market it created a sensation in literary circles, a sensation that not only confined itself to that circle but spread out and attacked everybody, everywhere. The book became one of the most popular novels of many a year and rolled up an accumulated sales that were staggering in their proportions.

Following close on the appearance of the book, came the picture and it was taken up with as much fire and enthusiasm as its predecessor. Everybody was interested in seeing "Main Street" on the screen to find out how it compares with the book. The result has been an overwhelming amount of popularity which has necessitated prolonged showings and rebookings.

Of course, there are no end of fertile ideas in the matter of exploiting this fifth. And there are an especially large number in the line of advertising aids. For instance there has been prepared a novelty paper bag, waterproof and good for shopping or any other purpose. You could arrange with one of the local stores to distribute these to customers. By allowing him to have an ad on one side of the bag, and your keeping the other side for an announcement of the showing at your theatre, you can arrange to have him carry half of the small expense involved. Moreover every bag that goes out into the street is a walking advertisement for your showing.

Then there is the novelty door knob hanger made to resemble the special screen edition of "Main Street." The sight of the book will immediately attract notice and what is more it will be seen by everybody if you have them hung on store doors, outside house doors and the like.

Another means of getting publicity through advertising is by the use of the "Main Street" puzzle which has been prepared by Warner. It is just a novelty but once the kids get hold of them they will become immediately interested and give the things great circulation as they pass them from child to adult to see if others can solve it.

The Main Street lamp-post sticker is also another means of getting folks talking. These are replicas of the top of the lamp and have the words "Main Street" printed on them in the place where it appears in the actual lamp. You can get kids to go out and stick these in every available spot around the neighborhood so that every place a person walks he will see "Main Street" before him.

There is also available a cut-out arrow in one corner of which is a perspective of Main Street. Across the arrow appears the words: "This way to 'Main Street' (a Warner Brothers' Classic of the Screen)." Then at the bottom appears the name of the theatre. These should be placed at various vantage points and should be so arranged that they all point in the direction of the theatre.

As Temperamental Diva Nita Naldi Amuses

'Don't Call It Love' Has Good Cast, Story Interests

NITA NALDI, as the vamp, shows you the real meaning of the love affair—or we should say love affairs, for they are varied and many. For Rita Coventry, the opera singer can sing so much better if she is in love, so whatever new man happens to catch her fancy she adopts as a lover." In this way, the critic on the Chicago Post explains the story to his readers and it explains why the film found such favor as an amusing, light, picture. He continues:

There are many clever lines in the picture, with a slap here and there at the men that causes them to laugh, and also a few sly digs at the women at which the men also laugh.

The reviewer for the Philadelphia Public Ledger takes exception to the handling of the story. He says:

The production follows Mr. Street's highly entertaining story in rather a sketchy manner. Parrish, of course, returns to Alice after the prima donna wed the former piano tuner and all ends most happily on all sides without a ripple of excitement. It would appear that the casting director and the scenario writer were a bit at fault.

Likewise, the Kansas City Star's reviewer finds fault, pointing out that "Nita Naldi in absurd gowns and headdresses, is rather convincing nor good to look at." However, the Baltimore Sun's critic is very much taken by the story as says:

If you don't like this show you're hard to please. Nita Naldi is the star and if you can picture anything better than Nita as Rita, go ahead and picture it; we can't.

The St. Louis Dispatch reviewer has high praise for Rod La Rocque, claiming he is "different." "This film actor has a distinct—one might say unfair—advantage over most of them. He is not at all pretty, which is a large part of his advantage. He is a quick-acting person, one never knowing just what he is going to do next, which is not always the case in a movie story," he says.

And last but not best, insofar as favorable comment is concerned, we quote the New York Times criticism.

The story is splendidly told, and at the last fade-out one feels the same as one does after finishing a good book—sorry it has come to an end...Mr. De Mille has not made a single slip, and he has been unusually successful in eliminating the standardized acting and making these screen players, most of them celebrities, realize the true value of characterization.

Mae Tinee on the Chicago Tribune likes Agnes Ayres work in this picture better than anything she has done before, saying:

Agnes Ayres is going to be a real actress if she can repeat often enough on the good work she does in this picture. For once these is the ring of sincerity to her characterization... Miss Ayres is not, however, the main-spring of the piece. She may be classed as a necessary asset. The author and director just must have her that the story which is told and the moral that is pointed shall be pointed.

The reviewer for the New York Tribune doesn't like the gowns Miss Naldi wore but the reviewer is satisfied that:

The picture is extremely amusing and extremely well done, and if we hadn't seen the play we should not have known that it could be better than it is. The cast is all-star, for, besides Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt and Nita Naldi, Rod La Rocque is seen as Patrick, Theodore Kosoff as Luigi Busini, Robert Edison as Van Courtlandt and Julia Faye as the friend who gave Alice such good advice.

MR. SAWYER'S special production for Associated Pictures is Robert Service's "Shooting of Dan McGrew," Barbara La Marr, Lew Cody, Percy Marmont, Mae Busch and George Siegmann are the stars featured in this play.

HARRY BEAUMONT who directed Vio.a Dana in five Metro pictures last season and is now directing her in "Don't Doubt Your Husband." Mt. Beaumont directed John Barrymore in Warner Bros.' "Beau Brummel" soon to be released.

Lively Constance Makes This Film 'Live'

First National's Production 'Dangerous Maid' Pleases

THE DANGEROUS MAID is from the story by Beth Ellis and as the reviewer for the Los Angeles Times says:

The plot is ingenious, and includes all the kidnappings and fencing matches usual to costume plays. . . . There are spots in the story a little difficult to figure, but far better than a lagging tale. The photography by Glen McWilliams yields one ravishingly beautiful picture after another, both interiors and exteriors.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer's reviewer is satisfied that "Constance does very well in her role; is best when she can laugh at her pursuers. Conway Tearle plays the heroic captain a little too earnestly. . . . The supporting cast does well."

"Don't get the idea that because it's costumed, the screen's most fascinating 'nut' is sobered to any extent. She is just as much a tomboy back in 1685 as she is today." In this way Q. E. D. of the Baltimore Sun expresses his approval of Constance Talmadge's performance and the picture as a whole. The critic of the Cincinnati Tribune says in part:

Constance Talmadge in "The Dangerous Maid" did not look dangerous but she succeeded in striking terror into the hearts of some of those old English court schemers.

Harriette Underhill of the New York Tribune says, "It is exploiting Constance in a 'serious role' . . . If this is a serious role then we have a perverted sense of humor. . . . The man we liked best was Judge Jeffreys. His name is Otto Matiesen, and we should like to see him again soon."

He was so attractive that we wondered how the dangerous maid ever was going to resist him. . . . In his black, bobbed wig he looked just like Pola Negri in "The Spanish Dancer," and any one who looks like Pola needs no further recommendation.

She continues, "The whole picture is well acted, for, besides the excellent work done by the star and Tearle and Gerrard, there are Morgan Wallace, Marjorie Daw, Kate Price, Tully Marshall, who, by the way, we have liked ever since he was our stage director in "The Stolen Story."

'Name the Man' Called Powerful Drama

Seastrom's Direction of This Goldwyn Feature Praised

IF you care only for masterpieces in photoplays, then see "Name the Man." It is a picture which you will not soon forget. Among the exclusive list of really great films it ranks very high." So says the reviewer on the Chicago Post. The Washington Herald critic also terms it one of the best offered and says in part:

Seastrom has kept the spirit of the original story and added to it that touch of pathos and drama for which his Swedish pictures are noted. . . . The courtroom scene, which is one of the intensely dramatic incidents of the story, calls for some of the greatest emotional and dramatic acting which has ever reached the American screen. . . . The settings are all the quaint villages and century-old castles of the Isle of Man.

The Dallas News reviewer gives the highest praise possible, saying, "Action is well high faultless, photography is superb and the direction is masterful. Hall Caine's tense and dramatic double romance of "The Isle of Man," with the tragic climax lends itself admirably to picturization." Concerning the acting the New York Times reviewer says:

Aside from Conrad Nagle the others in the cast are good characterizations. the performance of Miss Busch deserving special tribute. Those who like to see the harrowing experiences of a girl who is the victim of the scion of a distinguished family may enjoy this picture. . . . There are some remarkable exteriors faithfully constructed and the crowd scenes have been handled creditably.

The New York Tribune critic took exception to this presentation. "Victor Seastrom, has never been appreciated by us. He is so ruthless and he strips life bare before he presents it on the screen." While the Los Angeles Express' reviewer says, "Although it does not give him opportunity for much of a display of creative work, it does demonstrate his delicacy of touch and the fine grasp of technique at his command.

His comedy touches border closely on slapstick and are introduced too markedly to relieve the somberness of what must necessarily be a tragic tale.

THE MODERN THEATRE

RICHMOND'S NATIONAL THEATRE, DESIGNED BY C. K. HOWELL, INC., ARCHITECTS

Acoustics and its Relation to a Theatre

A Common Sense Talk by an Expert on a Subject Which Has Been Veiled in Mystery for Years

By HORACE L. SMITH, JR.

Theatre Engineer of C. K. Howell, Inc., Theatre Architects, Richmond, Va.

THE subject of acoustics and its bearing on theatres and auditoriums has been veiled in mystery for years. This unfortunate condition has been aggravated by the many false and unscientific theories and rule-of-thumb suppositions advanced by many, even by some otherwise good architects. The achievement of proper acoustic design was considered almost beyond the reach of the average man and the few that were so gifted that they could produce buildings with acceptable acoustics were supposed to have been endowed with a priceless gift by a benevolent providence—this ability was almost classed with witchery and wizardry. The acoustic properties of a building could never be foretold in advance of construction and the result was only determined after the building was completed and too late to effect a remedy without great cost. The large investment of the owner was practically at stake on the whims of the goddess of luck.

Perhaps a better understanding of the action of sound can be had by an analogy that accurately applies. Sound waves are vibrations in the air and radiate from the source like water waves in a quiet pool when a pebble is dropped in the water. The difference is that sound waves radiate in all directions as if they started from the center of a ball or sphere, and a given wave at any instant is in the shape of the surface of a sphere, whereas the water waves are only in one plane or flat surface.

For the purpose of following the action of sound waves, we can consider a small part of a wave and call it a ray or pencil of sound. It will travel in a straight line and on meeting a surface of any kind, it will be reflected. If we consider the ray as a tennis ball thrown from the origin of the sound, if the ball strikes a flat surface or wall that is perpendicular to its line of travel it will rebound (be reflected) in the direction from which it came. If the ball is dropped from a height and strikes a level floor it will rebound vertically along the same line that it followed in falling. It will not reach the height from which it was dropped because some of its energy has been absorbed by the floor and some by friction of the air. If nothing touches the ball, it will keep on dropping and rebounding from the same point on the floor, rising to a less height each time, until all of its energy has been absorbed and it comes to rest on the floor. If the ball is now thrown so that it strikes the floor at an angle it will rebound so that the angle of its line of departure from the floor is equal to the angle of its line of approach. This can be better explained by the action of a ball on a pool or billiard table. A ball striking a cushion at an angle rebounds at the same angle. Sound acts in exactly this manner, its rays travel in straight lines and on meeting surfaces are reflected as were the tennis and billiard balls.

A sound ray on meeting a surface is reflected, but part of it is absorbed, the amount depending on the material composing the reflecting surface. Hard gypsum plaster walls reflect practically all of the sound, absorbing very little, on the other hand a velvet curtain, thick carpet, deep upholstered cushion seats, hair felt panels, etc., absorb a large part of the sound. In a closed room a ray of sound will be reflected back and forth from wall to wall until it is absorbed. The number of times that it is reflected before it is totally absorbed depends on the absorbing capacity of the wall surfaces.

THE velocity of sound in air is approximately 1,110 feet per second. If it requires several seconds for sound to be absorbed in a room 75 feet square the sound will have been reflected a large number of times. The amount of sound absorbed by the audience is large, so that in an auditorium in which the acoustics are very bad when only a few people are in it, may be very satisfactory when all the seats are occupied.

The conditions of perfect acoustics are never obtained, but we can get a very close approximation that will satisfy all practical purposes. There are many factors that govern the acoustic properties of a room, some of which are very complicated and require much study and a very complex mathematical solution. There

Let us hereby bear unsolicited testimonial to the excellent merits of this wonderful little machine. We have been using one for less than six months, and as Miss Bauer, our cashier, says, "I don't see how we got along without it" and I wouldn't sell tickets without it."

We are using this one at our Colonial Theatre, and desire one each for our Arcadia and Princess Theatres. We are about to build another house and will order a machine for us as soon as completed. It is a pleasure for us to endorse the use of this marvelous time saver.

Yours respectfully,

Acoustics and Its Relation to The Theatre

are five principle factors that have to be considered, which are:

- (a) Reverberation.
- (b) Echo.
- (c) Intensity of Sound.
- (d) Resonance.
- (e) Interference.

By far the two most important of these five are reverberation and echo. The human ear is fortunately satisfied through wide limits of acoustic conditions. The last three factors have to be considered by those who desire to achieve the very best in the acoustic properties of a room, but an explanation of the first two will give the average layman a very clear and intelligent grasp of the subject.

Reverberation is the length of time required for the sound to become inaudible. This is dependent on the number in the audience, the area and material of the walls, floor, ceiling, etc., on the volume of the room, and on the intensity of the sound. The time of reverberation may be three seconds for a small room and it would be very bad, although three seconds for a much larger room or auditorium might be considered excellent. One room finished with hard gypsum plaster, concrete floor, would have a much longer time of reverberation than a room of the same size with hair-felt paneled walls and thick carpet on the floor. If the time of reverberation for a given room is too long, then the sound becomes intermingled with the next succeeding sound and confusion results. The second sound fills the room before the first sound dies out. In music this is not as noticeable as with speech, for with speech if the time of reverberation is too long, it is necessary for the speaker to make quite a long pause between each syllable. This condition is by far the most prominent of all cases of defective acoustics. The remedy is, of course, to reduce the time of reverberation by the addition of sound absorbing material of the proper amount.

With modern fireproof construction of concrete, brick, hollow tile, steel beams and framing, hard plaster walls, etc., the problem of reverberation has increased many fold. This type of construction transmits vibrations easily and is a very poor absorber of sound. Its corrective treatment deserves the most careful consideration from architects and engineers.

The absorption of sound by different materials used in modern construction should be known by all who design buildings in which it is desirable to have good acoustics. If they do not possess this knowledge, they should get the recommendation of some one who is thoroughly familiar with the science of acoustics. By long years of study and research work conducted by some of the best scientists in this country, we have reliable and accurate data on the action of sound and the rate of absorption of practically all materials used in construction and furnishings.

There are special materials on the market now that are specially designed to absorb large percentages of sound. There are artificial stones that can be had in practically any color and in any size. This stone is very porous and its rate of absorption is very high. There are several takes of hair felt sheets or panels that absorb sound readily. Some of these have a light cloth membrane stretched over the surface in order that they can be better decorated and painted, so as to conform to the balance of the interior finish. Thick carpet, heavy velour curtains and draperies, cushioned seats, open grilles, windows, etc., are all excellent absorbers of sound, and their rate of absorption is known.

In the design of a new building, the geometrical shape of the interior must be examined to see that it will not produce echoes. This factor can be easily investigated on the drawing board.

ADVERTISING AIDS

Ads and slugs is what Paramount's press book suggests in its column on advertising aids for the exhibitor showing "In the Palace of the King."

The volume of the building has a very intimate relation to the intensity of the sound it will be used for. In the case of the Eastman theatre in Rochester, New York, where it was necessary to provide for an orchestra of seventy pieces, it was found that the volume was too small as originally planned, and the ceiling was raised nine feet to increase the volume to the correct amount.

In correcting defective acoustics in existing buildings, it should first be determined where in the acoustics are defective—whether it is reverberation or echo, or both. In the case of reverberation it is necessary to measure the volume of the room, find the area of walls, ceiling, floor, etc., and the material of which they are composed, then calculate the amount of absorbant material that is needed to be added to or subtracted from the building to change the time of reverberation to the correct value. This can be done by the application of rules, formula, and data that have been proven correct, and involves no mystery or chance.

In the case of echo, it may be necessary to change the entire interior shape of the room or it may be possible to correct the trouble by the addition of absorbant material in the right places, and if the time of reverberation is reduced too much, it may be possible to substitute a less absorbant material for some of the present furnishings, etc. There can be no set rule for this work, as each problem is complete and separate and requires special study and treatment.

this it is particularly easy to find methods of distribution wherein both the exhibitor and merchant trade in on the widespread demand existing for same.

The heart of the fan can be reached without much trouble. A recent and interesting example of Fanfotos was effected through a radio tie-up, whereby radio listeners receiving and answering a certain message were given star photographs.

It should be borne in mind that this type of material reaches the home and stays there, thus affording an element of sustained advertising. Good advertising is desirous but good advertising which continues is the more valuable. This subject is indeed difficult to treat generally and in a few words. Circumstances alter cases but in turning out advertising aids for general use it is essential to try to suit the majority of cases. We have printed up a pamphlet dealing more fully with advertising aids and their usage. Any reader of the Trade Review who would like a copy can obtain same by apply at his local Paramount office.

If a picture is worth running it's worth advertising and if it's worth advertising it is worth advertising right.

I have not mentioned the standard items such as posters, slides and lobby displays which, as a rule, furnish the background and undercurrent so vital to box-office success. They need hardly be mentioned. They are the platform on which every showman stands. With them as a starter and with co-operative advertising to back them up, an investment of a nominal amount of money can be turned into profit.

Co-operative advertising is a good investment because it brings returns.

In each territory exhibitors were invited to the exchange to witness a trade showing. Representatives of the newspapers also were invited. The tour was successful in every way. By the time Mr. Rock was back in New York several other manufacturers had men on the road on similar errands. The "innovation" had caught on.

Mr. Rock retired from active connection with the company upon the death of his father, in 1916. He has, however, kept in close touch with Vitagraph activities by reason of his membership on the board of directors and attendance at meetings.

Between 1916 and February 15 last, when he assumed the office of general manager of the company, succeeding the late John M. Quinn, Mr. Rock has devoted the major part of his time to taking care of the estate of his father.

When Mr. Rock took charge there was a large amount of unimproved property in the inventory. Sensing the shift in the market due to approaching hostilities Mr. Rock changed the property to improved apartment houses, with the result that the large fortune left by William T. Rock has been substantially enhanced.

The new general manager has received many messages of congratulations following his return to the company. There was another from Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, to Mr. Smith.

"Mr. Rock, I know, stands for real betterment, not only in pictures from an artistic standpoint," said Mr. Hays, "but for more sound and solid business relations among all branches."

Washington's Birthday Pulled $14,520—"Robin Hood" Formerly Held It for Fortnight's Run—
Look for Better Than $50,000 on Second Week—
Business Good at Other Houses

PETE, HADISON

TE

'AMERICA' SMASH HIT

"Scaramouche," the Metro special, smashed all existing box-office records at the Capitol last week by running up gross receipts of $67,960. The picture on Washington's Birthday alone drew $14,520. That is now the record for one day's taking at the big picture house.

As against "Scaramouche," the Strand held "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the Universal picture, but it did not have the draw that the presentation at the bigger house held. "The Hunchback," however, is also held over for the current week. The Capitol yesterday got another smashing day for the second Sunday, $12,290 gross, with the outlook being that business will be in the neighborhood of $50,000 on the second week.

The record for one week at the house was formerly held by "Robin Hood," which took $40,000.

MY MAN

by George Randolph Chester with PATSY RUTH MILLER and DUSTIN FARNUM

WHAT THE CRITICS SAID:

NEW YORK SUN and GLOBE:

"My Man" is much better than several more pretentious and sophisticated features in town at present. Dustin Farnum plays the powerful politician. He does it very well, too. He gives him a bit of a sense of humor which is refreshing. Patsy Ruth Miller is the girl. In "My Man" she is lovely.

NEW YORK EVENING WORLD:

Dustin Farnum and Patsy Ruth Miller carry off the honors, and the "he-man" introduces some cave man tactics in his love-making that are novel.

NEW YORK AMERICAN:

David Smith, who directed the picture, has undoubtedly made a good box office attraction.

NEW YORK TELEGRAM and MAIL:

David Smith has turned it into a lively screen play and at the Rialto Theatre this week it goes along like a breeze.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE:

Patsy Ruth Miller is the sweet and attractive heroine and a very good actress she is, too.

In the Name of Showmanship— Advertise Your Whole Program

"Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, gives the short subject a square deal in the matter of illuminated sign representation," said Exhibitors Herald in a recent issue.

"In the name of showmanship, why not? Why shouldn't the short subject get a square deal? There's no answer. It should. But it doesn't.

"Look at the proposition squarely. Get out of the box office for a moment and walk across the street. Go around the corner to the other man's theatre and see what he has to offer.

"There's a great deal of space devoted to the title of a feature picture. Maybe it's good, and maybe it isn't. If it is, fine; if it isn't, what reason could anyone find for buying a ticket?

"At Loew's State, by contrast, suppose the feature picture doesn't sell itself. Suppose it is not an automatic success. If it's one of those 'just a picture' things, even, there is still a reason to buy a ticket. You are told that there's a comedy, and the lights tell you just about all there is to tell about it. You are told, in short, that while the feature picture is the big item of the program, there is also another item of importance. You are offered, in this case, two chances of being entertained. So far as you are informed, in the other case, you are staking your time and money on one chance."

EXHIBITORS HERALD

Vitagraph Latest Points Strong Moral

"LET NOT MAN PUT ASUNDER," a Vitagraph Production directed by J. Stuart Blackton, from Basil King's story of the same title, featuring Pauline Frederick and Lou Tellegen, supported by a competent cast.

"Let Not Man Put Asunder" is splendid entertainment and leaves in its wake many points for serious minded people to think about. The production is lavishly staged and in its direction shows an attention to detail and continuity which will probably cause it to be ranked as the best production J. Stuart Blackton has yet given to the screen.

Strong drawing power is added to the picture by the two principals, Pauline Frederick and Lou Tellegen and both are cast in parts which allow full play of their exceptional talents.

The supporting cast is excellent. Leslie Austen as Harry Vassall, the rich young Bostonian husband about whose marital troubles a large portion of the plot revolves, deserves special mention.

"Let Not Man Put Asunder"

A strong showmanship angle in connection with this production is the fact that it is built on a subject which is being given serious consideration at the present time as evidenced by the space given it by the newspapers. It is a patronage pulling picture. This is shown by the good business it is doing at the Rialto in New York.

The technical details of the picture are well handled and it is portrayed by a cast which presents Lou Tellegen in a forceful role and marks the return of Pauline Frederick after being absent from the screen for some time.

The Story of
"Captain January"

FOR four years, since the storm, when Judkins, Keeper of the Light, named her "January" after the sea goddess, and "Captain" was the name of the little child who bore the old man's love.

With caring for her pets and Judkins, and the Light, the little "Captain" was very happy until a band of busy-bodies came to the Island to take her away, for they believed it no place for the little child. But the busy-bodies left — defeated, for they had reckoned without the love the old man and the little child bore for one another. "Captain" was proved to them that "Captain" was not a "school" from Webster's.

"Captain January" away with them — and then came bitter, tragic days for the two who loved each other so dearly, when loneliness and old age sapped the strength of the old man, and weakness held no more for the little child. The story of "Captain January" is a story of love, of sacrifice, of the power of love to overcome all obstacles. It is a story that will move you to the very depths of your soul. It is a story that will make you realize the value of the things that are most precious to us. It is a story that will make you realize the power of love to overcome all obstacles. It is a story that will make you realize the value of the things that are most precious to us. It is a story that will make you realize the power of love to overcome all obstacles. It is a story that will make you realize the value of the things that are most precious to us.

STATION E. T. R. presents its special BIG LITTLE FEATURE NUMBER. A program well calculated to tickle the palate of every showman concerned with the betterment of and increased profit in motion picture entertainment.

Does the exhibitor desire a close-up of a co-operative exploitation and advertising service which is so broad and far-reaching that it fairly dazzles the imagination? He has but to turn to page 33. What he'll find there is sufficiently revealing in itself to need no further emphasis here.

Last week we promised an article by L. J. Darmour on the trend of the short subject. It's here, on page 9, and undoubtedly will justify all the expectations of the folks who have been awaiting this young but forceful executive's opinions on the subject.

Material, no matter how inspirational, is hardly constructive in a field where a commodity has to be sold in order to justify its existence unless accompanied by some explicit instructions on how to make it earn dollars and cents. This is exactly what E. J. Hammons, has done in his article on page 8.

STAND by for next week's special program on ROUND ABOUT THE STUDIOS. Let us take you to the backstage of the movie industry. Veritably, a trip combining pleasure with business. For it is quite a business. A business with which every man in the film industry should be familiar, whether he deals direct with the studio or not. And a business which can be observed with real constructive pleasure.

Don't miss it. There are some real constructive considerations to this STUDIOS program. It is related to the exhibitor from the industrial angle; from the fraternal angle; and from a real showmanship angle. Next week; don't forget.

OUR Mary," as pretty and charming as ever, portrays Dorothy in her latest picture for United Artists, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." The player in the circle is Marc MacDermott who plays the role of Sir Malcolm Vernon, Dorothy's cousin. Together the two do exceptionally fine work.

MARY looks a bit taller here than we are used to seeing her. Wilfred Lucas, Earl of Rutland, is doing the then commonplace thing, defending his good name. These four masculine stills can be used to good advantage as cut-outs.

HOWARD GAYE is quite the dandy as the Duke of Norfolk, in feathers and velvets but no less a man and not to be trifled with. While on the left, Malcolm Waite as Perkin, servant to Sir John Manners, feels also the dignity of his position, as protector of his most royal nibs.

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

'Shorts' Are Independents' Chance

HAS the independent producer a better chance of surviving the battle if he confines some of his attention to short material than if he sticks entirely to features? Under some circumstances he has. If—

Well, let's take that If into account right at the beginning. Here it is:

If he has the capacity, meaning the ability, to make acceptable short pictures.

For it may as well be admitted that it is easier to make a good feature than it is a good comedy.

Good comedies are scarce. We are speaking now of the original material rather than of the human factors entering into the mirthful division of entertainment.

Good scripts are scarcer than good comedians. What we are likely to get in many cases are ordinary or indifferent scripts, depending on the comedian and his associates to put over the fun.

For the better the script the less need there is for the specialist in comedy. It is here the trouper steps in.

BUT to get back to the main theme.

Given the capacity for making comedies the producer has an opportunity for larger profit with less of the ordinary production risk than is sustained by the producer of dramatic features.

It is a matter of finance. The gain may not be in saving production cost. Rather is it in quicker returns from the exhibitor.

The theatre owner may be all set ahead for one, two or three months on his features, but it is unlikely he is fixed up for a month in advance on his shorts.

The first or second run house is keen for good shorts and will give them a quick showing, thereby sending them on their distribution journey.

When the general question was broached this week to a regional distributor he declared the briefer form of product afforded the exchangeman a decided advantage over the feature pictures in several essential respects.

In the first place, there was this important matter of quick turnover.

TO point the contrast between the short subject and the feature the distributor quoted the experience of one of his fellow-exchangemen who had purchased several feature subjects as far back as last October. Owing to advance bookings on the part of important houses in his territory it was the end of February before he was able to get one of the productions into a house the importance of which promised the initial returns he deemed necessary to yield an ultimate profit on his investment.

In the case of comedies or novelty short subjects, on the other hand, the exchangeman agreed it frequently is possible to secure a good booking with playdate set for but two weeks in advance of the day of solicitation.

In the matter of a serial, the exchangeman pointed out, not only is the booking accompanied by a near playdate but the overhead is materially reduced by reason of the covering of one or two days a week for a house for a period of fifteen weeks through the one visit of the salesman.

Then again while visiting a theatre owner remote from the exchange center there is the opportunity in the event of taking on a serial of extending the deal to include a comedy for the same number of weeks.

SPEAKING from the serial viewpoint the distributor suggested that one of the larger advantages from a business angle was the regularity with which contact was maintained with the one exchange over a period of weeks, through the matter of posters, etc.

In conversation with a prominent distributor of independent product unhesitating confirmation was given regarding the value of "shorts" to the independent.

"It is our experience that the independent has got more chance in the short department of film production," he said. "Arrow has built its success on short subjects including serials.

"As to the latter it is now issuing its eighth and will have another ready in the fall. The same company in its spring and fall program has provided for thirty-eight comedies under three brands.

"It is my experience there is noted a more ready response from buyers for this kind of material than from the features. I venture to say you can check up on any regional distributor now successfully doing business and you will find he has made his money on short subjects.

"It is all because the turnover is so much quicker that it releases for another purchase.

WHEN a group of features are stagnant or their distribution 'blocked,' as you might say, it means thousands of dollars that are dormant. And money is such an important factor in an independent exchange that action is vital, oftentimes.

"One of the great advantages of the shorter stuff is that it keeps the state rights man in constant association with his theatres.

"When you talk about scenics I am not going to agree with you. Maybe the experience of others is different from that of mine, but what I have learned is that they are all right in the first runs, but that in many of the other houses the exhibitors lay off.

"Yes, I hear requests for two-reel westerns, but there is not enough money in them. The producer will spend a little more money and make them five-reelers."

As to the possibilities of forming an entire evening's entertainment on shorts, with a well blended program, the distributor said he did not hear much.

The elimination of many of the highly paid stars from the two-reel comedy field, in the opinion of the speaker, gave a real opportunity to the independents, especially in view of the fact that in many small houses as much will be paid for a good comedy as for a program feature.

Another distributor declared that with a good comedy a producer had entree to houses, where it would be almost impossible for him to obtain a booking on an ordinary feature—or perhaps on a good one.

Merchandising the Big Little Feature

An Application of Principles Which Have Brought Tremendous Profits to Great Commercial Institutions

By E. W. HAMMONS

President, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

EVERY now and then we are reminded of the fact—the very apparent fact—that the public which we are supplying with entertainment is the very same public that is keeping the shoe factories of the country busy through its purchases of footwear, that is buying and wearing the well-known brands of clothing, that has made the big department stores the tremendous business institutions that they are. The self same public that keeps in business the great houses that depend on merchandising for their existence.

Yet for some unknown reason we have not yet learned, except in rare cases, to apply to our merchandising the same principles which have brought tremendous profits to these great commercial institutions.

Walk through the shopping district of your city and study the displays made by the great stores. Perhaps one of these great stores is particularly popular for its women's clothing; another has a reputation for the best in house furnishings. Does the first one give up its entire window display to feminine apparel, and the other show nothing but furniture and other home needs? You will find, of course, that nothing could be further from the case. Each store displays all its goods or as nearly all as circumstances will permit. Possibly the first store features a display of women's dresses, but all about this one will see the other goods shown—men's wear, house furnishings, sporting goods, silverware, etc. Similarly with the second store, while the furniture display may be the largest, it does not crowd out of the show window the jewelry, the women's dresses, the optical goods, etc.

Now, every exhibitor has a "show window." His lobby is the place in which he "displays his wares." But how many exhibitors, in the arrangement of their "show windows," follow the principles that have made these big stores such successes? How many of them, while offering a program consisting of three or four units, put a display in their "show windows" that tells their patrons about anything except the feature picture?

But when we consider the exhibitor's newspaper advertising we find him failing even worse to follow these sound principles of retail advertising. We find him in most cases taking the advertising layouts on the feature pictures prepared by the producers or distributors of these features, and running them with little or no additions beyond the name of the theatre.

The big store generally does something radically different. I have just been reading the advertisement of a big New York department store in a New York daily, which is a fair sample of the advertising of this kind of store. The most prominent word in the "ad" is of course, the name of the store. The "feature"—in other words, the item used as the biggest drawing card—is a new woman's dress. A little less than a third of the entire space is devoted to this item. But under this are descriptions and prices of dress material, rugs and linoleums, chinaware and glassware and electric sewing machines. Truly a diversified appeal. This store knows, while the new dress may be the biggest attraction of the day, it cannot make a 100 per cent. appeal with this alone.

RECENT surveys among exhibitors and among the picture patrons themselves show the vast majority of them in favor of the diversified program; they want feature or reasonable length, with comedies and other Short Subjects to make up a balanced program. Most of the patrons say they are not pleased unless they get this diversified program. The exhibitors say they realize this situation. Then why should these exhibitors expect to appeal to these patrons 100 per cent when they do not use their advertising space to the best advantage to tell them they can count on seeing a diversified program?

No matter how good the feature may be, the exhibitor who books a good comedy to run with it, a beautiful scenic subject or a novelty and a new reel and then uses his newspaper advertising space to tell his patrons about nothing but the feature, is neglecting an important part of his clientele, a percentage of his potential patronage which may, and often does represent the difference between failure and success for his theatre.

BIG LITTLE FEATURES
The big little feature of these Educational Big Little Features is the advertising which is suggested in their connection. Educational has devised a comprehensive merchandising plan for these, and renders a co-operative service to all exhibitors interested in selling their shows 100 per cent to the public.

The Trend of the Important Short Subject

By L. J. DARMOUR

President Standard Cinema Corporation

THE Standard Cinema Corporation is a comparative newcomer in the field of the short subject motion-picture, and, therefore, is free from any outworn traditions or ideas about the production or distribution of one and two reel features.

There is one fact with regard to short subjects which governs us in all our handling of them, and which should be thoroughly understood by the showman for whom this is written. I mean the fact that the day is past when short subjects were regarded as "fillers," used to keep something on the screen between showings of the big features, and of no importance or worth in themselves.

The biggest theatres were the first to recognize the value and the true place of the littlest features. Such leading showmen as Rothafel and Riesenfeld early saw the necessity for the balanced program, and gave a prominent place to the short subjects. They learned, by actual check-up, that their patrons were influenced to an astonishing extent by the short subjects accompanying the feature, and the smaller houses followed suit, so that now the short subjects are picked and assembled on the program with as great care as their big brothers.

When the short subject was a "filler," in the parlance of show business "anything went." A handful of comedy gags were stretched and padded, and interminable chase thrown in, until a few minutes of film idea was turned out as a two-reel "comedy."

When the searchlight of quality was thrown on the two-reelers, a great change took place, and is still taking place. Instead of puffing out, the aim now is to condense. The good two-reel comedy of the present contains as much plot idea, as many gags, as a much longer production.

In order to condense a full-sized comedy scenario into two reels, in the modern manner, it is necessary to speed up the action, cut out every unnecessary bit of story, and give more care to technical smoothness.

Comedy dramas written for or actually produced as five reelers can, with care, be boiled down to two-reelers, and this, I predict, will be the future trend of the short subject. Without interfering with legitimate feature productions, there are certain stories which can be condensed into the limits of two reelers with tremendous effect and punch. It is the story that counts, in the long run, and not its footage, for even features are not sold by reels.

THE exhibitor has been quick to sense the change in the status of the short subject. The exhibitor has been quick to sense the change in the status of the shorts. The cheaply-produced, padded short subject cannot be given away, for the one and two-reelers are being bought and advertised on as high a basis as the features.

Another feature of the short-subject which the showman knows is the fact that there is no dull season for the use of the shorts. It is an all-year commodity. Throughout the four seasons it is a necessary part of every program, and in the summer, when interest in big features wanes, it is a most important part, and should be emphasized.

In addition to the two-reel comedy, the exhibitor can have dramas which have been pepped up and boiled down to two-reel length, the news reel and various novelty reels, of which the Bray "Col. Heeza Liar" series, a combination of motion-pictures and cartoon, is a good example.

President of the Standard Cinema Corporation believes brevity is the soul of wit and goes a step farther by producing shorts that are really funny.

Showmen can take a good example in the matter of shorts from some of the leading newspapers of the country, those which have attracted millions of readers by their comic strip cartoons. These cartoon characters are followed faithfully day by day—although the whole paper may be read, the cartoons are the first things that are looked at by everybody, because their appeal is simple and universal. From one or two strips a day, some of the papers publish as many as ten daily at present.

Which only shows that people are always willing to be amused, and the short reel does not have to be sold elaborately to patrons. They sell themselves. The picture of Jimmy Aubrey or any other popular comedian, outside a theatre, I believe to be as big a factor in bringing them inside, as any other, and showmen are giving this recognition more and more by the increased prominence given to the advertising of the comedians.

JIMMY AUBREY has the faculty of producing laughs. He is one of the most popular fun makers on the screen and never fails to produce results. He is turning out one comedy each month. "Colonel Heeza Liar" is one of the well known cartoon characters whose exaggerated performances are always worth a strong place on the program.

Old Lady Astor Says

THOSE who saw "America" on the opening night should take another peek at the production as it is today following a week's pruning at the hands of its producer. Every one conceded it was a great picture as it stood at the beginning. We saw on the tenth day the end of the first half and all of the second half of the picture. Where on the premiere night there seemed a sagging tendency in the second division owing to the great interest aroused in the career of young Montague, who dies at the end of the first half, as the picture stands now it may be said in all truth it is as fast in the latter part as it is in the first. And that is saying a lot. To suggest that "America" will be the greatest of the Griffith productions is perhaps to indulge in rash prophecy, especially in view of the phenomenal record of "The Birth of a Nation." But after again seeing the new subject following its final editing we are inclined to be reckless.

BY the way, we often hear of producers taking their pictures out into the smaller cities and trying them "on the dog." Bostonians may smile this week as they learn that Mr. Griffith, in preparing "America" for presentation in the Hub, deliberately "tried it on the dog" right here in New York. As many of the locations in the production are in Boston and its environs you may set it down Mr. Griffith is going to get a reception when he opens up at the Majestic on the night of March 8. Boston will "go to" that picture as it never did any of its predecessors.

AFTER a stay in New York of several weeks B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, is on his way back to the coast. He is all set immediately to start work on "The Breath of Scandal," which will be directed by Gasnier. The subject will be the first of the Preferred list to be made at the Hollywood studios, which have been taken over by the company. Following the starting off of "The Breath of Scandal" work will be begun on "The Triflers," by Frederick Orin Bartlett, the script for which has been completed by Waldemar Young. Mr. Schulberg was accompanied East by Mrs. Schulberg and their daughter.

RESTING—down Bermuda way. Not going to think of pictures or picture people for a whole, full week if it can be done. Want to look at the lilies. Bye, bye.—Danny in Film Daily. What's the mat? Can't he look at the lilies and think of picture people at the same time?

CARL HIMM, of the editorial department of the Hal Roach studios in Los Angeles, has been a visitor in New York for two weeks. While his trip was a business one—Mr. Himm took advantages of his spare moments to look over the town and personally to convey messages of which he was the bearer. Incidentally he added to his list of friendships. He entrained for home March 4.

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of exchanges for Universal, is now at Universal City in conference with Big Chief Laemmle regarding the company's production plans. He will be away from his desk for about a month.

WILLIAM B. BRUSH, studio owner of Miami, Fla., is in New York. He will remain for a week, and then plans to leave for Florida, where with Elinor Fair he will photograph the underwater scenes of "The Water Babies," an adaptation of Charles Kingsley's story.

JOHAN L. ERICKSON, manager of the Du Glada Theatre, is a diplomat as well as an exhibitor. His community is largely of Scandinavian origin or descent. Last month there was a little misunderstanding on between the manager and the local church. Just for an experiment Mr. Erickson booked F. B. O.'s "Thelma," and he had the time of his life seeing his recent antagonists flocking into his theatre. Best of all, his renewed patrons came back to him and said they liked it. The manager expresses his opinion to the local branch that his plan of campaign helped him more than any other policy could have done. It's the old story of sugar doing what vinegar can't.

GEORGE D. BAKER, the genial, always welcome visitor, is in town following his completion of "Revelation" for Metro, starring Viola Dana. The director is inclined to wax enthusiastic about his picture and its star's work in it. We just guess if any one knows a good picture when he sees it that man is George D. Mr. Baker is in town on personal business.

HERE are congratulations to Thomas A. Curran, who has just been appointed by Dr. W. E. Shallenberger as the foreign sales manager of Arrow. Mr. Curran's experience in film dates back to Thanhouser days, when in 1915 he joined the production forces of that company. For three years Mr. Curran has been a special representative of Arrow, and in that capacity has covered a wide territory. As the new incumbent of the foreign sales department has made several circles around the old earth as manager of road companies he has a good knowledge of theatrical conditions abroad. The best of luck!

WELCOME visitors to the office of Exhibitors Trade Review during the week were L. L. Phillips and Partner Sussman of Phillips & Sussman of Pleasantville, N. Y. First impressions of the two men are of upstanding exhibitor stuff, and better acquaintance is confirmatory.

PERCY MARMONT has been engaged by Paramount to play the leading male role opposite Betty Compson in James Cruze's "The Enemy Sex." Mr. Marmont will live many years before those who saw him in "If Winter Comes" will think of him other than as Mark Sabre. It was a characterization that will live as long as the negative of that picture holds together—and that is a long time. It was a great portrayal of a great character. Mr. Marmont's last work with Paramount was in the leading character of "The Light That Failed."

E. M. ("EPH") ASHER, personal representative of Mack Sennett, is in Los Angeles for conference with his chief. Mr. Asher has had a busy mid-winter one way and another, but he carries with him to Los Angeles some really satisfactory reports.

IN a recent discussion of the controversy between the Actors Equity Association and the Producing Managers' Association A. L. Erlanger declared he did not believe there were more than twenty-five pictures that can be shown successfully in first-class theatres. Of course, he meant houses that ordinarily are devoted to stage production. That's something of an admission at that, coming from a man of the stage. In fact, it may be construed as a compliment.

Spectacle to Continue, Simple Story Will Thrive

By CECIL B. DE MILLE

WHAT is to come next in motion pictures? At present, people seem a little confused over the mingling of various tendencies. We are now at what might be called a dead center in the progress of the film business. For several years the costume picture has been in the ascendant. Recently the simpler story has come out of its retirement.

Twenty years ago, this situation would have meant only one thing. It would have meant the passing of one cycle in production and the development of another in absolute contrast.

This was in the age of the stage drama, when the entire interpretative art could be controlled by a handful of men. David Belasco, my father's old associate and my mentor in earlier days, was a leader in the creation of such cycles. After producing such tremendous plays as "The Darling of the Gods," "Adrea" and "Du Barry," Mr. Belasco found that all the producers in New York were copying him and competing with each other to bring out larger and more lavish productions. Therefore, the following season, instead of continuing in a big way, Mr. Belasco suddenly switched to such an absolutely simple thing as "The Concert," and he scored a tremendous success. The other producers followed his lead and for a period of seven years spectacle was out and hardly anything appeared on Broadway save the simplest sort of dramatic entertainment.

Today because the production of motion pictures is not controlled by a group of men but by a constantly and freely expressed public opinion, coming from some 60,000,000 theatre-goers, the hide-bound, dramatic cycle of olden days has passed forever. The extremely large following which the motion picture has created has enough partisans of each class of entertainment to make it possible for the costume spectacle, with its crowds, and the simple drama, of but few characters, to exist successfully at one and the same time.

Competition Develops Art

I consider, therefore, that it is foolish to claim that the present appearance of a number of modern, unspectacular stories means the passing of the elaborate, eye-filling spectacle which has been so popular through the past few years. The spectacle will continue to exist. The simple story will and thrive.

It is a very fortunate thing for the future of motion pictures that this is so. Competition does more to develop art than any other single influence. We will have better spectacular pictures and better non-spectacular pictures, when the two types oppose each other in competing houses. There will be more originality in photoplays because a hide-bound cycle of one brand of entertainment, excluding all other, breeds imitation and is likely to kill new and fresh ideas.

I have just completed what is termed a "huge, spectacular production 'The Ten Commandments,'" a theme which swings through the gamut of crowds, large sets and the appeal of mass and color of ancient times. My new production, "Triumph," is of the contrasting sort. While possessed of colorful touches, it is a strictly modern story depending for its appeal upon human elements in modern everyday life. The two stories are widely opposed, yet both have definite and direct box office appeal. They can exist side by side with success for both.

I mention these two productions purely as illustrations. You will be able to think of many others. The point is plain that we have at last reached the much-to-be-desired stage, where the public as a whole speaks its desires and makes possible the diversity of entertainment which the motion picture industry needs in order to rise to the still greater artistic heights which await it. It was very fortunate for the business of making photoplays when the voice of the public began to bulk large enough so that the film producers felt safe in trusting the expenditure of millions to the decision rather than in relying entirely upon the judgment of a comparatively few men who might or might not strike the correct keynote.

GRAND-ASHER BEGINS WORK ON 'SAN FRANCISCO'

The first set erected for "San Francisco," the Swickard production for Grand-Asher release, is a dance hall, bar and theatre combined, such as those which flourished in the golden days of the city—the period of 1850-51 and thereabout. This period is used in the prologue of the story which shifts to 1906 for the main part of the drama.

The scene is a replica of the once famous "Turn Hall," possessing a tiny stage with, however, its full compliment of scenery, crudely painted.

The floor is sawdust covered and the bar is the most imposing piece of furniture. There are the familiar "boxes" and many rough tables and chairs.

Therein, Julianne Johnston, leading woman, will make her appearance as Petite Colomb, a French danseuse, and, in the later story, will be seen as Nell Barbe, a girl of the far-famed Barbary Coast. Charles Swickard is director.

FILM RIGHTS TO 'A LOST LADY' FOR WARNER BROTHERS

Warner Brothers have purchased the motion picture rights to "A Lost Lady," the best seller from the pen of Willa Cather which has lately gone into its seventh edition. Final arrangements were consummated this week at the Warner home offices.

With this announcement comes another to the effect that the novel has been syndicated by the Bell Syndicating Company, installments starting March 1, and to extend over a period of some nine months. Warner Brothers feel that this will constitute an excellent advertising and publicity medium, keeping the novel, fresh in the minds of millions of readers, and preparing them for the screen version.

G. A. ROGERS HONORED AT TESTIMONIAL DINNER

Leaders of Motion Picture Industry
Compliment Lawyer

THE motion picture industry paid an unusual compliment to one who has been long associated with the development of the business, when many of its leaders gathered to honor Gustavus A. Rogers, attorney, at a testimonial dinner given by his friends at the Hotel Plaza, Wednesday evening, February 27.

Will H. Hays, Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, John C. Eisele, Jack G. Leo and S. L. Rothafel were among those present, Saul E. Rogers, general counsel for the Fox Film Corporation, and a brother of the guest of the evening occupied one of the tables. At the tables were Cortland Smith, J. Gordon Edwards, Julius Stern. At Mr. Zukor's table were Jesse L. Lasky, Richard W. Saunders, Ralph A. Kohn, Robert T. Kane, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, Charles E. McCarthy, A. M. Botsford and Henry Salisbury.

Others who had tables were Sydney Cohen, head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, and Charles O'Reilly, president of the state exhibitors' league.

It had been rumored that there was some political significance behind the dinner and that it was a vehicle to launch his candidacy. This Mr. Rogers disclaimed and said there was no such purpose behind it, that not only was there no political significance but it did not have any motion picture political aspect.

It was not heretofore advertised that he is no longer connected with the Fox Film Corporation or William Fox Interests. When interviewed shortly after the dinner Mr. Rogers took occasion to emphasize that since he had resigned as counsel to the Fox Film Corporation a few years ago, when his brother Saule Rogers retired from the firm of which he had theretofore been the junior member that he, Gustavus Rogers, had kept aloof from all internal motion picture controversies. Some in the industry may be surprised to know that he is no longer connected as attorney or otherwise with the Fox Film Corporation although his brother Saule Rogers is still vice-president and general counsel.

BOX OFFICE RECORD FOR 'SCARAMOUCHE'

Breaks World's Record for Box Office Hits at Capitol Theatre

SWEEPING all Broadway records into the limbo of forgotten things and smashing every existing box-office record at the Capitol, New York, Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" piled up the unheard of gross of $67,960 on the first week of its engagement at this theatre. This tremendous figure despite three giant obstacles any one of which would have squelched another picture; first, heavy rains, snow and slush; second, the fact that "Scaramouche" had already been witnessed by thousands of people who had paid advanced prices to see it during its long Broadway run at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre; and third, that it was up against a string of giant super-pictures, an aggregation of new productions that dazzled the theatre-goers and formed the strongest opposition ever known on Broadway. But "Scaramouche" topped them all.

Not only did "Scaramouche" set a new world's record at the Capitol for the first week's business, but it copped three other Broadway records as well: on the opening Sunday at the Capitol "Scaramouche" ran up a gross of over $13,000, the biggest opening Broadway will see in many a day; on Washington's Birthday "Scaramouche" played to $14,520 a week-day gross that has never even been sighted by any Broadway picture house; and on the second Sunday of its engagement, the beginning of the second week, "Scaramouche" attracted $12,290, another new record and a sign that the second week would rival the first in receipts.

WILL ESTABLISH PRECEDENTS AT T. N. T. DINNER

The first banquet in the annals of banquetteing in which no flashlight pictures will be taken will add a new and refreshing chapter to entertainment history when The Naked Truth dinner, annual revel of the motion picture advertising and publicity men, is staged at the Hotel Astor, New York, on the night of March 29.

Nothing could do more to insure the success of the affair unless it would be the elimination of the usual program of speech-making in the opinion of the entertainment committee of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

And just to clinch success, even that radical departure from precedent is to be taken. A. M. Botsford, entertainment committee chairman, announces that there will be no speech-making!

Instead, a few distinguished guests and members of the motion picture industry will tell "Bedtime Stories," in which some startling truths anent the business and artistic side of the film world will be bared.

Paul Whiteman, famous jazz orchestra leader, it is announced, will be there in person, with two bands, as for the first time in A.M.P.A. annals the dinner is open to women, and consequently there will be dancing till dawn, continuous music throughout the dinner and dance will prevail, and to quote Mr. Botsford "Jazz, jollity and joy will reign."

RIESENFELD LOUD IN PRAISE OF PHONOFILMS

Possibly the highest compliment that has ever been paid to Dr. Lee DeForest's Phonofilm, or talking motion pictures was by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, famous managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theatres in New York, when he gave the Phonofilms a continuous three weeks' showing at the Rivoli Theatre.

The showing of the talking motion pictures started at the Rivoli on Lincoln's Birthday week when the Abraham Lincoln phonofilm was presented. This picture gives two episodes of Lincoln's life. The first shows Lincoln visiting a camp of the Union soldiers, and the second is the Gettysburg episode and the delivery of the immortal Gettysburg address. This first week was so successful that it was followed by a second of the Phonofilm, with Egyptian dances by Lillian Powell, her graceful movements in perfect synchronization with the music, photographed on the film. The third week's program consisted of other dances by Miss Powell and musical numbers.

FRENCH LENDS REALISM TO 'MONSIEUR BEUCAIRE'

"Parlez vous, Francais?" and other French phrases less commonly used are heard so frequently on the set at the Paramount Long Island studio where Sidney Olcott is making "Monsieur Beaucaire," with Rudolph Valentino in the stellar role, that visitors have been surprised. But there has been nothing about it to be surprised at. The use of the foreign language is merely a bit of realism that has been injected into the making of the Tarkington story.

All of the players speak their sub-titles in French during the filming of the episodes in Louis XV's court. Mr. Valentino speaks perfect French as does Bebe Daniels, Paulette Duval, Lowell Sherman and others. Lois Wilson is an adept pupil and every day she is getting better and better with her French. It is all done in an effort to catch the true spirit of the French court.

P. F. STUDIOS RENTED

Despite the fact that Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are in New York preparing for premiere showings of their new motion pictures, respectively "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" and "The Thief of Bagdad," after which they plan a trip abroad, there has been no let-down in activities at their Hollywood studios.

Plans are now being made to allow several independent producing companies to operate the Pickford-Fairbanks studios on a rental basis, using all the equipment and facilities the studios afford.

Director of "Flaming Youth," has just completed "Lilies of the Field" and is ready for Colleen Moore's next picture, "A Perfect Flapper."

SELZNICK ANNOUNCES SHORT COMEDIES

Short Subjects Are the Work of Well Known Fun Makers

HANK MANN, popular screen comedian, is featured in "One Day in Hollywood," just completed as the latest of the Hollywood series for the Standard Cinema Corporation. L. J. Darmour, President of Standard, announced that there will be a well-known fun-maker in each of the series, which is released by the Selznick Distributing Corporation. "One Day in Hollywood" marks Mann's first appearance in this series.

"The Mechanic," a Jimmy Aubrey comedy, has just been finished out on the Coast. It is the joint work of two well-known screer comedians, for Jimmy Aubrey's acting in it was supervised by Joe Rock, long a leading fun-maker himself, who has given up appearing in two-reelers, in order to use his experience and ability in their production.

Two more Standard Cinema Corporation subjects have been completed. They are the Bruce Barton one-reel editorial "The Just-a-little-late Club," and from the Bray studios, the latest in the Colonel Heeza Liar cartoon series, called "The Sky Pilot."

REPEAT 'EINSTEIN THEORY' AT TIMES SQUARE

At the Times Square Theatre, 42nd Street and Broadway, New York, a legitimate house, a special showing of the "Einstein Theory of Relativity" film was given last Sunday, February 24, at the special request of 600 petitioners who had not had the opportunity to see the picture when it ran for four weeks on Broadway at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres.

Edwin Miles Fadman, producer of the film, and president of the Red Seal Pictures Corporation, 1600 Broadway, which is distributing it, arranged with Mrs. Ittleson and Mrs. Hess, wives of officials connected with the Goldwyn Company, to have the showing given under their auspices.

Goldwyn Asks Publicity Men to Curb Fanciful Stories

BIG salary stories, salacious advertising and talk about million dollar productions must stop.

This was the message given to the Western Motion Picture Advertisers at its meeting Monday evening by Samuel Goldwyn, the guest of honor.

In a straight-from-the-shoulder talk, Mr. Goldwyn proved the most interesting speaker the "Wampas" have had in months. Instead of devoting his entire address to telling the publicity purveyors that they were the brains of the industry, Mr. Goldwyn spoke of the pitfalls of thoughtless publicity and his sincerity won him one of the most enthusiastic ovations ever accorded a speaker before this body.

"We have heard much about the fallacy of advertising and exaggerating the salaries of persons employed in pictures, but we still find the papers full of million dollar this and million dollar that," said Mr. Goldwyn. "Never in the history of motion pictures have the advertising men of this business held such an important position as they do today. Never before have they found themselves in a more strategic position to render the industry a great service or a great harm.

"Stories about tremendous salaries must cease. A motion picture person receives a salary of $50,000 a year and it is heralded throughout the country and shouted from every house-top. It is nothing unusual for a bank executive to receive $75,000 or $100,000 a year—but we never hear anything about that. They would regard it silly as well as harmful to advertise their large salaries. We of the motion picture business must look at the situation in the same light. Nothing but resentment on the part of the public and unfavorable political and federal action can result from the untruths that are printed about salaries, in the motion picture business.

"Salacious advertising is another evil of motion picture advertising men. Things that never appear in a picture are made the basis of advertising campaigns. This is absolutely wrong and in instances where the advertising is salacious, it embodies one of the most harmful practices the industry has ever been subjected to. Men who are putting out salacious advertising are not only retarding the progress of this business but are hurting themselves, for the harm that this sort of advertising inflicts upon the industry is bound to react unfavorably upon the publicity man. There is absolutely no excuse for any man to put out salacious advertising. If I were a publicity man and my employer asked me to do this sort of thing I would absolutely refuse to do it.

"I believe in the publicity man and I believe he can prove one of the biggest factors in the success of any organization in the motion picture industry. I also believe however, that he can do more harm not only to his company but also to his business, than any other factor in this profession.

"Publicity men have sold the motion picture industry to the public. They have paved the way to success. Let's appreciate this and let's do nothing that will harm the publicity man in his particular vocation, or give ammunition to those who launch trades against this industry on the slightest provocation. Let us build!"

DAVID HIGGINS WITH MEIGHAN

David Higgins, one of the stage's best known players, has an important role in Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "The Confidence Man." Mr. Higgins, who was one of the principals in "Welcome Stranger" during its long run on the stage in New York City, starred in one of the first five-reel motion pictures ever made, "His Last Dollar." This production, made in 1913 by the Famous Players Film Company, was a picturization of the stage play of the same name written by Mr. Higgins over 20 years ago. "His Last Dollar" was one of the most famous of the old time melodramas, and Mr. Higgins made the title role so well known that the expression, "Here goes my Davy Higgins!" is still used by many people when spending their last dollar.

JANE GERRITY

This popular young Selznick starlet made a great hit in "Roulette," in which picture she portrayed a very difficult part and did it exceptionally well.

KANSAS EXHIBITORS CHARGE UNFAIR COMPETITION

A "showdown" on unfair competition in Kansas appears inevitable. Schools and churches long have been a "thorn in the side" in several sections of the state. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which just has finished a 3-weeks run at the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., has been advertised to be shown in the high school of Kansas City, Kans., under the supervision of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

That the V. F. W. has little or nothing to do with the picture Kansas City, Kans., exhibitors are confident. A committee of exhibitors called upon the Kansas City Universal exchange and were told the branch office had no knowledge of the picture being booked at the high school. But the investigation will not stop there, exhibitors say.

Supreme Court Judge Richard Hopkins, of Kansas, when he was attorney general of Kansas, gave it as his opinion that schools and churches, using motion pictures commercially, ought to be taxed; that it was unfair for non-taxable institutions to commercialize in an industry in which others were taxed. Should developments in the near future warrant it, exhibitors probably will seek legal protection against such competition, in which case an appeal would be made to Attorney General Griffith.

CENSORSHIP REPEAL BILL TO GET HEARING

Now in Senate Committee But Will Be Reported Out Soon

ALBANY, N. Y.—Thus far there are only two bills of real interest to the motion picture industry before the New York State Legislature. The present legislative session is due to conclude on either April 4 or April 11, and in view of this fact action will be taken on both bills during the present month. Chief interest naturally centers around the Walker bill calling for the repeal of the motion picture censorship law in the Empire State. This bill is still in Senate finance committee, but there is no doubt as to its being reported out, for the Senate is Democratic in its majority and the bill, inasmuch as it embodies recommendations made by Governor Smith, in his message to the Legislature, is regarded by the Republicans at least, as an administration measure.

Just when the bill will be reported out seems to be a question. Thus far there is no indication whatever of a public hearing being held on the bill, but these hearings are called for on a moment's notice and one may be held almost any time, with only three or four days' notice to the general public. When the bill was first introduced, those behind the measure stated that every effort would be made to go to a vote before the jam which occurs during the last few days of the session, and when many a good bill gets slight attention because of this fact. Unless the bill is reported out of committee soon, however, the vote will be taken during the concluding days of the session.

The other bill relates to the admission of unaccompanied children to the motion picture theatres of the state. In its original form, it related solely to New York City. The bill was later changed to take in the entire state, carrying a local option clause. The bill is now in the stage of further revamping and will be amended this coming week with a clause that will give each city in the state the right to determine through its governing body, the ages under 16, at which children, unaccompanied, may be admitted to theatres maintaining matrons.

PATHE WILL EXPAND FOREIGN NEWS SERVICE

George Ercole, staff cameraman of Pathe News with headquarters in Paris, arrived in New York this week aboard the America for a series of conferences with Emanuel Cohen, Editor of Pathe News. Mr. Ercole's visit is significant of still further expansion of Pathe News activities abroad. While here Mr. Ercole will study the methods of the American news cameraman with a view to improving the service of the Pathe News field force in foreign countries. The reorganization of the Pathe News staff abroad will be another important task to be undertaken by Editor Cohen and Cameraman Ercole in the course of their conferences.

Ercole has been attached to the Pathe News foreign staff for over five years. Some of his most distinctive scoops abroad for Pathe News have been seen in the views covering such events as the German Revolution, the Turkish hostilities against the Greeks, the Smyrna fire disaster, the Ruhr Rebellion and the Flight over Egypt.

BROWNING SELECTS CAST

An all star cast has been selected by director Tod Browning to support Ruth Roland in her initial feature production, "Dollar Down," which is to be made at the F. B. O. Studios. This is the first of the Co-Artists Productions, an organization recently launched by Miss Roland and Mr. Browning.

NEELY EDWARDS, as the guest in "Be My Guest," receives one hot reception as he is ushered into the house by his esteemed host. This is the kind of single reeler to which audiences usually respond with the well-known commodity known as a laugh.

"HOT DOG!" declares Neely Edwards as he doubtfully turns from the steaming morsel in his hand to the figure on the counter, which perhaps in his mind, bears an unpleasant ancestral significance to delicacy in question. One of the Pathetic scenes in "Be My Guest."

FEDERAL CONTROL BILL IS INTRODUCED

Bill in Congress Would Give Great Power to Committee

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Probably the most drastic measure of reform legislation seriously suggested to an American legislative body within recent years is the bill which has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Upshaw of Georgia proposing, in effect, to give the Federal Government almost absolute control over the motion picture industry. The bill contemplates the creation of a Federal Motion Picture Commission which through a system of permits for the interstate transportation of films and federal licenses would be able to exercise arbitrary control over every film made in or imported into the United States.

This commission would even be granted the power to control the financial affairs of the motion picture industry to the extent of fixing prices for the rental of films, and to institute a "centralized neutral agency" to "manage the business of renting and leasing all films in interstate commerce." Posters, banners and other advertising matter used in connection with motion pictures also would be subject to the inspection and approval or disapproval of this omnipotent commission.

One of the most drastic of the provisions of the bill is the section which would give the commission arbitrary control of the licensing for interstate or foreign commerce of any film or picture intended to aid any political candidate or political issue. This section prohibits the licensing of:

"Anything which aims to or does assist the election or defeat of any political candidate: Provided, however, that nothing herein shall prevent the commission granting a license or a permit in commerce for a film otherwise complying with the standards of this section, which aims to or does assist the election or defeat of any political candidate: Provided, that in the license or permit granted there is the statement of the condition that it shall not be exhibited in licensed places of amusement."

"In a statement issued when he introduced his bill, Mr. Upshaw declared: "I have introduced this bill after full conference with various committees representing the militant church organizations and moral forces of America."

PENNSYLVANIA THEATRE OWNERS HONOR H. J. SCHAD

Motion picture theatre owners of eastern Pennsylvania honored the president of their organization, H. J. Schad, of Reading, at a banquet held at the Ritz-Carlton, in Philadelphia last week. The event was one of the largest ever tendered an executive of the organization and shows the high regard in which Mr. Schad is held by his associates.

Many notables of Pennsylvania were present and spoke of Mr. Schad's value to the industry. When the guest of honor was ushered to his place at the speakers' table he was given a rousing ovation from the 400 persons assembled.

CHANGE PICTURE TITLE

It was the intention of Hepworth Productions, Inc., to offer one of its big films under the title of "Speak No Evil," but it was finally decided that the picture will be released under the name of the book, "Mrs. Erricker's Reputation," which enjoyed a large sale in Europe. Thomas Cobb wrote the book. It was taken by Cecil M. Hepworth for picture presentation, who not only directed it, but produced it with a cast headed by Alma Taylor, regarded as one of the most popular and capable leading women in English pictures. Others in the film are Gerald Ames, Gwynne Herbert, James Carew and Eileen Dennes.

Before her "discovery" by Distinctive Pictures she was acting as a cloak model in New York City. She is now one of the screen's most beautiful stars.

BROKEN MIRROR NO TERROR FOR TOM MEIGHAN

Thomas Meighan recently demonstrated that there was nothing namby-pamby about his motion picture acting when he smashed his fist through a beveled mirror in a scene for "The Confidence Man," his current Paramount picture. In breaking this mirror with his fist Mr. Meighan took the chance of a disfigurement that might have caused the end of his screen career. It so happened that he only caused a severe cut on his right thumb and several bad scratches on his hand. When he smashed the glass, bits of it flew in all directions but luckily none of them struck him in the face.

Director Victor Heerman had five cameras turning on the scene which, the studio press department says, is one of the dramatic punches in the story. Following the taking of the scene, Mr. Meighan was idle two days while his hand healed up enough to go on with the picture.

BABY PEGGY'S SECOND STORY

Now that "Captain January," is completed and in the cutting rooms of Principal Pictures Corporation, the second Baby Peggy story has been decided upon.

It will be an adaptation of "Helen's Babies" one of the oldest and most popular of juvenile books. John Habberton is the author and the first edition of the volume is nearly fifty years old.

William A. Seiter has been engaged to direct the new story. Seiter's most recent work has been with the Warner Brothers and Sacramento Pictures Corporation.

Assisting him will be Nate Watt, formerly of the Metro and Fox organizations. Louis Milestone has been engaged to create the comedy situations for the production. Work will start in the near future and the cast will be announced as soon as completed.

FIRST NATIONAL SALES CHIEF OPTIMISTIC

Expects Big Results from Pictures Now Being Completed

AFTER a tour of the country during which he visited the majority of First National exchange centers, E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution, is en route to New York. Mr. Eschmann, having launched the successful First National month campaign left New York eight weeks ago on his first extended tour since joining First National last July.

A week of Mr. Eschmann's time was spent in Los Angeles where he studied forthcoming productions at the United and Ince studios. Accompanied by R. E. Pritchard, studio sales representative, he made a flying trip to the Mexican location camp, and saw the filming of "Sundown" under the direction of Larry Trimble. The extended stay of the First National sales chief at the production center permitted him to inform himself in detail of the audience qualities of forthcoming productions. He was in continued conference with Earl Hudson, production manager; John McCormick, western representative and Joseph Skirbol, western district manager.

"Approximately five hundred new accounts were added to the First National list of exhibitors during First National Month," writes Mr. Eschmann from the Coast, "and after an inspection of some of the 'First National 1924-20' here at the studio, I am confident that our newly made friends will be equally enthusiastic over our new group of pictures. Such pictures as 'Black Oxen,' 'Flaming Youth,' 'Ponjola,' and 'Boy of Mine' and 'Song of Love,' with which we made so many new First National exhibitors, imposed a responsibility upon us. Our production forces, however, have marshalled the best talent and expended every ounce of energy to equal and excel the First National pictures of the last of 1923."

ARTCLASS PICTURES ANNOUNCES SALE OF TERRITORY

Harry Grelle purchased Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and the B. & W. Booking Office at Shelby, North Carolina, purchased North and South Carolina, both of these territories are planning big openings and road-shows to follow. Harry Grelle intends to open "After Six Days", featuring Moses and the Ten Commandments, in Pittsburgh for a run. The Epic Film Attractions of Chicago, who control the Northern Illinois and Indiana territory on "After Six Days" expect to open downtown at the Loop, sometime in March. Mr. Lumiere in Canada, who controls the picture for the entire Dominion of Canada, has three copies working in Montreal alone. He intends sending out at least six road companies in Canada to play this picture.

David Starkman, of the Standard Film Attractions, Philadelphia, who controls the picture for the Eastern Pennsylvania territory, has just finished a week's run at the Wilmer and Vincent Theatre in Harrisburg, and broke all existing house records.

CASTING FOR BALMER STORY

Gasnier begins this week the selection of players for the cast of his next Preferred Picture, "The Breath of Scandal," which will be put into production immediately at the Hollywood Studios. This story by Edwin Balmer received its first publication last year as a serial in Cosmopolitan Magazine and subsequently gained popularity in book form.

The name of Gasnier attached to the production promises unquestioned success.

NEW SELECTED PICTURES CATALOG COMPLETED

National Board of Review Publication Contains List of 'Best' Pictures

OF value to every exhibitor is the new "Selected Pictures" catalog for 1923-24 issued by the National Board of Review in New York through its National Committee for Better Films. As the Board sees the films sometimes weeks, sometimes months in advance of release, this catalog contains many of the newest pictures. It lists altogether 532 pictures, of which 506 were seen in 1923 out of a total of 1519 submitted to the Board in that year by all companies.

The information given comprises distributor, reels, featured players, short description and literary or dramatic source. This latter is particularly important where the exhibitor wishes to obtain the co-operation of schools, libraries and bookstores as well as women's clubs, literary and dramatic societies.

Pictures of outstanding merit are indicated by an asterisk, and 322 pictures especially suitable for the family program and boys' and girls' performances are specially marked, as also are pictures which are rather for the mature as distinguished from the general or family audience. The arrangement is made as convenient as possible: first, the features, then the short comedies, then the miscellaneous short subjects, scenics and "educationals." The films are listed within these divisions alphabetically by title, with the name of the company in bold type so that the films of any particular company can be quickly picked out.

The catalog may be kept up to date by means of the monthly and weekly Photoplay Guide to the Better Films issued by the National Committee. Supplementing this also are reports on the longer of these pictures contained in the bulletins, "Film Progress" and "Exceptional Photoplays."

TWO PRODUCTIONS UNDER WAY BY WARNER BROTHERS

The Warner Brothers' west coast studios started the week off by beginning work on two production units, "How to Educate a Wife," and "Babbitt," the first from the pen of Elinor Glyn, the latter from the novel of the celebrated Sinclair Lewis.

Monta Bell, who won his spurs in "Broadway After Dark," is handling the directorial megaphone on "How to Educate a Wife." Mr. Bell first sprang into the limelight by his work on the Charles Chaplin film, "A Woman of Paris," having co-operated in the making of that picture. So brilliant a directorial feat did he make of "Broadway After Dark" that the present assignment was given him without question of any other person.

It is expected that "Babbitt" will be completed in time for release sometime in May. Harry Beaumont is directing this production, and intends to give it the clean finish and faithful realism which he put into the making of "Main Street." Willard Louis has the title role.

MARY AND DOUG TO BROADCAST FOR MOVIE FANS

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks will broadcast by radio their personal messages to their respective publics and movie fans in general through Station WJZ, New York city, on the evening of March 12, at 8:15 o'clock.

All arrangements for this most important event to motion picture exhibitors and their patrons have been completed, and everything is set awaiting the date and the hour.

This will be the first formal use of the radio by these two popular stars for communicating first-hand with the theatre-going and newspaper reading population of the world within the radius of this powerful broadcasting station. Previous attempts to obtain the consent of Miss Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks to broadcast to their millions of admirers have failed because of the fact that both have been so tied up with location or studio work on their new productions—Miss Pickford's "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" and Douglas' "The Thief of Bagdad." They determined to make this a dual broadcasting event, and not until now have their plans been such that both could be free to take up this matter at the same date.

PARAMOUNT PEP CLUB ANNUAL DANCE ON MARCH 7

The third annual ball of the Paramount Pep Club of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be held Friday evening, March 7, in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Astor. This event, which has become an established affair in New York City, particularly in the theatrical and motion picture professions, promises to surpass either of its predecessors.

Dancing will be continuous from 9:30 o'clock on, the dance music being furnished by Jay Cox's Society Orchestra, divided in two alternating sections. The Cox Orchestra has a wide reputation for perfect dance music and is an annual fixture at the big affairs at Yale, Princeton, Wesleyan and other colleges.

At twelve o'clock sharp a special vaudeville show will be presented on the big stage at the Western end of the ballroom and will include some of the biggest acts in the country. As usual, a large number of the foremost theatrical and motion picture stars will be present.

HODKINSON WILL RELEASE AT CAMEO FOR EIGHT WEEKS

Under contracts just closed the productions released by the Hodkinson Corporation will be shown at The Cameo Theatre on Broadway, New York, for a period of eight weeks beginning March 9.

"Love's Whirlpool" with James Kirkwood and Lila Lee and Madge Bellamy will be the first attraction starting March 9th for a week's run to be followed possibly by "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" the Whitman Bennett production featuring Henry Hull and Jane Thomas.

"Love's Whirlpool" will be presented with an especially composed musical setting arranged by Edward Kelenyi, musical director of the Cameo.

INDEPENDENTS PLAN TO AID EXCHANGES

Will Co-operate for Better Results Among Independent Units

THE active support of three hundred manager-owner independent exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, has been solicited in behalf of the Independent M. P. P. and Distributors Association in a letter just sent out by I. E. Chadwick, President of the organization.

The state right operators and exchanges constitute one of the most important factors in the independent branch of the motion picture industry, and are to be encouraged in every possible way, President Chadwick declares, while advising that many managers have already volunteered their services in aiding in the establishment of the independent market upon a firm and sound foundation.

In a letter to owner-manager exchanges, President Chadwick says: "The Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association has recently been formed for the purpose of providing a live and quick acting organization to serve every branch of the independent market, and to raise the standards of independent productions to such a degree that the confidence of the exhibitors will be fully restored."

"The various factors in this important branch of the motion picture industry are to be encouraged in every possible way. The producers, distributors, manager-owner exchanges, theatres, stars and directors will be given the fullest measure of co-operation that they deserve with a view to promoting a better understanding among all these units."

BERNARR MACFADDEN EQUIPPING BROADWAY STUDIOS

Louis De Klade is equipping Bernarr Macfadden's new studio, which is being erected in the Macfadden Building, Sixty-fourth to Sixty-fifth Streets, Broadway, New York. Mr. De Klade, who is a veteran in the motion picture studio line, was formerly connected with the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation.

Wallace Hamilton Campbell, art director, will be in full charge. The new studio will have all the latest electrical equipment, modern offices, property, retouching, negative developing, dark rooms, and dressing rooms. This will enable Mr. Macfadden to do all his still and motion picture photography. Mr. Macfadden publishes twelve magazines which are all illustrated with photographs.

INGRAM SAILS FOR HOME WITH NEW METRO PICTURE

Rex Ingram who went to Africa six months ago to make his next Metro production, "The Arab" is due back in these United States in about a week or so. The Metro offices have received a cablegram from Ingram to the effect that he was setting sail Wednesday of this week, March 5, for home.

The cablegram also bore Ingram's message that "The Arab" was practically completed and would be wholly so after several weeks sojourn in Hollywood. All the exterior scenes were filmed in Africa in the neighborhood of Tunis in Algiers, a locality particularly rich in Oriental atmosphere and color. Ingram made the interiors for "The Arab" in Paris, having arranged for a studio for that purpose which enroute to Africa last September.

Returning with Mr. Ingram are Ramon Novarro and Alice Terry who play the two leading roles and who are the only Americans in an exceptionally large cast of famous principals.

GOLDWYN COSMOPOLITAN TO AID EXHIBITORS

Studying Methods of Distribution for Small Theatres

GOLDWYN-COSMOPOLITAN is going to find out from first hand knowledge just what the problems and needs of the exhibitor in small towns and of the small theatres in large towns are. Future exhibitor aids will be affected by the information gathered through this investigation.

New York State has been selected as the experimental field where the needs of the small exhibitor will first be looked into. Every town of 1,000 population and more will be visited and the exhibitors interviewed. The information gathered will be co-ordinated and submitted to the sales department which will work out from it an innovation in exhibitor service. Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan service to exhibitors is already remarkably complete, containing many important and valuable features which are not supplied by other distributing concerns, but it will undoubtedly be increased, changed and adapted as a result of the investigation now in progress.

A six weeks' intensive tour of New York State was begun in Buffalo this week by Eddie Bonns, special sales representatives. His business is to find out everything possible about the service now received by the exhibitor, how it can be improved and changed the better to meet the needs of the small theatre manager. He will inquire about the condition of prints, the value of present exploitation aids, whether the exhibitor appreciates and makes use of the aids already prepared for him and every other phase of picture showing and exploiting in the smaller towns.

While the investigation is largely in behalf of the small exhibitor, the large towns will be visited and conditions and needs there looked into. It is the purpose of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan later to have other territories in the country investigated along the same line.

BUSTER KEATON COMPLETES NEW METRO FEATURE COMEDY

Keaton has completed his third Metro feature length comedy, "Sherlock, Jr.," and the combined forces of the titling, cutting and editing departments are now busy preparing it for Metro release this month.

The story has to do with a young man, a projectionist, who deserts his calling for Hollywood and after divers adventures ends up by marrying the most beautiful of the stars. These are the facts at the two ends of the picture. In between Keaton is said to have made a comedy drama that is unequalled for sheer satire, open burlesque, and rollicking laughs and that beneath all this the human note of struggle and conquest is as straight and true as the best dramatic piece of the stage.

WILL SYNDICATE 'FLOODGATES' TO NEWSPAPERS

Lowell Productions, Inc., which is distributing its latest production, "Floodgates" on the independent market, announces the closing of a deal with Percy Eastment whereby the story of "Floodgates" will be novelized by the author, L. Case Russell, and syndicated to over 1500 newspapers in weekly installments covering a period of forty weeks. It is pointed out this will be of great assistance to independent exchanges handling "Floodgates," as it will place the story before many readers in advance of or coincident with the release of the picture. It is pointed out that this is only part of the advertising and exploitation co-operation Lowell Productions, Inc., will render to the exchange men and through them the exhibitors.

John Lowell Russell announces that David P. Howells, Inc., handling the foreign rights on "Floodgates" has closed a contract with Mr. Ricci of the Argentine American Film Co., whereby that organization has acquired the picture for Argentina, Peru, Uruguay, Paraguay, Bolivia, Chile and Ecuador.

OHIO M. P. T. O. MEETING IS A HUGE SUCCESS

Large Attendance Indicates Desire for Closer Co-operation

MOTION PICTURE exhibitors from all parts of Ohio gathered at Columbus on March 6 and 7 to attend the Third Annual Convention of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio. The affair was the best that has ever been held by the organization and much constructive work was done in the short space of time. Each day was crowded with events and many well known speakers discussed the problems facing the exhibitor and the means of overcoming obstacles in his path.

Sydney S. Cohen, President of the M. P. T. O. of America, gave an outline of the work accomplished by the organization during the past year. The organization accomplished much at the meeting in Washington, where a fight was made against the admission tax and the proposed copyright law, the national censorship bill and the Sunday closing bill.

A banquet was held on Thursday night at which men and women prominent in State activities spoke. Among the speakers were Vernon M. Riegel, Director of Education and Chief of the Division of Censorship; Lieutenant-Governor Earl D. Bloom; Charles C. Crabbe, Attorney General and H. H. Griswald, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The large number of exhibitors that attended the meeting indicates the desire of co-operation which is under way for the betterment of the organization, and the reports read show the amount of work accomplished.

In every way the meeting was a success.

MINTZ CUE SHEET BIG AID TO MUSIC PROGRAM

With one exception every large picture producing company has signed a contract for what is now popularly and widely known as the "Thematic cue sheet." This is confirmed by an announcement by M. J. Mintz the president of the Cameo Music Publishing Co. This sheet is now regarded as the missing link between the directors of pictures and the directors of music.

The old idea of the cue sheet in the press books were far from giving satisfaction either to the exhibitor, the musical director or the audience, but it remained for Mr. Mintz to evolve the "Thematic cue sheet" which filled a long felt want and went a long way towards perfecting the musical accompaniment insofar as it tied up with picture presentation.

The underlying principle of the thematic form is to supply adequate and timely musical themes for each and every scene that is reeled off on the screen. The cue sheets give a production, no matter its elaborateness and length, the proper atmosphere and makes far more effective its general presentation.

'MIAMI' IS COMPLETED

The completion of the Alan Crosland production will leave the E. H. Griffith Company in complete possession of the Miami studios for their production of the Cosmo-Hamilton story "Another Scandal," in which Lois Wilson will be starred.

PARAMOUNT'S 'TRIUMPH' IS COMPLETED

Picture Is All That Was Expected by Director Cecil De Mille

CLOSE of production on Cecil B. De Mille's newest Paramount picture, "Triumph," found West Coast officials of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation exceedingly enthusiastic over the latest work of the man who created "The Ten Commandments."

This screen play by Jeanie Macpherson, founded on May Edginton's Saturday Evening Post story, is said to ring true to De Mille's reputation of providing a variety of strong box office appeals. Certainly the lineup of players presents an imposing list of names that mean money to the exhibitor. The featured ones are Leatrice Joy, Rod La Rocque, Victor Varconi, Charles Ogle, Julia Faye, Theodore Kosloff, Robert Edeson, ZaSu Pitts, Raymond Hatton and George Fawcett.

The story itself is one of those strong, social satires for which De Mille has attained an international reputation. He takes the wealthy and the poor apart so that the world may see how they tick. Perhaps all that need be said of the story to insure interest is that the central idea of the plot is the change overnight of a rich man to poverty and a poor man to wealth, with all the dramatic reactions such as that would be sure to entail. The three principal characters are Leatrice Joy, Rod La Rocque and Victor Varconi. Miss Joy and Mr. La Rocque need no introduction after their sensational success in "The Ten Commandments."

Mr. Varconi, however, is a newcomer. Mr. De Mille imported him from Hungary where for years he has been a matinee idol of Europe. American audiences have only seen him in such foreign pictures as "The Queen of Sin" and opposite Pola Negri in "The Red Peacock." He has a sure, quiet, even technique, which Mr. De Mille believes will make him one of the most popular players within the next two years. And Mr. De Mille's reputation as a picker hardly needs mention.

BABY PEGGY'S MAIL STAGGERS HUSKY MAILMAN

Statistics compiled by Principal Pictures Corporation, according to Irving M. Lesser, vice-president and general manager of distribution for that organization, show that Baby Peggy, the young star who soon is to be seen in "Captain January," a screen adaptation of the world famous story by Laura E. Richards, receives 4,580 "fan" letters daily, or 1,708,000 annually.

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures, insists that replies and photographs of Baby Peggy be sent to each of these writers. The result of this insistence is that five secretaries are kept at work daily replying to the "fan" letters.

Advices from the Coast are that the cutting and titling of "Captain January" have been completed, and a print is expected in New York at any time. With these advices come reports that the picture is an unusually powerful one.

An elaborate advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign for Baby Peggy in "Captain January" has been mapped out by the Lessers and Mike Rosenberg, financial manager for Principal. A motion picture edition of the book will be put on the market, as the result of arrangements made with L. C. Page and Company of Boston, publishers of the original edition.

A complete moving picture story of the Nixon, New Jersey, catastrophe is appearing in local theatres now showing the International News and these pictures show the wide space destroyed, the rescuers hunting for buried victims and the scores of homes in the vicinity completely wrecked by the blast of TNT. A most interesting subject, which very clearly portrays the horrors of war when perhaps one shell will contain as much explosive and will do as much damage as this accidental one.

Other interesting news items in this issue are the arrival in New York of the mighty Pacific Fleet as well as its trip from Panama northward on the wintry Atlantic. This is the first time in five years that the Pacific Fleet has visited the eastern coast.

There are many other newsy bits from the four corners of the globe in this current release of International News.

'BORROWED HUSBANDS' PRINTS READY FOR DELIVERY

The negative and first assemblage of "Borrowed Husbands," the picturization of Mildred K. Barbour's famous novel, was shipped from Hollywood last week to Vitagraph laboratories in Brooklyn and prints will be rushed to all branches.

David Smith, who directed "Borrowed Husbands," had just finished cutting in time to give a showing to President Albert E. Smith and George H. Smith, managing director of Vitagraph in London, upon their arrival in Los Angeles. After the showing President Smith expressed himself as well pleased with this vigorous drama of domestic life as presented in film and Mr. Smith declared that it would be a winner in Great Britain.

Florence Vidor has the leading role and three leading men share the honors opposite her, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Earle Williams, and Robert Gordon.

SELZNICK PICTURE WILL BE MADE IN ENGLAND

Announcement has just been made that Myron Selznick is leaving for England March 8, to supervise the production of the first of a series of pictures to be filmed in England for release through the Selznick Distributing Corporation.

Accompanying him are Miss Marjorie Daw and a number of other leading American players who are to appear in these productions.

The first picture is to be a film adaptation of Frank Stayton's melodrama, "The Passionate Adventurer." The story is laid in England, and the picture will be filmed in its original locale.

'WHEN A MAN'S A MAN' BREAKS CAMEO RECORD

Harold Bell Wright's Picture Closes After Five Weeks' Run

HAROLD BELL WRIGHT'S "When a Man's a Man" terminates its brilliant engagement of five weeks at the Cameo Theatre, New York, this week to what, according to Manager De Rosa of the Cameo, has been the largest attendance and receipts ever played to by a film at that house during a similar run.

Originally scheduled for a week's engagement, the Principal Pictures Corporation film played to such enormous business in the initial week that it was held over from week to week for what is considered an unprecedented record.

Meantime, "When a Man's a Man" has been meeting with similar success in all parts of the country. It played to enormous business at Loew's State in Los Angeles, immediately after which it was booked into the Talley Theatre in that city. Next week it opens at the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, and at the Madison in Detroit, in both of which cities arrangements have been made to exploit the film on a mammoth scale.

Following on the heels of the Harold Bell Wright's film's phenomenal success in this country, Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department of Associated First National, which is releasing the production, has been flooded with requests for foreign showings and the film will soon be presented abroad.

'GREAT WHITE WAY' TO PLAY AT CAPITOL THEATRE

An event of unusual importance in the motion picture world will be the return to Broadway on Sunday, of "The Great White Way," Cosmopolitan's "surprise" picture which recently concluded a sensationally brilliant engagement at the Cosmopolitan Theatre.

"The Great White Way," with a cast of famous stage and screen stars and a list of national celebrities will begin its first New York engagement at popular prices at the Capitol Theatre with a special presentation arranged by S. L. Rothafel.

The management at the Capitol predicts that the picture, which is a graphic representation of Broadway life, will establish new records for attendance and receipts. They base their prophecy on the enormous appeal that the film had during its run of eight weeks further uptown with a scale of one dollar and fifty cents top. This was the first film that was ever forced to give midnight performances to take care of the crowds.

"The Great White Way" has a special interest for New York motion picture patrons as it depicts scenes and characters familiar to Broadway, the most famous thoroughfare in the world. The action moves swiftly, beginning in the offices of Tex Rickard, boxing promoter, at Madison Square Garden, and including Futurity Day at Belmont Park; a rehearsal and presentation of a regular musical comedy with the Ziegfeld Follies chorus as a background; a thrilling fire scene participated in by the New York Fire Department; and the prize fight before seventy-five thousand persons has been described as the most tense ring battle ever staged for a motion picture.

Anita Stewart, Oscar Shaw, T. Roy Barnes and Tom Lewis have the principal roles in the film. Among the famous figures who appear are Arthur Brisbane, Tex Rickard, Ned Wayburn, Irvin S. Cobb, H. C. Witwer, Billy De Beck, Harry Hershfield, George McManus, Nell Brinkley, Winsor McCay, Earle Sande and Pete Hartley.

"The Great White Way" was adapted by Luther Reed from H. C. Witwer's story "Cain and Mabel." E. Mason Hopper directed the picture.

The 'Short' and Its Future

WHAT is the future of the short subject? Has it seen its best days, has it reached the peak and is it now on its way down the hill to its long home?

We pause while the vote is being taken.

From all over the land comes the roar from thousands of exhibitor throats: "No!"

It is here to stay.

The motion picture came to us in the guise of a short subject—very short, to be precise.

It grew in the course of years from 50 feet to approximately a thousand. On another page is told the story of how D. W. Griffith, then a new director at Biograph, refused to cut a picture from two reels to one.

That was not the least of his crimes. He had fractured the standing rules of the institution by spending not only the $75 allowed each director for making a picture but $105 in addition.

There was no machinery for distributing a film of that inconceivable length. It might be a good picture, but it was junk nevertheless.

The director was "fired." He was an impossible executive.

Of course, progress would not be denied. Some distributing genius discovered a way out of the dilemma. The picture would be issued in two parts, as a serial. And Griffith was restored to the industry.

It is true there are some feature productions that make a satisfactory afternoon or evening's entertainment.

BUT those which do are sure to be far out of the ordinary in the way of entertainment. There must be in them some mighty appeal to the imagination.

Easily the aggregate of those pictures which come within this category cannot exceed 2 per cent of the whole.

That leaves at least 98 per cent which must be accompanied, or at least should be.

Now what is the average length of the feature of today?

In the December list we find 30 pictures that exceed 6,500 feet in length and 28 that are under. The January chart discloses 20 productions that exceed 6,500 feet in length, while there are 47 that are listed as less than that length.

Which would indicate, by the way, that the complaint on the part of exhibitors that features were too long is being heeded by producers.

The foregoing figures justify the assumption that placing the average length as 6,500 feet is not an understatement. Let us assume it is approximately correct.

It will mean that the average exhibitor planning a two hours' program of straight pictures will require at least 3,500 feet of film to be divided among short subjects.

Here is opportunity for real diversity of entertainment.

In the first place there is a news weekly. It may not be of current date, but if your patrons have not seen it it is new to them. And a program is not complete without a weekly.

If you are in doubt about this statement pick up a list of programs taken from the announcements of successful houses and see how many there are in which a weekly is missing. See if you can discover one.

That leaves three reels to be accounted for. Just here is where the stand-by of a two-part comedy comes in. This is the point where rigid selection should be exercised.

THERE are all kinds of comedies—excellent, good, fair, bad and worse. It is the last two classes the exhibitor should avoid.

It is in booking comedies that the exhibitor may make full use of his business papers, by filing the reviews. It will give him a check-up on the salesman. And if it happens that the exhibitor is fooled on the review then the editor's hide should be made to feel the lash.

For the fourth reel there are many choices. A good scenic is always appreciated—if patrons get a chance to see it.

It is in the fourth reel, however, where the short subject has abundant opportunity for expansion. We know that in other days much good entertainment was provided by single-reel dramas. The chance is present today as much as ever.

Judging by experience the making of short subjects is a work of specialization. The largest output in that department is provided by two companies practically devoted to it.

The importance of the short subject in the estimation of exhibitors may be judged when it is stated that putting aside the large quantity of material and much of it meritorious supplied by other companies the two concerns devoted to short subjects last year received in bookings practically one dollar out of every seven paid in to all the exchanges.

The short subject is "sitting pretty."

David Wark Griffith, Portrayer of Life

ONE of the outstanding characteristics of the work of David Wark Griffith has been the fidelity with which he portrays the life of the humbler portion of mankind, that vast majority of humanity referred to by Abraham Lincoln among others as the common people.

What Mark Twain has been to the literature of America and of the world at large David Griffith has been to the screen.

One of the reasons for this ability to reach into the heart of the mass of mankind is elbow to elbow contact with men who labor.

Where the one as boy and man had stood at the printer's case, taken his trick at the wheel of the largest steamers that plowed America's greatest river and swung a pick in search for gold, the other as a boy also has stood at a printer's case, has worked as a sandhog in the Hudson tube, scraped rust from beams in the New York subway, shoveled iron ore in the holds of lake steamers and worked as a puddler in a steel mill.

And all the time that Griffith worked with his hands and body his mind was busy, too, turning over problems and phases of life that later were to be revealed on the screens of the world.

So when with such authoritative sympathy the producer delineates the average human it is because he has been through the mill of experience, has had his share of adversity as he has tasted of the triumphs of success. He has "lived."

MR. GRIFFITH was born in La Grange, Ky., January 22, 1880, the seventh of eight children. His father was Jacob Wark Griffith, a general in the confederate service known to his soldiers as "Roaring Jake Griffith," so named because of his unusual capacity for outshouting the noise of battle.

The Griffiths were one of the many families whose fortune had been depleted by the war. Young David attended school, and at the end of the rather limited course was taken in hand by his oldest sister, Mattie, an instructress in a girl's school.

In a country where oil was not available candles became a necessity. It was customary in the evening for one

LEADERS ALL—D. W. GRIFFITH

BECAUSE as an actor he learned the essentials of what constitutes the best in drama; because as a reporter he acquired the art of expression in language; because through rubbing elbows with real toilers he gained experience with the "other half"; because with his natural endowment of dramatic instinct he has been able to capitalize this background and unfold on the screen life as it is lived by the average person in the world of today.

member of the family to read to the others, and the reader in the Griffith home was Mattie.

The boy David had a favorite place under the dining room table, where he visualized in his own way the tales that were read by Mattie. His books, text and general, were carefully selected by his sister.

Twain was eleven years old when he entered his brother's printing office. Griffith was twelve when he entered similar employment with his brother. Here besides setting type he worked in the mailing department.

Then for a year or more he traveled through Kentucky and Tennessee soliciting subscriptions to a Baptist ministerial publication. During this period when not actually traveling he was stopping at the homes of ministers.

AT an early age the boy aspired to be a writer. In line with this ambition General Joe Wheeler, a friend of his father and one of the South's greatest cavalry officers, introduced a lad in his teens to "Marse" Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier-Journal.

The youngster was given a place as reporter and filled the assignments that fall to a worker in that field. But the theatre interested him.

When David confided to the manager of the Louisville stock company that he aspired to become a dramatist he was told the way to achieve that end was first to become an actor—and a place was offered him.

The offer was accepted. His first part was as the Duncie in "The Village School." The debut was discouraging, but not disastrous. He remained through the season, but as the pay was not adequate he enlarged his income by working in a dry goods elevator.

Being "fired" because he necessarily was absent on two successive matinee days he obtained secondary employment in a stationery store.

Then followed engagements in the Strolling Players, with Ada Grey's traveling company, playing in "Trilby" and "East Lynne." He was with Walker Whiteside in a tour of the mid-west, with Helen Ware, with Nance O'Neil and with James Neill.

In the Nance O'Neil company he played Sir Francis Drake in "Elizabeth," and with James Neill he sustained among a number of roles that of Abraham Lincoln, the latter with such success that his salary was increased from fifteen to eighteen dollars a week.

IT was at this period of his life that the spirit of wanderlust manifested itself in a new form—for adventure away from the footlights. Perhaps it was that desire to see life at the source which always has been one of the producer's dominating characteristics.

From Kentucky he traveled to Western New York, to Tonawanda, one of the ports of the Great Lakes.

In view of the prominence of the Indians of the Six Nations in the new historical drama of "America" it is interesting to note that Tonawanda is the site of one of the largest of the tepees

'BEAU BRUMMEL' SAID TO BE UNUSUALLY FINE

Barrymore at His Best Is Opinion of Los Angeles Critic

BEAU BRUMMEL, the Harry Beaumont-Warner Brothers' Production starring John Barrymore, was given a special preview showing out in Los Angeles and received unusually enthusiastic praise from Hallett Abend, motion picture editor of the Los Angeles Times and Preview. In fact he was so impressed by the picture that he started to feel a bit skeptical and wondered if perhaps he wasn't allowing himself to be unduly carried away.

To convince himself that he was justified he asked to be allowed another showing. After it he expressed himself as being "impressed anew by the beauty of the costuming and by the photography of David Abel. John Barrymore, in the title part, has never had a screen part which suited his looks and his abilities so well. As Brummel, the lover, he is superb; as Brummel, the climber, he is daring, and clever, and agile of wit; as Brummel, the 'first gentleman of Europe,' he is insolent, vain, overbearing; and as Brummel, the exile, and finally the madman, he is marvelously transformed as he was in the part of Mr. Hyde in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.'"

"The whole production is technically excellent. But it is much more than that—it is simple and direct in its sincerity, diverting in its sophistication, tragic without being bitter, and at all times glamorous with beauty."

It has finally been definitely decided that the film shall have its Eastern premiere at the Mark Strand Theatre. This definitely settles the question as to whether the picture would follow the previous Warner features by opening at the Strand or whether it would go into a special theatre for an indefinite run.

MANY NOTABLES AT PREMIERE OF 'FOOL'S HIGHWAY'

Since this latest Universal feature starring Mary Philbin, is the story of the old New York Bowery which has become famous down through the years, it was decided to use the Atlantic Gardens Theatre, formerly the most famous amusement center of lower New York, as the most suitable place for the premiere of the film.

To make the occasion more realistic, there were recruited for the occasion several of the old time Bowery entertainers, those who first made the old songs famous, and they entertained with revivals of their old stuff.

The ushers were dressed in the costumes of the old Bowery belles, and in the lobby of the theatre there was installed a bar exactly resembling the one which the Atlantic Gardens formerly boasted.

The speakers of the evening included Senator John Walker, who talked of the Bowery as he knew it, and Harry Von Tilzer, to whom the old Atlantic Gardens was one time "home." Governor Smith was to have been the honorary guest of the evening but he was detained by important work and was forced to send his regrets via telephone.

By the time the picture was shown the audience was entirely emersed in the old Bowery atmosphere, which, of course, made the film even more enjoyable.

Vitagraph turned over its share of the receipts for the showing, to the Association to be used toward the fund, and in return received an exceptionally fine letter of appreciation from the chairman of the executive committee, praising the film and the splendid work of Vitagraph.

'WOMAN TO WOMAN' PRAISED BY WESTERN CRITICS

Miss Betty Compson's work in "Woman to Woman" received high praise from the newspaper critics when that Selznick picture had its Western premiere at the Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles.

"Each succeeding role finds Miss Compson advancing in histrionic measure," said the Evening Express. "Betty Compson in triumph" headlined the Los Angeles Examiner, adding: "The play will gladden the hearts of Miss Compson's admirers in the opulent vision it gives of her. She entrances the eye and looks more and more delightful as the play progresses. "Woman to Woman" has a more definite appeal for the theatregoer than this, however, in that it offers Miss Compson opportunity for excellent dramatic work. The story is likewise novel."

The Los Angeles Daily Times said: "It is more than a mere movie, sufficiently more in fact to hold a captivating appeal for those who are weary of the formula production and the all-too-happy ending."

'ISLE OF VANISHING MEN' IS GIVEN SHOWING

Picture Made by Author Explorer Intensely Interesting

ONE of the finest pictures of its kind that has been shown on the screen recently is "The Isle of Vanishing Men," produced by the author-explorer William Fisher Alder, who went to Kia Kia, in the interior of Dutch Guinea, and saw for himself how the cannibal tribe, that made its home there, lived.

The film is in no sense fiction, but is merely an honest insight into the mode of living of this savage tribe whose most elaborate attire is the metal ring worn through the nose and the ears. By using tact and diplomacy, the explorers managed to get into the good graces of the natives and were thus initiated into the tribal habits and customs.

For their benefit the tribe held one of their semi-occasional dances which are always attended with great ceremony and for which elaborate preparations are made many days in advance of the event. It was while preparing for this event that the explorers learned how the inhabitants prepare their elaborate headdresses which serve as a means of protection against attack by rival tribes, how they prepare their food, and how they ordain their youth upon the arrival at the age of manhood.

The photography on the film has been so masterfully handled that some remarkable pictorial effects have been achieved. The audience is taken on board the ship as it leaves its port of debarkation, and is allowed to pause with it at the various ports along the route, to meet the different peoples and see some of their unusual customs, to learn something of how other peoples trade. The scenic effects which the cameraman, John Boyle, has caught during the voyage are amazingly beautiful and well worth seeing.

The production was made with the aid and co-operation of the Netherlands Government and is the only and last picture made of the Kia Kias, as directly thereafter the Netherlands Government had its war boats destroy this part of the Island because of the sickness and disease which was gradually causing the natives to become extinct. It is for this reason that the picture is called, "The Isle of Vanishing Men."

The picture in every detail is extremely interesting, and makes fine entertainment. It will, however, probably only appeal to select audiences who are interested in the better type of picture and who enjoy seeing the experiences of explorers on the screen.

As an instructive vehicle the picture is superb and for this reason it should certainly find a fertile field in educational fields as well as in the entertainment branch of the industry. Students who are taught geography by actually being taken to the place by means of the screen are in a much better position to understand.

A special musical score was arranged by Victor Shertzinger and its rendition by a capable orchestra added appreciably to the enjoyment of the film at its showing on February 29, at the Criterion Theatre where a special invitation audience was present.

SEVERAL COMEDIANS IN 'GALLOPING FISH'

Ince Production to Be Released by First National This Month

AFTER trying out "Galloping Fish," his new comedy for First National, in every type of theatre from the beach house to one which caters exclusively to the "family circle," Thomas H. Ince has concluded that this comedy is gloom proof and has turned it over to First National for early release.

With Syd Chaplin, Louise Fazenda, Ford Sterling, Chester Conklin and Lucille Rickson in the leading roles "Galloping Fish" was declared by preview audiences to be a worthy successor to "The Hottentot."

This time instead of a horse-fearing hero, a timid young bridegroom who innocently becomes involved with a famous stage beauty and is forced to chaperone her pet, a trained seal, for twenty-four harrowing hours, is the chief cause of laughter. Syd Chaplin as the retiring young chap whose every move gets him in deeper water, until he is submerged in a spectacular flood has a role that promises to put him in the limelight with his famous brother.

Louise Fazenda, as a "Diving Fazenda," Ford Sterling playing the part of her manager-fiance, and Chester Conklin, struggling along as "Jonah," a hard-boiled taxi driver, play fast and furious ball with the comedy gags. Lucille Rickson plays the jealous young wife who starts all the trouble, and "Freddie," a trained seal, keeps the trouble from dying down. Del Andrews directed.

"Galloping Fish" is a March release of First National and one of the "1924-20."

'DRIVIN' FOOL' BREAKS RECORD AT ALTOONA HOUSE

FOUR NEW FILMS AMONG METRO RELEASES

Buster Keaton and Viola Dana Have New Starring Vehicles

THE Metro release chart for this month bears the names of four features, in which prominent stars are appearing. In the order of these release dates they are: "Women Who Give," "Sherlock, Jr.," "Don't Doubt Your Husband" and "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

The first on the list will appear this week. This is the latest of the series of productions that Reginald Barker has been making under the auspices of Metro-Louis B. Mayer. The story is taken from Sarah Greene's novel, "Cape Cod Folks," and features Frank Keenan, and Barbara Bedford along with several others of prominence.

This one will be followed the next week by "Sherlock, Jr.," another Buster Keaton feature which is a travesty on the career of a projectionist and his adventures in Hollywood where he finally weds "the Queen of the movies." The picture was directed by Keaton, himself and is a Schenck production released through Metro.

"Don't Doubt Your Husband" is the fifth Viola Dana picture which Metro is releasing this season. The feature was directed by Harry Beaumont and Alan Forrest supports Miss Dana in the leading male role.

The last of the group is the picturization of the famous Robert Service's poem, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." It is a Sawyer-Lubin Production which is now under way at the Metro Hollywood studio, under the personal supervision of Arthur Sawyer. An unusually strong cast including Barbara La Marr, Lew Cody, Mae Busch, Percy Marmont, and others will interpret the various important roles.

CONTRACTS FOR SEVERAL NEW PATHE COMEDIES

The Grand Opera House of New York City, with a seating capacity of three thousand, has arranged with Pathe for the presentation of a two-reel comedy practically every day through the month of March. A total of seven different comedies are involved in the line-up and each one is scheduled to show for a run of from one to four days.

Since it is the policy of this theatre to run only first grade comedies, Pathe looks upon these bookings as a high tribute to its product, and is hopeful of making similar arrangements for other months to follow.

They arrive in New York, oppose the imposters and are wed.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE'S a little of everything required to appeal to the popular taste in this picture, wonderfully artistic photography, sharp-edged melodramatic thrills, sentimental interest and excellent acting by a fine cast. Director Ralph Ince deserves unlimited credit for his masterly work in handling the production and "The Uninvited Guest" takes rank as a sure-fire box office attraction suitable for all classes of theatres.

For once we are given a story with South Sea atmosphere that doesn't stick to the time-worn trail. Suspense runs high, you can't guess what's coming next, the action swings into the top-notch speed right at the start and keeps going merrily to the finish. Add to this the unfamiliar beauty of the underwater shots in natural colors, easily the best effects yet attained in this phase of screen development and the result is a picture as unique as it is entertaining.

The Submarine Film Company is responsible for the production, the Williamson underwater camera patents being utilized in combination with Technicolor to elaborate the ocean photography. These scenes are an artistic joy, a whole show in themselves, with sharks, an octopus and other denizens of the deep sporting around amid a blaze of tropical color, coral formation and submarine vegetation, all filmed with marvelous accuracy of detail.

But in making this appeal to the patron's sense of the rare and beautiful; Director Ince has not failed to profit by the old Shakespearean adage—"the play's the thing!" His story isn't sacrificed to mere pictorial charm. It's frank melodrama, alright, but put across with such spectacular punch, and crammed so full of exciting situations that it runs as smooth as a clock and holds the spectators on the keen edge of expectancy up to a well turned and satisfactory climax.

Among the big scenes may be mentioned a red-hot scrap between the hero and brutal Jan Boomer, the demise of the villain in the clutching coils of a giant octopus and the burning of the ship, the latter a peculiarly vivid bit of realism. The tropic stuff is, of course, the best part of the film, but even when the action shifts to a more civilized clime, interest in the fortunes of the principal characters is still maintained.

Maurice (Lefty) Flynn plays the hero role of the sponge diver who rescues Olive Granger, after that much-abused young lady has been abandoned on a desert island by an adventuress who assumes her identity and the latter's gambler lover. The athletic "Lefty" shows to great advantage as Paul Patterson, Jean Tolley's characterization of the heroine stamps her as an actress of unusual merit, and one that speaks volumes for her future in the silent drama; Louis Wolheim scores as the repulsive Jan Boomer, a particularly effective role; Mary MacLaren makes a distinct hit as the scheming Irene Carlton and the same may be said of William Bailey's clever portrayal of Fred Morgan.

You needn't be afraid to go the limit in promising your patrons novel and satisfying entertainment when exploiting this feature. Emphasize the entrancing beauty of the undersea scenes with their natural color effects, stress the fight between villain and hero, the battle with the octopus, the story's romantic force and general melodramatic excellence. And play up every member of the cast, with especial notice paid to the work of the newcomer—Jean Tolley.

'On Time' Sacrifices Everything for Thrills and Exciting Stunts

ON TIME. A Truett Corporation Production. Story by Al Cohn. Director, Harry Lehrman. Length, 6,030 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Harry Willis	Richard Talmadge
Helen Hendon	Billy Dove
Richard Drake	Stuart Holmes
Wang Fu	George Siegmann
Horace Hendon	Charles Clary
Casanova	Tom Wilson
Mr. Black	Douglas Gerard
Dr Spinks	Fred Kirby
Mrs. Spinks	Frankie Mann

Harry Willis, a spendthrift, who has lost a fortune, promises his sweetheart, Helen Hendon, that he will amass another fortune within six months. At the end of the time limit he has failed. At a Halloween party he saves some valuable antiques from being stolen from Horace Hendon. The next day he is approached by a stranger who offers him $10,000 if he will obey instructions for a day. He agrees and action follows. He attempts to rescue a woman in distress and falls into the hands of an insane doctor who tries to operate on him. Later he is mixed up in a series of exciting incidents in a Chinese temple. He has many fights, but escapes. He later discovers that motion pictures had been taken of all his escapades and is offered a contract. He accepts and wins Helen.

By LEN MORGAN

FOR those who like thrills and stunts at the sacrifice of plot, "On Time" will offer a great appeal. From start to finish it is a series of stunts and knock-down-drag-out fights in which Richard Talmadge occupies the center of the limelight.

He does many stunts of daring that are almost lost owing to the weakness of the plot. He has no less than a dozen fights with odds at least ten to one against him and always manages to come out victorious with little or no wear and tear on his personal appearance.

The picture is much too overdrawn to carry conviction, but it will please that large class of theatre patrons who crave excitement of the serial variety. The same action devoted to a story with more plot would have resulted in an interesting picture.

It is not the fault of the cast that the picture is not all that it should be. Richard Talmadge works hard and does everything that is required of him. He is strongly supported by Billy Dove and Tom Wilson.

Tom Wilson, as a colored valet, furnishes the comedy for the picture. He appears in most of the scenes with Talmadge and his antics are really funny.

The most exciting scenes of the play take place in the doctor's operating room where the insane doctor is about to transplant a human brain to an ape; and the Chinese temple, where Talmadge shows his gymnastic ability.

In exploiting the picture it should be easy to make large clock dials, with the hands pointing to the hour of showing of the picture. Small cards may also bear a clock dial with the words "Be 'On Time' to see Richard Talmadge in his new thriller," or other similar phrases.

'Fools Highway' Abounds in Rich Heart Interest Values

FOOLS HIGHWAY. Universal Jewel Production. Adapted from Owen Kildare's "My Mamie Rose." Directed by Irving Cummings. Length, 7,431 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mamie Rose	Mary Philbin
Mike Kildare	Pat O'Malley
The Boss	Lincoln Plummer
Jackie Doodle	Edwin J. Brady
Old Levi	Max Davidson
Max	William Collier, Jr.
Mrs. Flannigan	Kate Price

Mamie Rose, little mender in the shop of Old Levi, is loved by Mike Kildare, pugilist and ward-heeler of the Bowery. She repulses his advances, horrified by his business, but still fascinated by the man's brute strength and animal attraction. When he discovers his love for her is a true and holy thing he forsakes his gang. They lay a trap for him and he is horribly beaten in an underground den. Then follows a gripping denouement, in which Mike wins the girl and joins forces with society against the law breakers of his old days.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

A BOWERY waif whose body is so tiny, but whose purity and charm reflects a glowing light on the drab atmosphere of the colorless little world in which she dwells, establishes once and for all the dramatic art of Mary Philbin.

In "Fools Highway," an epic of New York's old time Bowery, Mary Philbin doesn't exist. She is lost in her marvelous portrayal of the little mender, Mamie Rose. She works and plays, she laughs and cries, and hates and loves, and all the time she tugs at the heart-strings as the little girl whose only world goes round beneath the rumble of steam elevated trains and whose pulse quickens at the sight of a Bowery tough.

Pat O'Malley plays the tough. And oh how tough! Contenders for his title of King Pin among the East Side mit slingers, find this out, much to their rue and physical discomfort. The old Bowery is born again. Its quaint characters once more live romantic lives. One loves Levi, the old tailor; and the big Irishwoman; one thrills at the battles of the redoubtable Mike Kildare—disapproves of him, perhaps, but can't help liking the swaggering scapegrace.

One weeps with Mary Philbin in her tragic moments, and follows breathlessly the march of events on the Bowery, in the quaint honky-tonk theatre. Queer old people, ladies with dirty shawls and odd little hats, smeary faced children in arms, bland visaged yellow men, give a realistic touch of romance and mystery for which underworlds are generally noted.

Throughout it all, the spirit of drama prevails masterfully. The story runs straight and unswerving on its vehicle of pathos, love, sacrifice, and human interest. Folks in Squeedunk, Ohio, as well as those but a stone's throw of the present Bowery, will find in "Fools Highway" something that will absorb their attention. The blood can't refrain from leaping to the flashing smash of Mike's indomitable fists. And the eyes are indeed lost to sensations if they don't take on a misty film when young Levi bows to love's inexorable law.

In effecting tie-ups for this film, an "Old Song Night," in which the songs of long ago will be sung by the audience, should be amply heralded. A street ballyhoo on an old tandem bicycle, placarded "On the Way to 'Fools Highway,'" and giving the name of the theatre, should attract the kind of attention that pays. Don't forget, also to play ball with the florist. The catchline, "Mamie Rose" can serve as the basis of a tie-up which should be of mutual benefit.

'The Woman Who Sinned' Strong in Sensational Situations, Pathos and Heart Interest

THE WOMAN WHO SINNED. Finis Fox Photoplay. Author and Director, Finis Fox. Length, 6,500 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Wall Street Broker Morgan Wallace
His Wife Irene Rich
Minister Lucien Littlefield
Minister's Wife Mae Busch
Minister's Son Rex Lease

A Wall Street broker who is unfaithful to his wife, manages to have her placed in an insane asylum. On a yachting trip he traps the young wife of a minister. She escapes, but feeling disgraced, leaves her boy and husband. Supposed to be dead, she turns up fifteen years later, revenges herself on the broker, who is sent to jail and subsequently killed by his injured spouse. The minister, his wife and son are finally reunited.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS is a rattling good box office attraction which can hardly fail to get across with vim wherever it is shown. It possesses all the elements of popular appeal, sensational thrills, pathos, fast action and a plot, which for all its melodramatic coloring, is so cleverly handled that it carries conviction.

Finis Fox wrote the story and directed the picture. In his dual capacity he has never lost sight of the fact that the great thing in dealing with serious drama is to stimulate heart interest and touch the sympathetic chords with an unerring hand and this he has accomplished magnificently.

Even the supposed lapse of fifteen years during the action, usually a tough species of jump to hurdle in picture land without tearing the continuity to tatters, is successfully bridged and leaves no unsatisfactory gap in the march of events. The beginning of the feature shows the heroine, her husband and child enjoying all the sweets of happy domestic life in small town surroundings. These scenes are beautifully handled and furnish an admirable contrast with those which follow, when evil fate thrusts the young wife into the whirl of gilded life in New York's Bohemia.

There are many big dramatic moments, that of the young mother standing in the rain outside her home, watching unperceived the baby who is wailing for the soothing touch of her tender hand, is infinitely pathetic. Her revenge on the villainous broker who has ruined her happiness is cleverly worked out through a series of ingeniously moulded "vamping" situations and the meeting between mother and son at the last, when her regeneration is brought about, leaves nothing to be desired in the way of a bully climax.

It is something of a feat to drag a heroine through the swamp of a tarnished reputation without causing her to lose an audience's sympathy in some degree, but this is just what has been done in "The Woman Who Sinned."

Mae Busch carries off the chief dramatic honors in the role of the minister's wife, giving a performance as remarkable for versatility as emotional power. Morgan Wallace registers splendidly as the rascally broker, who is very thoroughly murdered to the satisfaction of everybody near the finish, by the spouse whom he consigned to the loony house. Irene Rich plays the latter role with considerable energy and charm. Lucien Littlefield is excellent as the youthful minister, and Rex Lease, in the juvenile part of the son, contributes a character sketch which stands out as one of the best things in the picture.

The photography includes a wealth of finely executed exteriors and interiors, with superb long shots and clear, distinct lighting adding to the features artistic lure. The title possesses exploitation value, and you can list the story's emotional appeal and dramatic strength as promising eminently satisfactory entertainment, without fear of any after protest by your patrons. Mae Busch, Lucien Littlefield and Irene Rich are the best-known players, but the work of Morgan Wallace and Rex Lease should be recognized in your advertising.

STAR PLEASING; STORY POOR

Baby Peggy Charms, But Plot Is Too Obvious and Forced

THE LAW FORBIDS. Universal Photoplay. Author, Bernard McConville. Director, Jesse Robbins. Length, 6,293 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Peggy Baby Peggy
Paul Remsen Robert Ellis
Rhoda Remsen Elinor Fair
Inez Lamont Winifred Bryson
John Martin James Corrigan
Martha Martin Anna Hernandez
Judge Joseph Dowling

Paul Remsen and his wife, Rhoda, separate. Rhoda takes their child, Peggy, with her to the country. Peggy makes her way to New York in search of her father. He has become entangled with an actress starring in a new play he has written. The child wanders on to the stage on the first night of the production. Through her a reconciliation is brought about between the parents.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THE drawing power of this picture is vested entirely in the person of the tiny star, whose admirers are many and not disposed to be ultra critical as regards any film exploiting their favorite. This is fortunate, so far as the market value of "The Law Forbids" is concerned, for with Baby Peggy out of the cast it would have little to offer in the way of entertainment.

The plot is of conventional type, running along smoothly enough, but not particularly interesting, until the final reel is reached, when a surprise climax is rather cleverly worked out. The chief fault of the scenario is that it is too obviously designed to force the wee leading lady to the front in close-ups innumerable and situations "dragged in by the ears" so to speak. Baby Peggy is as wonderful a little pantomimist as ever, bewitching all hearts with her impish smile and cute tricks, but it is asking a good deal of the winsome kiddie to carry the burden of a seven-reeler based on such an inadequate story.

It is in its comedy appeal that the picture scores best, when Peggy and her pet rooster, Alexander, are making matters lively. The sentimental stuff is decidedly weak, Peggy's pretty mother wins sympathy, but the hero registers as a cheap sort of skate who comes off a whole lot better than he deserves in the long run.

The child's appearance on the stage during the first night performance of her father's play, in which the author substitutes for a drunken leading man, results in the reconciliation of the parents, and is an ingeniously handled scene, although very much on the hokum order. The back-stage episodes are colorful, the theatre interior and audience views well filmed, the camera offers some pretty rustic shots and good lighting prevails.

Baby Peggy's powers of mimicry are undeniable and she plays the role of small Miss Remsen with her usual charm and sweetness. Robert Ellis does the best he can with the disagreeable part of Paul Remsen, Elinor Fair is an attractive figure as his wife, and Winifred Bryson's portrayal of Inez Lamont a creditable "vamping" sketch.

For exploitation purposes Baby Peggy must be played up as prominently as possible. Record some of her previous triumphs, especially that achieved in "The Darling of New York," praise her work as much as you please, but go slow in boosting the story.

Old Mark Ridgway dies suddenly on his ranch, without having signed a will by which his foreman, Tom Taylor, was to inherit his property, which includes a big irrigation dam. Mark's daughter, Miriam, and her brother Reginald arrive from the East. They are the new owners and are tricked by Deerfoot and a band of outlaws who want to obtain control of the dam. After many adventures Tom Taylor defeats the plotters and wins Miriam for his wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

WHEREVER Western pictures are much in demand "North of Nevada" ought to fill the bill satisfactorily and show good box office results. It is melodrama of the most pronounced kind, a regular buzz-saw of whirling action from start to finish. Even the high-brows who may smile tolerantly at its unabashed "hokum," cannot fail to be amused by its swiftly moving sequences of wild adventure by flood and field. There's always a market for such films when properly produced, and this ranks as one of the best of the type.

The plot has the merit of originality and Director Albert Rogell turns and twists it into many unexpected odd corners so deftly that the suspense never slackens. Incidentally, he owes much for results attained to the loyal co-operation of a very fine cast.

A large proportion of Western features are constructed on the "condensed serial formula, with jumpy, straggling, plots and continuity gaps filled in by the simple process of staging some hair-breadth escape or stunt episode. But "North of Nevada" tells a straight story, with closely linked situations and continuity developed and maintained to a surprising extent in a film of this class.

Not that there is any lack of thrill stuff or sensational punches. There is a plethora of savage physical combats, staged amid frowning cliffs, on the edge of precipices, all as realistic as they make 'em and filmed with spectacular success. Tom Taylor's fight with the renegade Indian, Deerfoot, is a lulu of a scrap, the hero's rescue from drowning by his faithful steed registers as another incident with a tremendous "gallery" appeal, and the said horse, Silver King by name, deserves especial mention as an equine actor second to none of his four-footed screen brethren in point of camera talent.

The athletic Fred Thomson is cast as hero Tom Taylor and plays the part with irresistible dash and vigor, showing to great advantage in his riding exploits. Hazel Keener is a pretty heroine, dramatically effective and pleasingly natural, George Magrill shines as the dark-skinned traitor Indian, Deerfoot, and excellent support is given the principals by others in the cast. Not the least of the pictures attractive qualities is its admirable photography. There are many exceedingly beautiful and impressive views of mountain, plain and river, with skillful long shots and close-ups. The most captious critic could hardly find fault with the fine atmospheric detail and scenic charm of this Monogram studios production.

You can safely exploit this as a bully Westerner, something out of the ordinary and alive with sensational thrills and romantic lure.

Margo Le Blanc, left a small fortune by her foster mother, goes to Monte Carlo and loses it all. She is falling into the hands of a scheming thief when she chances to make the acquaintance of Hugh Kildair, an artist who lives in the same house. When he hears her story he offers to make her his housekeeper, the arrangement being that they shall live together as sister and brother. Kildair is soon caught in the trap set for him by a gang of thieves who try to force from him a cipher system entrusted to him by an old professor. The gang is foiled by the arrival of the police, while the experience has opened Kildair's eyes to the fact that he loves Margot, who has loved him right along. They are married without further delay and return home as husband and wife this time.

By HENRIETTE SLOANE

BEAUTIFUL sets, good acting and a few sensational twists and thrills save the day for "Poisoned Paradise" and will probably be the factors which cast the production among the box office successes. Billed as "the forbidden story of Monte Carlo," the film unfolds the lives of a few of the millions of souls who stake their all on the roulette wheel.

Though the story itself is not at all unusual it has been handled delicately and effectively with the result that it emerges from the realm of mediocrity and enters the exalted station of good entertainment.

We have never been in Monte Carlo, but according to persons who have been there, and also saw the film, the scenes showing the Casino at Monte Carlo are honest to the last detail and express perfectly all the beauty of the place.

Nothing but the highest praise can be accorded Clara Bow, who is not only extremely comely and winsome but remarkably convincing. Her performance both when she is at the heights of exaltation, and when she is cast into the depths of despair, is nothing short of inspired. There is every reason to suppose that she will become a great favorite in a short time, and her performance in this picture will do much to put her there.

The rest of the cast, too, is remarkably capable, especially Carmel Myers, who plays the part of the thief's accomplice to perfection. It is little wonder Kildair falls prey to her wiles.

Besides the selling power of the story itself there is the possibility of great publicity through wide exploitation. Perhaps the most sensational of these is the advertising campaign in which it is stressed that "Poisoned Paradise" is the "forbidden story of Paris and Monte Carlo." When the story first appeared in the city which it concerns, it created a furore and was immediately suppressed because it preached a sermon on the evils of the colony. If plenty of publicity is given this phase it is bound to arouse interest.

Then there is a splendid book store tie-up. The book already has had a large circulation, since it is by a well known author, but it is as nothing compared to what still can be done in the way of sales when it is linked up with the motion picture.

Ben Jordan colors the dull life of his New England home by indulging in various dissipations. He sets fire to a barn and disappears, to avoid arrest. His mother dies, leaving her property to her ward, Jane Crosby. Jane tries to reform Richard and falls in love with him. At first attracted by his vamp cousin, Nettie Moore, Richard finally realizes that he loves Jane and all ends well.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

WELL directed, handsomely photographed and cleverly acted, "Icebound" registers as a good box office attraction, the sort of picture which is likely to appeal favorably to the average screen fan. Its strength lies in its intensely human theme, the unselfish love of a girl whose patience and wisdom work wonders in the way of transforming a somewhat shiftless youth into a man capable of facing the hard facts of life.

Despite its rather misleading title, which carries a suggestion of adventures in the frozen wastes of the Arctic regions, there is nothing in the least spectacular about the picture, the action taking place in a small New England town and depicting the everyday doings of a lot of everyday folks, without a single sensational thrill or touch of melodrama.

Yet this simple story possesses unusual pathos, charm and the power to awaken one's emotional sensibilities. It is a study in characters, so to speak, achieving telling contrasts in human nature, the sternly sad old mother, her disillusioned son, back from service in France and sick of the drab existence he is leading, the other greedy members of the Jordan family and the self-sacrificing Jane Crosby—all these people are interesting and refreshingly natural against the bleak backgrounds of a wintry New England landscape. A particularly true-to-life scene is that in which the grasping, anxious relatives gather in the parlor of the Jordan home to await the demise of the old lady and reading of her will by the family lawyer. Here pathos and comedy mingle in generous quantity and the congratulations of the on-lookers go forth heartily to the girl who, to the horror-stricken surprise of the money-seekers, is pronounced the sole heiress.

Many of Director William De Mille's contemporaries might well take pattern after the way in which that astute gentleman has handled the death episode. Instead of giving closeup after closeup of the dying woman at full length, with more or less agonizing facial contortions in evidence, there are just a few glimpses of the sick-room shown, with the end of the bed protruding and physician standing by it. You never see her face, and final dissolution is announced merely by the doctor drawing up the coverlet towards the head. That's all, and quite sufficient too!

The plot is neatly built up, the continuity a credit to the scenario-writer and suspense is not lacking. For one thing, it seems by no means certain that Jane will wed the ex-soldier boy, for at one stage of the proceedings, the worthy lawyer looks as though he might prove the winner. This notion is quickly dispelled, however, but it helps greatly in developing the situation's interest.

To Lois Wilson, the Jane Crosby of the play, must be awarded the chief dramatic honors. Miss Wilson is quietly effective, her wistful smile strangely alluring, and considered as a study in repressed emotions, her portrayal of the role can be listed as an artistic triumph. Richard Dix is pleasing in the part of Ben Jordan, Vera Reynolds wins favor as the flirtatious young miss who comes so close to trapping and gaining the hero's affections, and Edna May Oliver contributes timely comedy relief in her impersonation of Hannah, the servant. The support, as a whole, is excellent and the photography throughout of first-class quality.

In exploiting the feature be careful to explain that the title refers to frozen feelings in a mental sense, or your patrons may expect a tale of thrills and danger in the North. You can praise the story as intensely human, sympathetic, presented by a splendid cast, and play up the names of Lois Wilson, Richard Dix and Vera Reynolds.

Michael Frazer, who has made several million dollars through the invention of a patent can-opener, aspires to rise in society. Cleo, his wife, is old fashioned and does not wish to climb. Michael plans to have his estate transformed into a beauty garden and seeks bids for the work. Mrs. Ballard, whose husband is a landscape artist, strikes up a friendship with Frazer in order to secure the work for her husband. The friendship ripens and they plan to run away together. Jack Ballard learns of it and to teach Frazer a lesson he plans to run away with Frazer's daughter. An automobile wreck spoils the plans and both families are reunited.

By LEN MORGAN

JAMES KIRKWOOD is his very best in "Discontented Husbands." The story gives him ample opportunity to demonstrate his ability as a versatile actor and he makes the picture one of great interest. The story is unusual and should have a strong appeal to the theatre patron. There is a strong vein of comedy but it is secondary to the heart appeal.

The acting of Kirkwood, as a social climber, is not overdone and the captions are worded in such a way as to draw numerous laughs. Mrs. Frazer insists on calling her husband "Mike," much to his annoyance and once during a dinner party she lowers the chances of social ambition by referring to the cost of her table cover. Kirkwood during these scenes is excellent. Grace Darmond is cast in a difficult role and shows up to excellent advantage.

Cleo Madison, as Mrs. Frazer, wins sympathy with her appealing acting.

Carmelita Geraghty and Arthur Rankin, young lovers, produce most of the comedy with their numerous spats.

The highlights of the picture are the scenes between Frazer and his wife, in which she tries to show him the error of his ways. An automobile wreck is staged, and it is a thriller. The machine rolls over an embankment and lands upside down. The fight between Dick and a tramp is more subtle than thrilling. It shows clever directing.

There are many ways to tie-up with shops for advertising. Beauty shops and drug stores can display cards worded "keep beautiful and your husband will be content." Bread stores can advertise "Feed your husband our bread and he will be contented."

James Kirkwood's name has a strong drawing attraction. Use it unsparingly in advertising the picture.

THE SHOWMAN AND THE SHORT FEATURE

By J. R. BRAY

President, Bray Productions, Inc.

SO much has already been written on the subject of the potentialities of the short length feature and its importance as an entertainment factor in the average exhibitor's program that I am somewhat hesitant as to just where to begin.

To my mind the fact that the theatre owner everywhere is more and more calling attention to the short subjects on his program is a very healthy sign. It indicates that as a showman he is coming to realize that the best of them at least have a distinct drawing power, in many cases equaling that of the multiple reel feature on the bill.

It goes without saying also, that the "big little feature" has sent many an audience away satisfied, where its lengthier competitor would have left them bored or disappointed. This value in the short subject, the comedy cartoon, novel scenic or nature picture, the average exhibitor has long realized, but it is only recently, I think, that he has come to see that this part of his program is worthy of a measure of the exploitation that he gives his bigger attractions and has a direct and definite influence on his box office.

Of course, I do not mean that this is true of all the short length subjects that the exhibitor has to handle. Far from it. But I do refer to those of standard excellence and known drawing power.

Let him give a little more attention to these and he will soon see results.

Many exhibitors already have tried this out with some of the regular offerings of the Bray Studios and have found, in many cases, that it has not only built up business on their dull nights, but has also resulted in bringing to their houses a new clientele, patrons who came solely to see the short subjects on the bill and not to view the long length feature.

This is especially true of the Colonel Heeza Liar Cartoon series now being released for us by the Standard Cinema Corporation as is evidenced by the fact that many theatres have repeated their bookings on some of the mirth-provoking subjects in this series, as often as six or seven times, and still keep coming back for more.

In my opinion this surely is indicative of their box office drawing power, for an exhibitor to consider booking Colonel Heeza Liar a second or a third time or oftener as has frequently happened, if he did not find a very real and pressing demand for this popular pen and ink character among his regular patrons.

The same must be true of many of the leading short reel releases on other programs besides that of Bray Studios and I feel that the exhibitor-showman is steadily recognizing the possibilities of the short length feature more and more.

From the producer's end the constant aim of Bray Productions, Inc., is to give the exhibitor a well balanced short

Frenzied Finance and The Newsreel

THE telephone of a theatre in the vicinity of Wall Street's financial district rings. Mr. Financial Expert and Mr. Business Leader are asking when the news reel goes on. When told it's to run in ten minutes, over they rush—and in quiet relaxation see this pictured newspaper, then back to the busy marts of trade!

This interesting occurrence was revealed when the International Editorial staff made a canvass of the theatre in that locality. They were told by the theatre managers that some of the country's biggest financial experts and business leaders go regularly to neighborhood houses solely and only to see the news reel.

A great argument for the news reel, for such recognition contains a world of meaning. Wouldn't be surprised if Mrs. Housewife would appreciate the opportunity to pop in a minute after the daily marketing was done—just to see what the rest of the world was up to, before going back to the daily chores.

And speaking of the International News Reel, beginning with No. 22, released March 8, a series of safety first pictures made in co-operation with the New York Police, are being shown.

Special Deputy Police Commissioner Barron Collier, E. B. Hatrick, General Manager of the International and William Brandt, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, planned the series and worked it out under their personal supervision.

'The Cake Eater'—Pathe

2 reels

If the boys can't play practical jokes—just because the efficiency man thinks it wastes valuable time—they'll leave. Will Rogers, he of the 'homely but honest' face, is elected to reason with the new owners, two spinsters and a poor relation. The romantic spinsters admire his perfect profile and strong-er-limbs, set their caps for him, and feed him cakes made by their own lily white hands. He just naturally ain't a "cake-eater" and they make him sick. For a while it looks as though he'll be ensnared, particularly as his pals are agin' him—just another of their little practical jokes.

Those who are familiar with Rogers stage work will revel in the witty titles (written by him) in which he pokes fun at himself in particular and everything in general.

A good little plot with some real chuckles that will leave a lasting impression.

Some may disagree with the resolution here—that hubby goes off to the hospital—but they won't disagree when they see how Alice Howell manages her husband, Neely Edwards.

'Why Mice Leave Home'—Pathe

Amusing cartoon

1 reel

Farmer Al Falfa and Milton Cat learn another Aesop Fable truth—everything that goes up must come down—refreshingly humorous.

'Love's Reward'—Pathe

Hal Roach's trained monkeys burlesque that time-worn theme of young love triumphant to perfection. While the youngsters will be satisfied just watching the animals, grown-ups will be apt to chuckle with delight over every bit of business—the stupid goose, cast as a house detective, Bad Bill Sikes who steals the "jools," the poor but honest hero, cast as a room clerk and in love with the proprietor's daughter, they're all here. And after the hero saves father and the "jools" the lovers win a "God bless you, my children," from stern papa. You'll be giving your audience something really amusing when you run this latest "Dippy-Doo-Dad."

BIG LITTLE FEATURE

That thrill that comes once in a lifetime isn't worth a shoot when the other fellow holds five aces too, as you'll discover in Pathe's "Ten Dollars or Ten Days." It's shoot or get shot!

'Under Orders'—Educational

Highly entertaining

2 reels

Clyde Cook wins the prize this time. In "Under Orders" he has a vehicle that suits him to perfection. Of course, you've heard the joke about the private who, after about facing until he's dizzy, rebels and tells the drill sergeant to make up his mind—but you've got to see Cook do it to realize just how funny the situation can be. Yes, he joins the marines to get away from his militant wife but he hasn't many happy moments until the fadeout when both his wife and the drill sergeant go overboard.

'The Oriental Game'—Universal

First rate comedy

2 reels

Pal, we're convinced, is a wise dog. His opinion of Mah Jong coincides with ours—not so good! He's up on radio too, and when his master's voice signals an S. O. S., Pal rushes to the rescue. He foils Harry Sweet's rival and then tactfully leaves Harry and his girl to their love scene. Imagine a star not in on the fadeout. We'll wager that the only regret your patrons will have, is that there isn't more of it.

'Reno or Bust'—Educational

2 reels

Mechanical effects, straight "gags," ludicrous situations and the energetic Bobby Vernon put this comedy over in great style. The ambitious mother can't prevent Bobby from marrying her daughter but she certainly puts a lot of obstacles in his path. Bobby leaves a crew of police stranded in the middle of a desert and they have to hoof it back to town. The slow motion camera gets a screamingly funny effect of them, hours later, just barely able to move their feet from the ground as they plod wearily along.

'Zeb vs. Paprika'—Pathe

Horses and things

2 reels

A highly laughable take-off on the classic racing event between Zev and Papyrus, in which Stan Laurel plays the role of "Dippy" Donawho, "one of the best jockeys that ever slipped a headache powder to a rival horse." James Finlayson, Ena Gregory and George Rowe appear in the supporting cast. Laurel in training is a thing of beauty, quite all that the young man should wear and when it comes to trotting, no horse has anything on him. Stan Laurel fans will not be disappointed in this one.

'Keep Healthy'—Universal

Amateur doctors

1 reel

Remember how Harold Lloyd and a pal, by pretending to be a doctor and patient, pull a fake cure in sight of a crowd and drum up a lot of business for a real doctor? Well, Slim Summerville and Bobby Dunn pull the same stunt with much the same effect—a good laugh. But the patients they collect are far too hungry to realize any profits, so the two master minds devise a scheme to get rid of them. A fair number of laughs and no dragging moments.

'The Mandan's Oath'—Pathe

Indian frontier series

2 reels

This time the Indian tells of an actual occurrence growing out of the epidemic of smallpox in 1838 which practically exterminated the Mandan tribe. Through the action of a crazy Scot they are befriending, two white prisoners are set free—despite the fact that a Mandan cunning tries to prove them spies. In addition to the full-blooded Indian cast. Hedda Nova, Jack Mower, Al Hallett and William Bertram aid in telling the tale. An interesting example of Indian ethics is brought out when the white man is told that no ill or demented person is harmed.

'Big Boy Blue'—Universal

A "Leather Pusher"

2 reels

The Kid (Billy Sullivan) falls in love with an English girl and Wildcat George registers deep disgust. But strange to say Janet's family don't fancy a pugilist for a son-in-law—that is, not until Dad sees him knock out the English champion. One of the best Big Little Features that carries a powerful box office punch—a punch that means profit for you when you run it.

Big Little Feature Program Suggestions

These Short and Sweets Will Fill Any Requirement of That 'All Short' Program, Now Being Run So Successfully. Each Program Combines Comedy and Drama and Is Picked from the Best of Recent Releases.

Pathe's Programs

SUNDAY CALM—2 reels. Once the kids of "Our Gang" comedy fame get under way there is nothing having the slightest resemblance to "calm." Bugs, field mice, hop-toads, a tame bear, and the poor distracted parents have a perfectly miserable day of it with the kids on the rampage.

LOVEY-DOVEY—1 reel. A "Dippy-Doo-Dad," with a monkey and a duck playing Romeo and Juliet. Here is a number that we can, without hesitation, recommend as one of the funniest "Dippy-Doo-Dads" ever shown.

THE MAN WHO SMILED—2 reels. Second of the "Indian Frontier" series. A thrilling incident in the life of Left Hand, famous Indian scout in the employ of the United States Government. Swift action, some romance and a few touches of humor combine to make it an excellent Big Little Feature.

GOOD OLD DAYS—1 reel. A football game attended by all the animals of Jungleland—with a great deal of action and fun, presented in an unusually entertaining way distinguishes that Aesop Film Fable.

BIG BUSINESS—2 reels. Our Gang runs a modern barber shop. Up with the best of these and that's saying something, as these comedies have set a high standard for two reel entertainment.

THE FRONTIER WOMAN—3 reels. Fifth of the "Chronicles of America," produced by the Yale University Press. It can be made the basis of interesting and profitable tie-ups when you are running it. Local patriotic and civic organizations will doubtless welcome the opportunity to tie-up.

GIRLS AND RECORDS—1 reel. Touches of sly humor in the contrast of the girl of yesterday, demure and dainty, with her robust, athletic sister of today. Grantland Rice's titles well written and sustain the action. A distinct novelty.

TWO WAGONS—BOTH COVERED—2 reels. Rogers renders a highly amusing burlesque characterization of the role played by Ernest Torrence and J. Warren Kerrigan in the original story. This ought to furnish plenty of entertainment to any one.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 6—1 reel. A timely number in the form of a camera study of "The Heart of Mexico." A "Sealing Wax Stunt" a Popular Science contribution and among other subjects a Pathecolor, "In the Heart of the Tyrol."

FULLY INSURED—2 reels. The big idea behind the plot is this: one of the characters conceives a style of insurance, premium which assures the holder a continued salary whenever he is out of a job. "Snub" Pollard proves the fallacy of the plan.

TAKING A CHANCE—1 reel. Grantland Rice's "Spotlight" showing the part that nerve and courage plays in every branch of sport. It can be counted on to give your audience a few thrilling minutes.

THE MAN WHO WOULD NOT DIE—2 reels. First of the "Indian Frontier" series made with the assistance of Colonel T. J. McCoy who secured the services of the Indian used in "The Covered Wagon." The historical angle and the Indian angle both open up fruitful fields for publicity work.

AT FIRST SIGHT—1 reel. Introducing Charles Chase. A pleasing screen personality, a dapper dresser in cutaway coat and top hat. All about mistaken identity.

MOTHER'S JOY—2 reels. Laurel's attempt to entertain his wealthy grandfather's guests proves a thoroughly laughable affair, and a wedding ceremony staged at the end of the footage is calculated to win a loud and hearty laugh in any type of house.

POWDER AND SMOKE—1 reel. Charlie Chase appears as a salesman of lighting rods who keeps on getting mixed up with a gang of Western bandits.

PICKING PEACHES—2 reels. Mack Sennett proves it again. He's one of the best little pickers in the comedy field. Harry Langdon is his latest. This first comedy of his will make them laugh from the first inch on and the bathing beauties do their bit to make the audience forget its troubles.

ONE SPOOKY NIGHT—2 reels. Billy Bevan in the role of an innocent country lad who is fleeced by a city slick. This picture packs at least a dozen good laughs.

HELP ONE ANOTHER—2 reels. Mr. and Mrs. Spat agree to repaint their country house. A combination of the slapstick and the subtle. Mostly in the titles.

TEN DOLLARS OR TEN DAYS—2 reels. Turpin in a maze of trouble in which a pretty girl is very much involved. Lively.

JUST A MINUTE—1 reel. The only tears likely to be spilt at this showing will be tears of laughter. Chase is an auto salesman who is forced to keep his bride-to-be waiting at the church while he demonstrates.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 5—1 reel. Pretty pictorial bit "The Dells of Wisconsin"; "The Staff of Life," showing the difference in bread making today and in primitive times; and a Pathecolor, "The Valley of White Ribbons," Dauphine, France.

THE DARKEST HOUR—2 reels. The Spat Family turn bootleggers and brew their own. Many complications interfere with the manufacture and the comedy ends in a veritable riot of fun and action.

WILD AND WOOLY—1 reel. Cow punchers and broncho busters aren't performing for the camera or an audience in this instance—just hard, everyday work, but Grantland Rice's slow motion enables the audience to see how difficult it all is.

THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA—1 reel. Sense and nonsense cleverly intermingled in Howes "Hodge Podge," showing among other things fisherman off Sicily and Coney Island's myriad lights, far better than the naked eye could see it.

FLIP FLOPS—2 reels. A Mack Sennett offering with Alberta Vaughn, Lewis Sargent, Jack Cooper and Andy Clyde and circus elephant with the action on the circus lot. An occasional touch of the thrilling serves to make this laughable and entertaining.

THE GREAT OUTDOORS—2 reels. The Spat Family are out camping and meet with one mishap after another until the distracted family accidentally start a forest fire. Plenty of action, some genuine laughs and an unexpected ending.

AMONG THE MISSING—1 reel. A mother of war-ridden France, who has lost all of her sons but one is filled with joy when he returns—only to discover he is a deserter. And then—rather than deliver him to the searching squad, she kills him. A powerful drama in miniature!

THE COWBOY SHEIK—2 reels. In this subject Will Rogers gives a characterization of a bashful cowboy suitor. Because newspaper throughout the country are running a syndicated column written by Rogers, you can make this a real box-office asset.

POSTAGE DUE—2 reels. Good slapstick. Stan Laurel has himself photographed as Venus on a postal card. Then he tries to recover the postal card and blunders into a plot to rob the mails.

RURAL ROMANCE—1 reel. The city ruffian steals the simple country maiden from the arms of her rustic lover—but all ends well for these simple lovers in this Aesop Film Fable.

DANIAL BOONE—3 reels. Another of the "Chronicles of Amercia" series produced by the Yale University Press. Will not only entertain but instruct as well. The prestige of any house showing a number of this kind will be advanced in the esteem of its audience.

POLITICAL PULL—2 reels. The latest family war of the Spat Family—result of brother's political ambitions. The unwelcome visit of the widow next door and her young "brat" helps complicate things and make the situations more laughable.

OLYMPIC MERMAIDS—1 reel. The champion swimmers in training at Bermuda for the Olympia games. Remarkable under-sea views—every difficult stroke and trick in swimming is shown by the slow motion—under water!

PETER STUYVESANT—3 reels. Historical drama of the surrender of New Amsterdam to the English. Staunch patriotic Americans will delight in these series and mothers and teachers will be your allies in making this popular with the kiddies.

HALF-BACK OF NOTRE DAME—2 reels. Football as it shouldn't be played is demonstrated by Harry Gribbon and Jack Cooper of the Castoris College team. Bathing beauties, a trick magnet and bicycle-aeroplane, also do their bit towards making the movie-goer laugh.

THE CALL OF THE GAME—1 reel. Grantland Rice's "Sportlight," showing the World Series baseball games—the mountain forest, playground of the hunter—thousands of football routers on the field of the great Yale Bowl—the peace and quiet of the shady stream, delight of the angler. Action, variety and pleasing backgrounds.

Universal's Programs

SUCH IS LIFE—1 reel. Baby Peggy, the particular joy of neighborhood houses, certainly is a riot as a waif in London. Good supporting cast and the photography of the snow scenes is exceptionally artistic.

EASY WORK—1 reel. Bobby Dunn is tricked into marrying an old maid called from the lists of a matrimonial agency. The end comes with Bobby going after his friend Slim Summerville, who arranged the marriage, with a gun. Good for a number of laughs.

HATS OFF—2 reels. Pete Morrison as a tenderfoot. Molly laughs at his dudsish cowboy outfit, but Pete kidnaps her after a dance, tells her he's going to marry her and finally does.

THE MANDARIN—1 reel. You'd have have to go a long way to find any one who would deny that Neely Edwards and Bert Roach are funny. Fun in a restaurant scene when the heroes are unable to pay their bill. And more laughs when they run an Oriental store. A sure fire one-reeler.

A TOUGH TENDERFOOT—2 reels. These "Leather Pushers" can be relied on to hold the interest throughout. "Ptomaine" Tommy is still good for a few laughs. Joe Murphy as the polished, efficient manager is as good as ever.

A MATTER OF POLICY—2 reels. Edwards and Roach in a good comedy. When a man sticks his hand through the cage of a man-eating lion, in the hopes of having it bitten off so that he can collect insurance an audience must laugh in spite of itself.

HANSEL AND GRETEL—2 reels. Baby Peggy alone would be an attraction, but Peggy combined with an old fairy tale favorite, leaves nothing to be desired. Trick camera work and an excellent cast including a boy (not named) who plays "foolish Hans."

GIRLS WILL BE GIRLS—2 reels. In this one of the "Kid" falls in love with a society girl whose aunt is running a fight for charity. The plot is unravelled with interest and power.

OWN A LOT—2 reels. A satiric bit on the over-enthusiastic and over-numerous real estate salesmen of California. Lots of attractive shots of the Century Follies Girls in the garb of bathing beauties.

THE ALMOST GOOD MAN—2 reels. Harry Carey in a dramatic and tense story. It makes a splendid piece of entertainment to balance a short program.

THAT KID FROM MADRID—2 reels. This new "Leather Pusher" starts with the announcement that Reginald Denny has retired from the ring. The discovery of a new champion is revealed in the person of a young kid from a lumber camp (Billy Sullivan) who knocks out a restaurant bouncer.

THE JAIL BIRD—1 reel. Neely Edwards and Bert Roach are in this. 'Nuff said! Nervy Ned after serving a twenty-five year jail sentence gets so used to it that he runs his mansion on the same plan as the jail. A lot of convicts break loose and attend a party at Ned's house and as Ned and his valet jump into a small pool they wake up to find they've been dreaming under a fountain spray in the park.

THE RICH PUP—2 reels. A few thrills and a good many laughs. Pal, the Century Dog makes his usual appeal to animal lovers and plays like an experienced actor. Baby Dawn O'Day adds to the appeal.

THE LEATHER PUSHERS—2 reels. The second of this series upholds the reputation established as being among the best ever released in the field of shorts. A gripping story, a dandy fight, love.

THE LAST OUTLAW—1 reel. A departure from the usual boy-and-girl romance, depicting an outlaw who returns to his home town in time to rescue his daughter from a tragic marriage to the local bootlegger.

KEEP GOING—2 reels. Jack Earle and Harry McCoy are featured in this Century Comedy. Earle takes the part of an exceptionally elongated traffic cop and is Harry's rival. Some sure laughs.

DOWN IN JUNGLE TOWN—1 reel. An average comedy in which Joe Martin the Monk, an elephant, a lion, a bear and a ring tailed monkey perform.

MILES OF SMILES—2 reels. Baby Peggy in a dual role, as a twin in a poor home and a wealthy home. A good story that gives Peggy a chance to register her versatility. Your audience will be sure to approve the choice of this picture.

MISCARRIED PLANS—2 reels. An audience of kids will no doubt be delighted with this picture. Wicked cowboys stalk through the picture all the time, unshaven and swinging a ready gun.

RUSTLIN' BUSTER—2 reels. A Western thriller with Jack Mower and Lola Todd. Plenty of action and a strong climax.

THE CORN-FED SLEUTH—2 reels. The elongated Jack Earle breaks right through the ceiling to listen to the plots of the bold villains who are going to "get" someone, it doesn't matter whom. Incidentally he makes off with the winnings of a poker game, while the players are disputing which five-ace hand should win.

'SPORTLIGHTS' INTEREST YOUNG AND OLD

Because Grantland Rice's Camera Focuses on Sports of Every Sort and Every Nation

"Girls and Records" contrasts the girl of yesterday and her athletic sister of today; "Taking a Chance" and "Wild and Woolly" register thrills galore while the latest "Olympic Mermaids" show the champion swimmers in training at Bermuda.

Educational's Programs

JUMPING JACKS—1 reel. Glorified newsreel, cartoon and comedy all on one reel of Howe's "Hodge Podge." Beautiful scenics of the Niagara; American soldiers in training and Sudanese dervishes performing religious rites, hence the title.

EXIT CAESAR—2 reels. Amateur theatricals with a large cast including Otto Fries, Jack Lloyd, Andrew Arbuckle and Peggy O'Neill. No ludicrous instance of amateur performances forgotten.

BLACK AND BLUE—2 reels. Vera Steadman loves Jimmy Adams but he tries her patience so much that she almost decides on his rival. Much slapstick introduced after the rival blacks Jimmie's face. Fast moving and fairly amusing.

THE BUTTERFLY—1 reel. Nothing need be said of the superlative quality of these Tollhurst "Secrets of Life" series. They interest all, old and young.

KIDDING KATIE—2 reels. Amusing encounters between the young and attractive Katie and her plump sister, Queenie (Babe London). Queenie's desperate struggles trying to reduce gets the big laughs.

UNDER COVER—2 reels. Fatal errors a young hospital intern makes when he's too busy watching the pretty nurses. Probably the fastest action on record—with furniture turning topsy turvy and fleeing figures blurring before the eyes.

MY BOY BILL—2 reels. A human-appeal nature story, depicting in glorious detail the fascination of the sea. The story is of an old man who waits by the sea for his boy Bill who never comes back.

MY FRIEND—2 reels. Lloyd Hamilton's delicious comedy. A 100 per cent laugh-getter. One ludicrous situation follows the other in rapid succession.

ONE NIGHT IT RAINED—2 reels. Originality of treatment. Harry Tighe and Ned Soarks show the effects of eating lobster at night and husband's jealousy. The sort of stuff that will make them chuckle rather than laugh.

CAVE IN—1 reel. Caveman stuff from the stone ages with Virginia Vance in a cute leopard skin dress. Fair entertainment mostly of the slapstick variety.

LIQUID LAVA—1 reel. Lyman Howe's sense and nonsense. Among numerous cartoons and schemes are some wonderful photographs of the volcanic eruptions in Java.

SNOOKY'S COVERED WAGON—2 reels. Enough good comedy material for ten two-reelers. In brief, the story concerns a haunted hotel; a reward to the one who can prove it isn't; and the whole animal kingdom's crying need for good.

THE HOMEMAKER—1 reel. A simple yet powerful story told by a cast of real humans whom we all recognize. Like the rest of Bruce Wilderness Tales—simply told and harmonizing the natural beauty of the world we live in.

OH GIRLS—1 reel. A bathing beauty collection attending the Waverly School for Girls—giving lessons the cold shoulder and romance in any form a hearty welcome. The Cameo trio, Virginia Vance, Cliff Bowes and Syd Smith perform.

OVER THE FENCE—2 reels. Little freckle-faced roughnecks out-number the sisies in this juvenile crew, yet when it means party and cakes they all don "Lord Fauntleroy" for the occasion. Alas, clothes do not make the man—and Hades is no hotter nor more furious a place then the scene of the feast—in short, a riot!

FILM FOOLISH—1 reel. Cliff Bowes, Virginia Vance and Earl Montgomery as extras in a film studio. Here you see how the punch is put in a picture and what a perilous life a dummy leads.

JEAN OF HECETA HEAD—1 reel. A Bruce scenic. The very simplicity of these pictures makes for power. Highly sophisticated audiences will like these Big Little Features because they are true art.

CALL THE WAGON—2 reels. Neal Burns method of ridding Mary of superfluous suitors acts as a boomerang when Mary catches him in the act. In the end he barely escapes being taken off in the wagon. Of the slapstick variety, but all the funnier for that.

BIG LITTLE FEATURE

CLIFF BOWES is the fearless hero in this Educational Comedy of the West, entitled "Don't Hesitate." He'll probably take the loot to his "one and only," Virginia Vance, so that she can go to the big city and become educated.

FLYING FINANCE—2 reels. Neely Edwards, as the rich son "with not a brain cell working" and a weakness for watermelons, is excellent. He does his comedy tricks as well as any of our foremost comedians.

HAUNTED HILLS—1 reel. For this "Wilderness Tale" Bruce has gone to life. Not stage life. Not to the abnormal, the glittering, the pretentious, the false or the stogy—but to life as it is and as it is known to people. That's why these series are a credit to the industry and the exhibitor who shows them.

DON'T HESITATE—1 reel. The sheriff made the town so good, they decided to dispense with the sheriff. The unexpected—that is unexpected only to the sheriff, happens for a fake hold-up turns into a real one and the sheriff makes a poor showing.

AGGRAVATING PAPA—2 reels. Peter the famous police dog is one of the main actors in this Christie Comedy and he's good. So is Jimmie Adams as a love sick druggist. Entertaining and fast moving.

Terry Explains Why Aesop Fables Get Laughs

It takes about fifteen drawings to make the cat and dog fox-trot across the screen. Twenty-five drawings will make them waltz gracefully over the silver sheet. A complete Aesop Film Fable will take anywhere between four and five thousand hand drawn pictures."

It is Paul Terry speaking—Terry the pioneer in the film business of animated cartoons, and the man who probably gets more laughs per foot of celluloid than any other comedian in the world.

A consensus of opinion of the most critical experts in the world on moving picture comedies is hardly to be compared to the verdict of the regular motion picture audience, for it is the latter who actually support the industry. And whether it be in Squedunk, in Kalamazoo, or in Chicago, this verdict as to the merits of Aesop's Film Fables is usually the same—just a round robin of hearty, earnest laughs.

Exactly what is at the back of this distinctive success on the part of the Aesop little features is something that has made much material for some distinguished psychologists. However, Mr. Terry's personal version carries the stamp of authority, and it is that we will give here:

"There is no question but that all human beings—large, small, rich, poor, educated and ignorant—are fundamentally alike in one certain respect. Some years ago, I decided that this was in being peculiarly childlike. And I discovered also that the sort of humor that appeals to children, appeals practically to everyone. In other words the child is father to the man so far as humor is concerned.

"That gave me my cue in using animals in my animated cartoons. To see ourselves as others see us, in the form of animal caricature, is a successful form of satire that dates back to the days of Greek Mythology, and it was only a question of applying this time-tested form to the modern scheme of life."

Judging by every standard of measure—the box-office, the technical experts—and most important of all—the response of audiences, there is no question but that Paul Terry's idea has worked like a charm.

Mr. Terry is a soft-spoken person, who conveys his enthusiasm more by the earnestness of his expression than in the force of words. His entry into the film business was a natural transition for one who had served a motley apprenticeship as a newspaper cartoonist and court photographer on some of the biggest dailies in the United States.

Paul Terry was born in San Mateo, California, some thirty-seven years ago. He attended the elementary and high schools of San Francisco, and when hardly out of his teens was already at work on one of the 'Frisco papers as a cartoonist. The many years in this field of work and subsequent experience as a newspaper photographer gave him an intimate perspective of the petty frailties of human nature, which he now capitalizes so distinctively in his Aesop animal characters. He has his methods of knitting material together down to absolute checking precision. To quote him:

"I never fail to review my pictures, right in the theatre. In my lap I have a regular checking sheet, arranged to show the result (using laughs as a standard of measure) of this gag here, that funny stunt there, and the effect of the whole in general.

"Thus I carry away practically a tangible standard of what tickles the palates of the audience—something which can be actually used in my next production, needing only a slight change in story form to give the material the variety of newness."

Is it any wonder that Aesop's Film Fables are champion laugh getters!—M. L. S.

Truly Big Little Features

PRACTICALLY every producer in the film industry has at some time or other tried his hand in making really big features of less footage.

There have been many too, who have attempted specialization on the issue—with fair success.

It remained, however, for Yale University Press as motion picture producers, to reach the coveted goal in the making of the Chronicles of America now being distributed nationally through Pathe exchanges.

This series of epics in the complete picturization of the dramatic highlights of America's past fairly reek with showmanship opportunities and exploitation possibilities from limitless angles.

They stand out as cameos in the field of special attractions. Their length eliminates their possible classification with the so-called "feature" films, but in every sense of the word they are truly BIG LITTLE FEATURES.

Their precision and accuracy from the production standpoint make them distinctively of high standard in the critical public eye. Their romance and the vivid appeal of true Americanism they possess make them superlatively appealing and entertaining to a marked degree.

Yale University Press is especially due a great amount of credit and praise for their double-barreled foresight as revealed in the manner they produce and present the "Chronicles of America." From "Columbus," the first of the series to the thirty-third and last release they demand production quality. And what is equally illustrative of clean business methods and showmanship wisdom, the exhibition of these BIG LITTLE FEATURES is restricted to legitimate Motion Picture Theatres and removed from the non-theatrical field.

That last decision on the part of Yale Press was made unhesitatingly, but to the showman who knows his cards, it is easily understood that such a decision demanded an unselfish willingness to sacrifice additional revenue.

Such a move, however, was one that insured correct and proper presentation and, in the long run, will prove more profitable than a wide open policy enlisting school, church, and club exhibition, principally because it will eventually bring that class of patrons to where they should go to see pictures—in the motion picture theatre.

On the following pages you will read with admitted amazement of the almost remarkable exploitation and showmanship opportunities that prove the exhibitors booking-urge on the Chronicles of America.

Profit by the suggestions. Profit by the actual experiences of other showmen. They all stand for increased profits in the box office. They all stand for elevating the BIG LITTLE FEATURE to that high standard that this particular series especially deserves.

Best of all this series of short length special attractions carries with it the possibility of securing a new steady patronage—not only during the progress of the showing of the "Chronicles" but after the completion of the series. You will have proven to your formal patrons that you have the most interesting and appealing informal weapon in the world for the influence of knowledge. And they will realize that constant attendance is necessary.

You will have taught them the motion picture is the medium of the masses—and they will soon learn that they too are a part of the great mass of the same humanity they seek to uplift.

Render every possible aid you can with all organizations who seek it in conjunction with this type of attraction. There is no fear of religious differences of opinion. There is no worry about the variance of personal viewpoints and ideas—nationality or sex.

The "Chronicles of America" are pure American pictures, depicting true American ideals—and the problems and adventuresome trials and tribulations our forefathers underwent to help attain those ideals.

They offer an excellent opportunity of helping build up that spirit which stands for better citizenship, and also better community interest in better entertainment.

NEW PATRONAGE

FOREMOST among the highlights of interest that the Chronicles of America offer is new drawing power.

It will pay every showman to read all these 'Chronicle' pages carefully—follow out those suggestions which offer him most possibilities and get behind them with all the showmanship he possesses.

That will mean new patrons, who can easily be made steady patrons as the series progresses. It is an easy entree to greater future business.

A NATION-WIDE movement behind the Yale University Press Pictures offers a co-operative advertising service to exhibitors, the magnitude and the like of which has scarcely been paralleled in film circles. The breadth and scope of this tremendous program incorporates a project which is intended to pave the showman's way for getting the support of editors, school authorities, city officials, club leaders, clergymen and prominent citizens to the showings of "Chronicles of America."

HOW this immense project works is partly explained in the invitation extended to all exhibitors to send their names, addresses, play dates and subjects to Mr. George Day, President of Yale University Press, New Haven, Connecticut, with the reminder that the information is final and correct. What the exhibitor then receives, for example, is, first, a letter from Mr. Day to the local editor explaining the purpose and importance of the "Chronicles of America," asking the editor's support on the basis of news interest, Americanization, good citizenship, and the various other angles which are expected to carry a journalistic message of appeal to any discerning editor, on the lookout for good feature material. With this is enclosed a specially prepared story pointing up the name of the picture and the local theatre.

A SECOND letter is scheduled to go to the local school superintendent. This outlines the "Chronicles" from the angle of educational appeal. It suggests that all the school children be informed of the showing at the local theatre and offers to circularize for him, all his principals, assistants and teachers, in the event that he cannot do the work himself and encloses a sample post card of notification for posting purposes and display.

SHOULD the showman desire, letters will be sent to city officials emphasizing the showing from the point of community interest and suggesting, also, the advisability of public proclamation. This letter will draw attention to action taken by mayors and other city officials of other towns. Judging by the most critical standards, it would seem that the Yale Press advertising and exploitation project already embraces enough exhibitor helps to call it a day, but the concern's campaign goes even further.

YALE UNIVERSITY PRESS ADVERTISING AIDS DIRECT FROM NEW HAVEN

IF the names and addresses of prominent citizens are forwarded to the address given in New Haven, these individuals will receive impressive letters requesting their endorsement and co-operation, and outlining definitely the value and importance of the "Chronicles" to school children. The local Rotary, Kiwanis, American Legion, Elks, Knights of Columbus, and so forth, will also be circularized. In fact, all civic and social organizations will be solicited for co-operation and support.

advertising aids spirit as something akin to a magic carpet which drapes itself over the big cities, small towns, rural communities, the nooks and tiny crannies of America, leaving not an inch uncovered in a vast effort to tie-up the showman's forces with every possible instrument that can bring additional dollars and cents into his coffers.

ONE sees in this tremendous exploitation project all the interest-provoking elements for which real showmanship is noted. Has the showmanship millenium come? The Yale University Press campaign would seem to infer that it has. It reaches out a broad inviting hand which has its fingers on the pulse of practically every community in the nation.

AT the Yale Press headquarters, in New Haven, the advertising and exploitation

WHEN the showman approaches his local editor for publicity on his "Chronicles" showing, he will have such letters as are herewith depicted to thank for the ready cordial reception he receives at the hand of the newspaper executive. They are impressive advance agents.

PROMINENT citizen, social organization, fraternal society, in fact every social unit one can conceive, has been included in the field of contact which is to furnish the showman the broadest possibilities for profit when he plays the "Chronicles"

UNQUESTIONABLY, this campaign has all the ear-marks of a priceless, attention-commanding advertising aids project in which the term "co-operative service" veritably reaches the acme of perfection. It savors of the force which should set editorial wires buzzing from coast to coast.

ONE sees the enterprise, as something outlined by a magnificent, far-seeing gigantic mind. A mind that has visualized the real brains are applying themselves with but one object in view—how to stimulate motion picture business through every channel that offers an opportunity for the showman's approach. That these are many, the Yale Press staff is willing to signify by sending every exhibitor who sends in an inquiry, two folders of direct suggestions for valuable exploitation tie-ups. It is an alluring invitation.

PLAINLY, the Yale Press organization merits commendation of the highest order, for evolving a showmanship scheme which runs to national proportions. The least the showman can do in manifesting interest to correspond with the inviting appeal of the whole proposition is to send an inquiry direct to New Haven and find out exactly what it is all about. The chances are friend exhibitor will get a new insight into the broad and hardly-worked real possibilities of showmanship.

It is plain to see that all the elements which advertising genius and brains can devise have been brought to bear in making this nationwide campaign as complete as such a thing is possible. In every direction, in every method of approach to public appeal, official influence, and civic support one notices an underlying vein which has as its main and final object an instrument which will bolster up the box-office profits of the exhibitor playing any of the "Chronicles of America" series.

This is "advertising aids" with a vengeance. It is a supreme achievement in the constructive art of going over the top with the appeal of printers' ink. It is amazing in its scope. It is absorbing in its message. It is masterful in its functioning. It aims to miss not the slightest opportunity where a chance for business boosting is possible.

Personal contact is undoubtedly the most valuable instrument for achieving any object, and it is personal contact that is made easy for the exhibitor after the letter has paved the way for him to negotiations with editor, city official, clergyman, school superintendent, prominent citizen, social organization or fraternal society.

THERE is a quality about the Yale Press letters that begets serious attention no matter where they are received. Just the impressive imprint of the "Yale University Press" at the head of the neatly engraved letters is in itself something that attracts attention, for few people there are who do any reading at all that aren't aware of the firm's important position as a publishing and educational institution. Then, the quality of the letters is such as to fairly assure the kind of action for which the writers aim.

These letters have been done by experts who have reached the acme of perfection in direct-mail advertising. For, summed up in pure business vernacular, that's what this tremendous exploitation campaign amounts to—a gigantic, subtle masterful, direct-by-mail advertising campaign. With this qualification, who can dare limit the possibilities of direct-by-mail advertising. The answer is—no one. For the possibilities are limitless.

TO illustrate the character of the printed matter which the exhibitor would receive in connection with the campaign project in question, it might be well to describe one of the pamphlets which the Advertising Aids editor has before him as he writes.

On the cover piece we have the heading, "Suggestions to Exhibitors of the Yale University Press Series of 'Chronicles of America' Motion Pictures." The pamphlet goes on in a subhead to say that exhibitors contracting for the Yale University Press Series of "Chronicles of America" Photoplays can be certain that intelligent exploitation of these photoplays will result in largely increased receipts and profits. It tells also how this has already been demonstrated in many cities and towns, and is to be expected when it is considered that—

The "Chronicles of America" Photoplays:

- (1) Provide entertainment which appeals to the patrons of theatres.
- (2) Are of interest alike to men and women, to youth and children, because the incidents selected from the story of America, are in themselves dramatic and because the pictures have been produced in a manner to enhance their dramatic appeal.

(3) Will bring to the theatre new patrons who are interested in the "Better Films" movement and welfare of the community.

ON the third page of this four page folder, under the head, "Plan to Supplement the Work Thus Done by the Yale University Press by Following This Up in Such Ways as These;" we find:

(1) Talk with the newspaper men who will be readily interested if the exhibitor makes it plain that these pictures are not merely new movies, but rather productions of the Yale University Press released with the sanction of Yale University and prepared under the supervision and control of its Council's Committee. Under these circumstances announcements of the Chronicles of America Photoplays are 'news' to a far greater extent than articles in regard to any other pictures.

(2) Consider if it would help in your community to give a private advance showing for a small group of public officials, school teachers, and prominent business and professional men. This has been found desirable particularly in securing the interest and co-operation of school superintendents, principals and teachers.

(3) Secure statements for publication in the newspapers and in notices you may send out, from the mayor, school teachers and prominent citizens who may be at such a private showing.

TO give a simple illustration of how this process of advertising aids worked out in one city—in this city case, Cleveland—simultaneous with the showing of the story of Columbus, articles appeared in Cleveland News, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the Cleveland Times, and the Cleveland News Leader. Each account was laudatory in its essence and carried an emphatic suggestion for fans to patronize the film. For example the News Leader carried a double column head which read, "Educators See Private Exhibition Here of First of 'Chronicles of America' Series."

This article went on to extol the magnificence of the project and the extreme fidelity to details as regards the scenic and dramatic quality of the film. The Times said: "It points to new possibilities in the realm of motion picture production." The Plain Dealer (one of the the most influential papers in the middle West,) had a three line double column head over an article which called the film a "Fine, Worthy Production." The News carried something equally commendable.

Thus it will be seen what the force of the

WHEN "Columbus" played New Rochelle, N. Y., an apt illustration of how the Yale University Press advertising aids project worked is seen in this excerpt from the columns of one of the town's leading papers.

Yale Press Advertising Aids project is. One instance might just as well be multiplied by hundreds. It is just such effective newspaper and exploitation tie-ups as occurred in Cleveland that every exhibitor in the land may expect to effect in his own local community, with the powerful instrumentalities that the Yale University Press will lend him as a pure service of co-operation and courtesy.

Mr. J. D. Stern, Editor,
The Cavalier,
Canton, N. J.

Dear Sir:

Following the success achieved by "Columbus" and "Jamestown," the first two pictures in our "Chronicles of America" Photoplays, we have now arranged for the release of "Columbus," the third episode in this great series, which will be shown at the Rial Theatre, March 3rd.

We can, I hope, count on your continued interest and cooperation in bringing this picture to the attention of your community.

The same reception accorded to these pictures of ours is, we believe, proof of their dramatic interest as well as their historical accuracy. They appear to have been properly the good will of newspapermen, many of which have given splendid support to our work on their editorial pages as well as in their own columns. To the newspapers for their interest and cordial cooperation in endorsing what they have the "Chronicles of America Motion Pictures," the Yale University Press is proud to make acknowledgment of the gratitude.

Sincerely yours,
J. D. Stern,
President,
Yale University Press.

PATHE SHOWMANSHIP ADDS TO 'CHRONICLE' PRESTIGE

Links Yale Press Direct With Exhibitors by Supplying Exploitation Material of Feature Calibre

ALTHOUGH Yale University Press really does not cease operations at any time in supplying the exhibitor with exploitation material and general publicity suggestions between the booking and actual play dates of the Chronicles of America series, Pathe picks up the campaign proper and becomes co-operatively important directly after the Yale Press has supplied the theatre manager with the several new possibilities this elaborate series offers.

In reality, the New Haven bureau provides the advance publicity that is usually not forthcoming on the average picture or series of films, while Pathe provides the actual showmanship necessities and exploitation material that seldom, if ever, accompanies anything short of the five reel feature.

The combination is unique. Few producing companies, such as Yale Press is, have ever benefitted by a more thorough and consistently organized campaign of distribution and exploitation than that presented by Pathe. And certainly few distributing organizations, such as Pathe, have ever enjoyed the sales helps and advertising aids than those proffered by Yale Press.

Exceptional Care Taken in Poster Preparation

THE appeal of the Chronicles of America is so distinctive, the background of accuracy and authority so unusual, and the opportunities so apparently limitless that it immediately becomes one of, if not the most, important series in the entire Big Little Feature field.

Pathe has accordingly given special care to all matters of exhibitor service on each release. Special posters have been prepared with the same fine hand of precision that supervises the production of the film itself. Each poster must be correct from the accurate coloring of the uniforms and wearing apparel of the periods to the apparently unimportant peculiarities of the properties revealed in the scenes.

The special rotogravure heralds would almost lead one to doubt that one of the "Chronicles" was anything other than an elaborate special feature attraction. This is due to the fact that this series of pictures offers such a wealth of local color tie-ups as revealed on the following pages. There is a full page on the heralds left blank within a decorative border for the showman to imprint a new type direct message and solicit that class of patronage which usually is not classified as one hundred per cent screen fans.

Pathe Stresses 'Feature' Classification on Series

THE lobby photos are presented in colors that set a high standard in this form of display. Following out the feature style of presentation there are the twenty-two by twenty-eight lobby cards in addition to the carefully chosen set of eight eleven by fourteens. And for the newspaper and special exploitation campaigns, Pathe provides just as extensive an array of cuts and mats as it does on any of the full length subjects.

Special thematic cue sheets give the showman a direct insight for his musical atmosphere, which literally "sets the stage" for the particular period or background revealed in each of the series.

No details are omitted in the general list of Pathe accessories. There are the usual slides for each picture and stock slides for the series, National Screen Service motion picture announcement trailers, black and white photos for newspaper reproduction and teaser campaigns and tie-ups almost too innumerable to describe.

'CHRONICLES OF AMERICA' EXPLOITATION SECTION

In short the Chronicles of America are truly Big Little Features with an accent on "Features" and Pathe has seen to it that the exploitation and showmanship material provided in all cases is in complete harmony with that idea.

Service Men Arrange Endorsements

AN additional effective service is provided by each of the Pathe exchanges in the form of special representatives and exploitation men who confer with exhibitors on the various new angles offered by these American classics and acquaint them with the salient facts of all the profitable co-operation possibilities in the case of each locality.

Where it is desired, these representatives go directly into the exhibitor's own town or neighborhood and arrange his point of contact for the tie-ups and special exploitation support he may need. They secure the endorsement and support of his clubs, schools, city officials and whatever organization that would best benefit greater box office results.

The results have proven that, although this service is quite out of the ordinary in the field of short subjects, it is the most important factor in bringing about the almost amazing proof that a Big Little Feature series can and in many cases does easily outdraw the feature itself.

This form of Pathe service is, of course, not absolutely essential and necessary in every case or on every release of the series, but it is certainly a highly important adjunct possibility for a vast majority of showmen in the presentation of the first of the Chronicles of America series. It not only shows what can be done and how best to do it, but sets a pace which makes it easy for the exhibitor to follow on the subsequent showings of these unique featurettes.

'Book as Many as You Please' Plan

THE Pathe plan of booking the Chronicles of America is a wide open proposition. Any exhibitor may book the entire thirty-three pictures of the series or he may book any part of the series. He may even restrict himself to booking any of them individually. The real breadth of the possibilities of this plan is probably best described, however, by the fact that there is no necessary order in which the showman must play any of the Chronicles. Due to the fact that certain releases may have more or less exceptional exploitation angles from the local color historic value, the plan permits the booking of all releases in any order Mr. Showman sees fit to arrange.

In addition to such co-operation on the part of Pathe, it is ultra valuable to a theatre manager to know that the entire Pathe line-up of branch managers and special representatives proffer their already existing acquaintanceship with local editors, business men and organizations which quite frequently stand ready to assist the promotion of any such features as the "Chronicles."

'Truth Stranger Than Fiction' Used

EVERY detail in setting, every incident depicted, is broadcasted with proof as authentic. The public is besieged with impressive and interesting material that convinces—word and picture proof that every costume seen and every subtitle read on the screen is correct to the most minute detail.

That "Truth Is Stranger Than Fiction" and, in the case of the Chronicles of America, more adventuresome, is the underlying thought of all Pathe exploitation and that it is having remarkable effect in every locality where any of the series has been exhibited, is putting it lightly.

Special Club and Society Tie-ups

THE advantages of arranging local tie-ups with prominent societies and exploiting through them has also been taken into consideration by Pathe and a great number of nationwide hook-ups, especially with the various alumni associations of Yale University, have been arranged for. But in addition to this, the local exhibitor will be taken care of in a local way by the Pathe representatives.

The Boy Scout Organization is recognized everywhere as a strong juvenile institution, besides which the members are zealous workers who can be depended upon to put over almost any undertaking they assume. Pathe has arranged for the general support of every local Boy Scout by means of a general tie-up with the organization.

In like manner support of the Girl Scouts, Knights of Columbus, Rotary Clubs, Kiwanis Clubs, American Legion, and various women's organizations can all be enlisted to add their support, and Pathe has made provision for this sort of thing. For the purpose of making satisfactory arrangements with these organizations, and arranging the details for undertaking by any one or all of them, the local Pathe representatives are always available.

Briefly, Pathe has left nothing undone in planning a most complete campaign to help the exhibitor sell "The Chronicles of America" to his patrons.

In addition to these, World's Work, The Outlook, Arts and Decorations, and scores of other periodicals have carried the message of the "Chronicles."

FEATURE story on the 'Chronicles of America' in Woman's World. An editorial in the same issue strongly urged thousands of women to support local showings of "Chronicles of America."

THE Literary Digest hailed the project of filming the Chronicles of America as one of the most important strides in the progress of the motion picture industry. A remarkable tribute.

Elaborate Local Tie-Ups On 'Chronicles'

WHILE the Yale University Press offers what is, perhaps, the most comprehensive drive for local support and commendation ever rendered by a producing company, and while Pathe supplies exploitation and sales aids of distinctly feature quality, experience has proven that this service is one hundred percent effective only when the exhibitor energetically follows up the introductory campaigns of producer and distributor and personally takes advantage of the clear channels to local tie-ups made possible by them. How best can the exhibitor secure the maximum results?

In the first place, it is of supreme importance that a feature picture to accompany each of "The Chronicles of America" be a subject in keeping with the quality of these short subjects; a feature that will appeal to the people who come in response to the "Chronicles" exploitation. Secondly, since a big drive is being made on the "Chronicles," this subject should be given a fair "break" in the exhibitor's advertising and publicity, supported by a liberal use of posters and lobby aids. The Thematic Music Sheet, prepared on each of the "Chronicles" and available at all Pathe branch offices, should be used by all means. The entire program should be built to fit the people the exhibitor is going after. Then it's a question of going after them.

THE definite ways of securing local co-operation may best be explained by referring to actual cases where such arrangements have been made by the exhibitor to splendid advantage. The Governors of several states have already expressed their approval of "The Chronicles of America." Governor Donahey, of Ohio, for example, and Governor E. Lee Trinkle, of Virginia. State organizations of civic, social and commercial clubs have their unqualified endorsement. State Teachers' Associations and such bodies have agreed to support local showing of the "Chronicles." Every Pathe office is fully aware of all such actions taken in the various localities and will acquaint the exhibitors with the facts of such tie-ups. They have a distinct value in effecting local arrangements by presenting the proposition, first, from its national and state aspect and then centering the interest from a local viewpoint.

Showmen of many cities have found it highly advantageous to secure a public proclamation from the Mayor. In Seattle, for example, Mayor Edwin J. Brown took such action, saying, in part: "It will be the privilege of the people of Seattle to see this picture (Columbus) at the Liberty Theatre. I respectfully call your attention to this superb effort of Yale University Press and I sincerely recommend to all who can to attend the Liberty and see this picture. In doing so, everyone will be inspired for all will be benefited by its accuracy, beauty and unusual entertainment value." Such support cannot be beaten.

NEWSPAPER editors are particularly willing to co-operate on "The Chronicles of America." Undoubtedly, these authentic dramas of American history have received more space and greater praise than any short subjects ever produced. Literally, hundreds of editors have written special endorsements, urging their readers to support the theatres showing the series. Here is a sample of the way they are responding to the exhibitors' request for co-operation. It is from the Columbia, S. C., State, "The screen is now being used with splendid and impressive effectiveness in telling history in the most entertaining and enduring way through artistic, beautiful and authentic pictures." Another editor puts his recommendation this way, "Since it is the public that sits as final judge and jury in the matter of motion pictures, this newspaper feels amply justified in devoting the amount that has been taken to call the public's attention to the opportunity now presented for showing the local motion picture exhibitors that such films are appreciated and will be supported by something more than empty praise." It couldn't be put much more strongly than that!

Naturally, the school tie-up is highly desirable and effective and "The Chronicles of America" are attractions which particularly appeal to superintendents, principals and teachers. While the Yale University Press has received hundreds of endorsements from school heads, showing how practical is this tie-up, these few are quoted as typifying the general attitude.

E. E. Cortright, Superintendent of Schools, Bridgeport, Conn., "I consider it a privilege that more than four thousand of our children saw 'Columbus' at a special performance." John C. Diehl, Erie, Pa., wrote, "As Superintendent of the city schools I commend, without reservations, this series of photoplays." W. A. Mowry, Superintendent of Schools, Taunton, Mass., "I am asking the teachers to bring the showing to the attention of the pupils of the schools." W. J. White, Superintendent, Englewood, N. J., "I shall be glad to have your announcement made in my schools. We are only too glad to co-operate with you because of the high merit of the films."

CIVIC, social and business organizations are proving of great assistance as points of local tie-up. The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, for example, has been very active in lining up the big industrial plants represented by its members. The New Rochelle, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce, representative of the help received in smaller communities, devoted much space to each showing of "The Chronicles" in its weekly bulletin. Cognizance of the showing of "Columbus" was taken on the Sunday preceding the opening of the first picture by several of the clergymen of Mount Vernon, N. Y. The Knights of Columbus of Indianapolis got behind the showings at that point. Women's Clubs, everywhere are actively interested in making the theatrical showing of "The Chronicles" big successes for the exhibitors. These few examples are but a suggestion of the co-operation which can be secured.

Many showmen are finding it particularly profitable to run a special showing for all of the city officials, school heads, editors, club leaders, clergymen, prominent citizens, etc., at which their endorsements are secured by providing blank forms upon which they are asked to record their impressions of the picture. Having secured these, it is a matter of detail to secure authorization to use the testimonials in newspaper displays, special lobby frames, programs and similar exploitation media. Other exhibitors are working up fine local interest through essay and poster contests for the school children. In ideas such as these, however, it is a matter of pure showmanship.

IN every phase of the local campaign, it is tremendously important to emphasize that "The Chronicles of America" are different, fascinating and vividly entertaining. It is obvious that they are enlightening. Make it plain that they are great shows, with rare drama, adventure, romance, suspense, human interest and the convincing quality of presenting the stories of real people living real lives in sequences as thrilling and absorbing as the best fiction. They represent the newest idea in pictures. Talk up this angle and regular patrons will be intrigued. Impress the public with the importance and prestige of this new series of photoplays. Make it plain that the theatre stands for the best in pictures, for community service and entertainment, plus. These arguments will win for any showman the active support of all classes of the public. They have never failed to be impressive. Work the local end of "The Chronicles of America" to the limit.

Summing it all up, the exhibitors of the United States have never had a series of pictures more perfectly adapted to local support and co-operation.

At Your Very Door

THIS is not just a story of how editors, school heads and public officials can be asked to co-operate. It is an account of how they are now actually working for exhibitors and what is laying at the door of opportunity for exhibitors who book the "Chronicles of America" series being released by Pathe. It is an exceptional incentive for the showman who believes in going after a new patronage with a weapon that will hold them later as "steady" picture fans.

FIRST, they appeal on the all-important basis of entertainment. There is no doubt about this. Forget all about the historical background of "The Chronicles of America" and they will still be attractions which please and satisfy Mr. and Mrs. Theatre-Goer on the basis of romance, drama, adventure and thrills. To this angle can be brought the showmanship resources of lobby decorations, posters, publicity, newspaper advertising, merchant tie-ups, contest ideas, ballyhoo, program announcements, heralds, cut-outs and all the paraphernalia of showmanship.

Second, they appease the ever-present thirst for novelty; for something new and different. People will always flock to see "something new" and these productions represent the newest and most original trend in motion pictures.

Third, their inherent nature makes them worthy of the support of all the leaders in every community. The editor responds because the entry of Yale University Press into motion picture production is a story of news value and because "The Chronicles of America" mark the entry of the industry into constructive fields of Americanization and good citizenship. To him they represent a movement as much as they do a series of motion pictures.

To the public official they stand as stimulants to community spirit; to a deeper regard and appreciation of American institutions; to a finer patriotism. To the educator they strike home as the standard-bearers of visual education; of a way whereby the American public may be inspired to further understanding of the vast store of learning which has heretofore been confined to the printed page.

To the club leaders, both men and women, they stand as representative of the screen's best efforts; better pictures at their best, and as furthering the ideals of their own organizations, whether fraternal, social, commercial or civic.

Not the least value of "The Chronicles of America" is the contact with these organizations which can be interpreted in terms of additional box office revenue through special performances or their attendance in groups.

THOUSANDS of newspaper reviews and editorials without a single criticism is the record of the Chronicles of America. Governors, Mayors, Educators and business men join in endorsing the Yale Press pictures and offering assistance to exhibitors in putting them over.

NEWSPAPERS like the New York Tribune, Times, Sun and Globe, Telegram, Springfield Republican and hundreds of others are commenting editorially on the excellence and entertainment value of the "Chronicles."

PATHE NEWS—A LITTLE SUPER FEATURE

*'Around the World in Fifteen Minutes' No Idle Boast
But Actually an Achievement of Camera Skill*

THE growth in scope and function of the news reel is an outstanding feature of the marvelous development of the motion picture industry within the last twelve years. When the wonders of Nineteenth Century inventions and improvements in transportation facilities brought within the realms of actuality all the fancies that the fertile imagination of Jules Verne visualized in his "Around the World in Eighty Days," people gasped in sheer amazement at the celerity with which the barriers of time and space were being annihilated by human ingenuity.

Pathe News, however, which has consistently maintained the lead in the steady development of the news reel, reduced the encircling of the globe from a matter of days venture, Imagination and Practicability clasp hands in a perfect unanimity of purpose. And the results of this meeting are a compound of instruction and drama that have elevated Pathe News, in the estimation of thousands of theatre owners and theatre patrons, to a position of feature importance on the theatre program.

The scheme of organization and operation of the Pathe News enterprise resembles in a general way that of the newspaper. At the center of the system is an editorial staff under the direction of Emanuel Cohen, editor-in-chief. The "camera stories" as they arrive must be edited, captioned, and prepared for the great Pathe News "laboratory-press" at Bound Brook, N. J. From the Bound Brook

THE only news reel pictures of the eclipse of the sun is a Pathe achievement. Pathe cameramen are constantly getting views under almost insurmountable difficulties. They have a high record of achievement to live up to. Above is a spectacular picture of the burning of Smyrna.

"press" prints of the edition must be sent with the utmost speed to theatres everywhere for screen presentation to the millions of Pathe News "readers" all over the world. Such is the editorial and mechanical side of the project. It is in the other direction—the compilation of the actual news—that the romance and the adventure are mostly to be found.

From the central editorial bureau in New York, Pathe News repertorial ramifications spread to the ends of the earth. In every American city of importance are located Pathe News representatives always on the alert to record events of interest. Abroad, too, the Pathe News camera staff is as well organized and equipped as that at home. London, Paris, Rome, Berlin, Vienna, Madrid, Athens, Copenhagen, the Hague—each has to minutes. Supplanting the now antiquated record of the great French author, Pathe News has raised aloft a new standard, emblazoned with the slogan of—"Around the World in Fifteen Minutes."

Behind this marvelous development of the present day lies a story of human enterprise, courage and skill, of mechanical ingenuity and efficiency, and of masterly generalship and co-ordination of effort that rivals anything to be found in the imaginative flights of a Jonathan Swift or a Jules Verne. The Pathe News reel, probably better than any other single project of modern times, crystallizes into one efficient whole, all the romance and adventure of the soldier of fortune with the science and craftsmanship of the modern inventor. In the laboratory of this great animated chronicler of current events, Ad-

THE Spanish revolution, Mount Etna in eruption, the Dempsey-Gibbons fight. The audience is switched with lightning rapidity from Europe to America, down to Africa, across to Australia. That is one of the reasons for the great popularity of the Pathe News reel. Not a slow moment in the reel, constant changes, contrasts that get attention and lay hold of the mind. Pathe News reel is thoroughly entertaining as well as being educational.

FROM the communist revolt in Saxony, or a Chinese bandit raid, to a monarchist revolt in Bavaria Pathe News eliminates all the barriers of time and space. Unlike newspaper men, their cameramen must be there exactly when the thing is happening. An hour later is too late. The marvelous efficiency achieved by the Pathe organization has made this possible. The film must then be sent back with the greatest speed and the way Pathe company men do this makes thrilling reading.

its Pathe News staff member. Scattered in the less populous centers are correspondents who cover their respective territories. Africa, Australia, South America, and the Orient have their quota of camera reporters ever ready to photograph happenings which will be of interest to the peoples of the other continents.

The work of the Pathe News cameraman differs in some respects, however, from that of the newspaper reporter. The latter can reach a point of activity after an event has occurred and still get a very graphic account from sightseers and authentic records. Not so the camera reporter. To get his story he must be in the very midst of things from start to finish. There are no rehearsals, no retakes; either the event is recorded in the happening, or lost forever to the camera's eye.

LOEW'S STATE THEATRE in Los Angeles prepared the public for "When a Man's a Man" by stringing huge banners across the street. The size of the banner alone would make an impression on the mind and make one think of a big picture. The sign gave the picture a great welcome and it played to capacity houses.

ARM Y recruiting officers are usually placed on the busiest corners and the fact that "When a Man's a Man" ties up well with the marines made it possible for the picture to be exploited in Cincinnati with a tie-up. The one-sheet posters were placed in all the prominent places in the city. The Rex Theatre in Eugene, Ore., made a good tie-up with the book stores securing profit to all concerned.

SHOWMANSHIP

Keeping the Showman in Mind in Making Shorts

How One Producer Decided to Make Short Subjects Because He Received a Million Dollars Worth of Advance Advertising Free

By RALPH ROSSITER

of C. B. C.'s Advertising Department

THE success that has characterized the development of the short subject within the last few years and the position of vital importance it now holds in the exhibitor's program is a result of special pain and effort on the part of a few producers who had sufficient foresight to visualize the possibilities of single and two-reel pictures.

"Short Subject" meant more to them than two thousand feet of film, and held greater significance than the grinding out of slipshod pictures with too few good points to condone their production. Not until these men had come to realize that the same care used in taking the big picture had to be adhered to with the smaller one did their efforts begin to bear fruit. Undoubtedly one of the foremost exponents in this field is Jack Cohn of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, who has been active in the motion picture business for well nigh twenty years during the most of which time his efforts have practically been confined to developing the short feature.

Mr. Cohn's endeavors have not been in vain, for he is producing to-day two of the most successful short pictures on the market: "Screen Snapshots" and the Hallroom Boys Comedies which have been very popular with the leading exhibitors of the country for almost five years. An enviable record, to be sure. The career of this pioneer contains interest worthy of comment.

"I joined Mr. Carl Laemmle about nineteen years ago," said Mr. Cohn. "In those days we developed and printed film in a small room and we were fortunate to make even a one reeler. Titles were decided upon first and the stories written around them because the advertising had to get into the trade papers long before a picture was even started.

"Those were the happy days," I have heard Carl Laemmle and the other big men say. They probably made more money then than they do to-day. There were no worries about stars and stories. Actors frequently went to see a play at night and made a picture in the morning. I recollect one set of actors who would go to Staten Island in the morning to make a picture and telephone about noon that it was finished. We'd give them an idea for another which meant two productions a day.

"As a good many of our pictures were too short we had to go out to find a little scenic to put on to it.

SIX or seven years ago I noticed the short picture was being overlooked. I fought hard to keep it before the public, but it seems the big pictures were crowding the little ones off the screen. I had been making quite a number of industrial pictures at the time, and these were very interesting. But we could never get a showing because there was no room for anything educational.

"About five years ago I decided to go out in the open market and make independent short stuff because the program and stars had no time to worry about the small firm belief that vulgarity does not constitute humor and is totally unnecessary; the fact that cleanliness was used in his pictures from the very beginning is in great part the reason why they are so well thought of to-day. With the agitation for censorship and the necessity for "Censor-proof" pictures, even greater attention should be given this detail.

Editing a picture is the most important part of the whole process according to Mr.

Cohn's viewpoint, which if improperly done may bring failure to a picture that had a sufficient amount of good material to make it a success. In fact he goes so far as to say that it is in the power of an editor to make a successful production out of poor material. Producing and directing should never be confused with editing.

Lobbyology

The Fresh Objective Viewpoint

Mr. Rossiter, the writer of the accompanying article, is comparatively a new figure in the film industry.

However, being a scholar by training and an advertising man by experience, his opinions even in a new field are well founded and constructive in import.

Film folk in general and showmen in particular will welcome the clear, dispassionate viewpoint of one whose thoughts are entirely free from the one-sided, biased judgment which occasionally afflicts the man who has seen life from a single vantage point all his life.

The accompanying article is worthy of the attention of all showmen.

picture. I started out to make the Hallroom Boys Comedies which I knew had been receiving millions of dollars worth of advertising that would benefit the pictures and aid the exhibitors. I contracted with Mr. McGill for the rights to these 'Hallroom Boys Comedies' and to-day they are a houseword among exhibitors."

THE phenomenal success of this comedy series is a result of constant and consistent effort on the producer's part. He always claimed that the one and two reels deserved the time, attention, and forethought given to features, and he succeeded in making his weeklies, comedies and novelties the best of their kind.

It is interesting to follow the methods and principles used by Mr. Cohn in bringing about the present success of this comedy series. In the first place he maintains that comedies must be clean. It is his

WHEN the Hallroom Boys Comedies were started Mr. Cohn laid down four rules from which he says he has never deviated. While the very nature of a comedy picture leads to the ridiculous, oft-times, nevertheless there must be human interest, universal appeal, sympathy and no impossible situations. While it may seem a bit far fetched to expect the slapstick comedy to have appeal and sympathy, it is nevertheless possible and essential and is being done.

"The position our organization has attained justifies my faith," said Mr. Cohn, "in turning out comedies that are clean, funny and full of punch and pep."

The success of C. B. C.'s other short picture, "Screen Snapshots" has been remarkable when it is remembered that when Mr. Cohn originated the production the idea was entirely new and he was told by many that there would be no demand for it with the public. Working, however, on the same psychology as the printed "Fan" publications, he declared that the demand for this same kind of material visualized on the screen would be as great if not greater than in printed form—and the subsequent success of "Screen Snapshots" has proved this correct.

One of the innovations in Screen Snapshots was the installing of a regular scenario department which prepares original ideas for sketches which the various stars enact for the reel. Each idea applies to the particular actor or actress who is being photographed, and each is unusual for its story and continuity.

The first indorsement ever given to a single reel release by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce was formally accorded to Screen Snapshots two years ago in a letter signed by Wm. Brandt of the New York organization. The letter in part read:

AN accurate historical story is told of the struggle of the early pioneers in their efforts to found colonies, and successfully to keep off savage Indians.

PUBLIC EXPLODES SOME PET THEORIES

'Chronicles of America' Series, Made by the Yale University Press, Proves Public Likes Instruction With Its Entertainment

MR. PUBLIC and his Missus display from time to time a very disconcerting habit of exploding the pet theories of the industry's "best minds." Once it was maintained that the film's capacity to entertain could not extend beyond a reel or two. A few foreign importations of five-reel lengths ruffled the theorists' calm.

Then several daring spirits on this side of the water began to dabble in longer forms of photoplays. Mr. Public and his family actually sat through the show—all the way through, for five full reels—and then, to the complete rout of the "best minds," cheered for more of that long stuff.

Witness another upset in our own day and time! The trade savants agreed, in committee and out, that friend Public and his neighbors, had no darn use for costume productions, at all, at all. No sir! They belonged in the discard along with the war picture, they said.

Then somebody smuggled a "Passion" and later a "Deception" across the domestic trade line. Next came a "Three Musketeers" from the West Coast, and an "Orphans of the Storm" from the East.

Referee Public rushed up to the box-office and counted out another pet theory with the same motion that he laid down his price of admission before the smiling ticket-seller.

And just now the "best minds" are going completely blank on a new and unsuspected revelation of Mr. Public's psychology as regards his motion picture diversion.

Scandalous as it may appear to the experts, he, his wife, and his children show unmistakable symptoms of delight in being instructed as well as entertained by the screen.

YES the Public has already rallied in full force to the support of the heretic. Here's how:

Between 1918 and 1921 there appeared in libraries and book-shops a series of volumes, entitled "The Chronicles of America," compiled by foremost historians.

Late in 1921, Yale University Press, an auxiliary enterprise of Yale University, undertook to adapt the highlights of these fifty volumes to the screen, planning upon thirty-three subjects in all to be made in three and four-reel lengths.

TWO characteristics of the new enterprise distinguished it from all others of a similar kind. The pictures were to be authentic in every detail.

Instruction in the major events of America's development was to be a fundamental objective of the undertaking. There was to be no camouflage about its purpose.

The matter of distribution was laid before Pathe. Would Friend Public and his family support this type of screen entertainment in their theatre? Pathe's film review committee viewed the first finished product, "Columbus." The committee voted a decided "Yes!" to the question. And Friend Public proved the decision correct.

HEART interest and comedy touches are also present in this series. In "Vincennes" there is a wealth of humanness. In the center is an exciting scene from "Daniel Boone."

THE efforts of the British to enlist the aid of the Indians, and the subsequent wars and bloodshed are shown accurately in "Vincennes," one of the latest of this series.

Personal Appearance of Star

What was in effect the world's premiere showing of THE HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER with Jane Thomas appearing person, was given at The Isis Theatre, in Grand Rapids, and the presentation results in the fulfillment of every expectation of success.

A concrete, businesslike exploitation campaign conducted by Manager William Wehle of the Isis resulted in the most gratifying results in the face of the strongest competition from "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Flaming Youth" at the opposition theatres.

The personal appearance of Jane Thomas the star of the production proved a drawing card in itself while paving the way for unusual publicity and advertising.

By consenting to her appearance in the rest room of Herpolsheimer and Company, the biggest department store in Grand Rapids, Manager Wehle secured a fine block of space in the full page advertisements of the store in which the show was boosted and the appearance of Miss Thomas at both the theatre and the store was announced.

There is no more sure or more direct way of reaching the women of any city than through the department store advertisements.

Stuffed Eagle Draws Crowd

"Birds of a feather flock together. If I put a stuffed golden eagle in the lobby, why shouldn't it gather a few double eaglets around it to next in the box office?" Charles Creslein reasoned out.

Suiting his thoughts to action, he borrowed the biggest eagle in captivity south of Washington. It happened to be stuffed, but there was nothing the matter with its wing-spread. Six feet seven inches. By no means a sparrow.

As the bird was already mounted on a tree limb, it was easy for Creslein to pattern a card on the outline of a feather, and attach it to the bird's perch, with the title EAGLE'S FEATHER lettered on the card.

Since birds of this size are seen in Augusta as often as you find lions on the Boston Commons, there was a continuous crowd in the lobby of the Rialto.

Special Imitation Stunt

One thousand process engraved cards which look like the real thing, if you don't look too closely, were mailed out to a selected list of announce the engagement of C SHARPE MINOR at the Missouri Theatre.

Herschel Stuart called a list of St. Louis music fans and checked against his own mailing list in order to compile one thousand names of people who were known to be fond of music.

Minor's organ repertoire is so finely balanced between classic, popular and jazz that in making a direct appeal to music patrons Stuart knew that they would be more than satisfied. They were. The special class appeal has had the effect of bringing in hundreds of people who are new to the Missouri. If they like music, its fine, and if they don't, it's very polite flattery.

Free Ticket With Novel

Free tickets to those who bought the photoplay edition of WEST OF THE WATER TOWER, was the stunt that brought the Strand, Birmingham, considerable free space in the merchandise section of the News.

L. R. Towns did it. He tied up with Love-man, Joseph and Loeb, the big department store, and their book department in one instance took nearly a quarter of a full page ad to "plug" the special edition with the come-on line, "See the picture free." Towns supplied the free admissions.

The other display was in the cosmetic department where Kenimer had a sign on display reading, "An actual case of rejuvenation based on scientific methods is 'Black Oxen' Arcade, all week."

FRENCH DOLL CUT-OUTS

The Rialto Theatre of Atlanta, Georgia, used this elaborate lobby display to boost Mae Murray's Metro success, "The French Doll." Poster cut-outs were used to a distinct advantage.

Ladders Reach to Success

Oscar White usually has original displays in the lobby of the Rex, Sumter.

His display for "The Wanters" was particularly good. White had two ladders built out of compo board. He stood one on each side of the lobby. On each rung of the ladders was a different sign such as, "Some Want Beautiful Clothes"; "Some Want Society"; "Some Want Pleasure"; "Some Want Money" and so on up the eight rungs of each ladder. Between the ladders he suspended a sign announcing THE WANTERS with the invitation to "Come inside and see what you want."

Cut-Outs Boost Business

J. Fotheringham, Manager of B. S. Moss' Franklin Theatre, in New York, aroused a lot of preliminary interest in the showing of IN THE PALACE OF THE KING, as well as much comment among his patrons by using cut-outs from the posters for his lobby display.

He mounted a cut-out, life size, of a man in warrior costume riding a white horse with the figure of a woman standing by the horse.

These were painted a very bright scarlet and blue and were visible for a block in either direction. They gave a good flash and are inexpensive to make. The cut-outs were modelled on the poster drawings painted on cardboard.

Over the entrance to the theatre was another large cut-out to show the life size picture of a kneeling warrior and a Moorish woman also modelled on one of the posters. The background of this cut-out was a bright red and the costumes were in blue and gold.

Plastigrams Novel Stunt

A lobby card calculated to arouse curiosity and which can be used as an effective piece of exploitation material is being issued by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for use with the Ives-Leventhal Plastigrams, the "Third Dimension Movie," which will be released the latter part of March.

The card is 11x14 inches, and contains an illustration printed in a manner closely approaching the printing process used in making the motion picture. Two images differing only in the optical angle in which they have been photographed, are superimposed in red and blue ink. A pair of red and blue glasses accompanies the card, and by viewing the card through the special glasses a startling stereoptical effect is obtained.

The card is intended for use in a lobby frame, with the glasses suspended near it for use of patrons or visitors to the lobby. It gives an idea of the effect obtained in the motion picture in a realistic manner.

'Black Oxen' Tie-Up

Going on the theory that the right clothes will make any one young, Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, was able to sell two stores on the idea of window tie-ups in connection with the showing of First National's BLACK OXEN. As further proof the original costumes were brought into play and placed around wax models. The costume worn by Corinne Griffith showed that other people too, could be young if they knew what to wear.

One tie-up was on the Broadway window of Hamburger and Company and the other was in the window of Vogue and Company. Elaborate drapings and ornate decorations completed the display of costumes and stills and attracted comment on what was regarded, in each instance, as an unusually artistic display.

Philadelphia's Exploitation Stunt

What is generally conceded to be the most successful regular exploitation stunt conducted by any exhibitor in Philadelphia came to a close recently when "Miss North Philadelphia" and "The Famous Fifteen," elected in the Popularity Contest conducted by the Ritz Theatre, in which nearly one million votes were cast.

This contest, which is an annual affair, started with more than 100 candidates in the race and wound up with a whirlwind finish in the election of Miss Claire Tabors as "Miss North Philadelphia" with 177,480 votes. Motion pictures of all the candidates were taken on the stage of the Ritz theatre at the start of the contest and flashed on the screen nightly while the contest was in progress. The patrons received a ballot with each ticket of admission. The winners were the recipients of many honors, all the Philadelphia newspapers carrying photographs and detailed stories of the election.

High Power Ads for Capitol

For the showing of its first Victor Seastrom production, NAME THE MAN! from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," at the Capitol Theatre, New York, Goldwyn Pictures gave it a special advertising campaign in the New York daily newspapers.

S. L. Rothafel, presentation manager of the Capitol, for the first time in his regime, gave a signed statement reading: "I consider 'Name the Man!' a truly great picture. I recommend it to all patrons of the Capitol Theatre." This statement under Rothafel's signature was used in the daily papers for several days in advance of the showing. On Sunday the statement was reprinted in a two column advertisement.

In the Sunday Telegram was a full page advertisement of the showing of "Name the Man!" which was rather unusual in make-up. In the upper right-hand corner was a large box occupying nearly half the space of the page headed, "Were her parents too strict? If the daughter does not get some freedom, she may take it all." This was illustrated by line drawing from two of the stills.

'Great White Way' Press Book

A twenty page pressbook replete with information and suggestions to exhibitors has been issued by the Cosmopolitan Corporation on their smashing New York hit, THE GREAT WHITE WAY.

Particular emphasis has been placed on the exploitation value in the fact that this well known story of New York's main street contains the largest cast of notables in the newspaper, theatrical and sporting worlds ever assembled in one picture. This fact is played up in an unusual effective assortment of newspaper ads, posters and other accessories. Various means of capitalizing this angle for exploitation purposes are set forth comprehensively in one section of the book.

Much space is devoted to the newspaper campaign. Publicity stories and cuts are included in great variety.

'Marriage Circle' Press Sheets

Warner Brothers have gone out of their way to make an original press sheet for THE MARRIAGE CIRCLE, the Ernst Lubitsch production. The press sheet of newspaper size, contains a wealth of publicity and exploitation material. Reproductions are strikingly displayed, and the stories have the news quality that will get them over the city editor's blue pencil.

ADVERTISING AIDS

Especially deserving of comment are the posters, distinct departures from the average assortment of lithographs.

The herald is a remarkable piece of work, in its attractive layout and copy display; one of the achievements in herald work, it is bound to go far in arousing interest in the production, when distributed. The same may be said of the two half-sheets, two points in whose favor are inexpensiveness and the fact that the twin pair come together as a one sheet, so that they can be separated or used together. They make dramatic pieces of lithography and will be extensively utilized by exhibitors.

News Kids Profit

A special performance with invitations to newsboys and carriers of the Washington Star, Post, Times Herald, and News was the exploitation plan employed by Sidney Lust, of the Leader Theatre, Washington, D. C., for the launching of the Patheserial, THE WAY OF A MAN, at the Leader. The special showing was held on Saturday morning, February 16, and was attended by hundreds of the capital's newsies.

Every day throughout the week, beginning Monday, February 11, the newspapers carried news items referring to the special performance, and following the showing the press devoted liberal portions of space to an account of the show, the serial itself, its adaptation from Emerson Hough's famous novel, and the leading players being prominently mentioned.

Mr. Lust's point of contact with the various newspapers was established mainly through the persons of the circulation managers, who co-operated in the distribution of tickets for the special showing to the newsboys and carriers of their respective papers.

Takes 'Em at Their Word

Manager A. E. Weld, of the Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Ia., believes in giving his patrons what they want. Following the national howl about unclean pictures, Mr. Weld arranged to show STEPHEN STEPS OUT and JAMESTOWN on the same program. He inserted a ten inch ad in the paper stating that those who desire clean pictures should see these two productions and the box office would show whether or not it is the non-attending public that howls loudest. It brought results.

'White Sister' Press Book

Twenty pages of live "exploitation" aids, ample newspaper stories and ads, and a full line of advertising accessories, comprise the press sheet just issued by Metro on Henry King's Inspiration picture, "The White Sister." It is one of the most elaborate exhibitor's service books issued in the history of the Metro organization, a company that has always made a feature of press sheets on its productions.

Sixteen ad cuts, from one column and one inch slugs to a half-page, assure the exhibitor plenty of variety in his displays. The keynote of all the ads strike the dramatic chords of the picture, reproducing some of the exciting incidents from the production.

Metro has prepared a number of advertising novelties, including Lillian Gish souvenir postals, valuable for mailing lists and advance distribution; souvenir scenic booklets of sixteen pages, done in two colors; Mount Vesuvius "slidographs"; and Lillian Gish "moviescopes."

Novarro Contest

Ramon Novarro, whose latest screen role Metro is in Fred Niblo's new production, THY NAME IS WOMAN has been chosen as the "best dressed man in the movies" by the Ohio Retail Clothiers Association which met in Cleveland recently.

Immediately after this decision the Allen Theatre in Cleveland began a newspaper contest with gold money prizes to winning letters of agreement or disagreement with this decision. Hundreds of people participated but Novarro prevailed against all opposition.

The Cleveland News, Plain Dealer and Press played up the contest, the Plain Dealer and the News assigning special writers to cover the contest from day to day.

Special Edition Exploitation

A special edition did it in Oklahoma City. S. S. Wallace turned managing editor long enough to get out a four-page extra with a forty-point head that screamed: "Oklahoma City Overrun with Gold-Diggers!"

It was made up in good newspaper style complete with patent medicine boiler-plate.

For the greater part it was all GOLD DIGGER copy handled in a sensational expose style.

Five thousand copies were sold before the opening at one cent each.

'THE MAN FROM BRODNEY'S'

Vitagraph's new feature, lends itself well for advertising. The press books give many hints for advertising that will prove profitable for the exhibitor, and the cuts and mats service offered in connection with the picture are sure pullers. The group of ads shown above are good examples of business builders, and if followed should bring results. Many unusual and innovating tieups are also suggested.

'WHITE TIGER' CONQUERS BAD CONDITIONS

Los Angeles Showing Successful Despite Bad Weather

FOR a period of four weeks, Universal's "White Tiger," starring Priscilla Dean did a corking business, at Miller's Theatre in Los Angeles, and this despite the adverse conditions which accompanied the engagement. Bad weather added to poor picture business, generally, were the tunes to which the film was ushered in, but clever advertising and original exploitation carried the picture over with flying colors.

The underlying idea of the exploitation campaign was to inaugurate as many different stunts as possible so as to attract a great deal of attention. It was toward this end that Miller, who manages the theatre, worked unceasingly.

One of the outstanding stunts was a fake raid which was arranged for in co-operation with the police department. At a set time there arrived at a house in the busy district of the city, a patrol wagon and several policemen. The patrolmen entered the house and stayed sufficiently long to allow a large crowd to gather outside. Then they emerged carrying out a struggling girl dressed like Priscilla Dean, and holding on to several other characters representing the principals in the production.

As the crowds pressed closer to get a glimpse at the wagon and find out what was happening, a number of small boys passed out heralds announcing the showing of "White Tiger" at Miller's Theatre. A great deal of the credit for the success of the picture during its run is attributed to the publicity given the showing by means of this stunt.

AUDIENCE IS ENTHUSIASTIC OVER 'MANSLAUGHTER'

"Manslaughter," starring Thomas Meighan, is still doing a great deal of business in various sections of the country, though it is a rather old picture. This is just another instance of the ability of a good picture to continue to draw crowds when newer films are booking in the same vicinity.

This is a Paramount Tried and Proved picture which is doing very well for those exhibitors who are wise enough to book it and take advantage of the many opportunities it offers to give patrons the sort of picture they want, at a greater profit to the exhibitor.

The film played recently at the Opera House in Mountour Falls, New York, and both the performance that was given as a church benefit and the other showings did exceedingly well.

The manager of the Pastime Theatre in Mason, Mich., was delighted with the way he fared with the film and took occasion to write and say so. In referring to it he said: "This certainly made the flappers think, blink and shrink. I got more compliments on this than on anything I have shown before in months."

Every showman knows that. Patrons have come to regard the short—be it comedy, news, scenic, or what not—as an essential part of the show and audiences demand them. Thus every wise showman appreciates their value.

The Big Little Feature has long since been Tried as a program attraction, and has Proved almost from the start that it has decided drawing power.

Hence it's right to a place among TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES—the sound money makers of the screen.

"My Old Kentucky Home," whose name immediately suggests the popular song of the South to practically every one who hears it.

Exhibitors have been finding ever since the first release of the picture, that there are innumerable exploitation stunts which can be very successfully used on this picture, and the result has been a very gratifying amount of business.

The picture was recently run at the Vick Millward, Harris Theatre in Bancroft, Idaho, and according to the manager the title was largely responsible for the splendid business, although after the crowd once got into the theatre, the picture was well able to hold it. It was just the sort of thing a small town audience likes for substantial entertainment.

BIG LITTLE FEATURE

"What are you going to be when you grow up?" someone asked Buddy Messinger, juvenile star of Century Comedies. "A director," Buddy immediately replied, and struck this attitude which is his idea of how a real director looks when he is trying to dope out his next picture.

'THE BIRTH OF A NATION' SWEEPS CHICAGO

Three Week Engagement Not Enough to Accommodate Crowds

WHILE D. W. Griffith's latest great photoplay spectacle, "Amercia," is playing to capacity audiences at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, his first great film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which began breaking box-office records ten years ago, was playing to capacity business at the Auditorium Theatre, Chicago.

The Auditorium in Chicago seats 3,800, and by some is not considered the best of picture propositions. However, "The Birth of a Nation" was put into the Auditorium for a two weeks' engagement. Capacity business was the rule at almost every performance, even the fourth gallery being packed. The engagement was extended for a third week, and still this "first great Griffith spectacle" continued to fill the house.

At the end of the third week the demand on the part of the Chicago public was so great that it seemed best to transfer the attraction to another theatre, it being impossible to keep "The Birth of a Nation" longer at the Auditorium because of previous convention contracts. It was decided to put the Griffith picture into the Illinois theatre, a regular stage drama house, and this was done, despite the fact that conditions made it necessary to increase the price from that charged at the Auditorium. But the change of theatre and the increased admission seemed to make no difference at all to the Chicago public; they still kept flocking to see the picture—the picture which, though made some ten years ago, is today being used by motion picture critics as a basis for comparison in their reviews of the new Griffith spectacle, "America."

Mae Tinees, film reviewer for the Chicago Tribune, had this to say of "The Birth of a Nation" during its run at the Auditorium:

"Some ten years ago D. W. Griffith produced the greatest picture ever made. It was—and IS—"The Birth of a Nation." It's just as great today as it was then.

"Everything that has been done since 'The Birth of a Nation' Mr. Griffith did IN 'The Birth of a Nation,' with the exception of introducing Russian wolf hounds and 'trick' photography.

"Actors? He had them. Sets? They were there. Scenery, pathos, humor, panorama, 'human' touches, all circling magically about the great, sweeping glory of Civil War days, which the producer transferred with such wizardry to the silver sheet.

"It takes a lot of people to fill the Auditorium, but if the public of this city will take my advice it will be filled at every performance."

EDUCATIONAL SHORTS WELL LIKED BY PATRONS

Several Educational Shorts have come in for special comment by some of the exhibitors who have found that their audiences remarked specially on the selection. Perhaps the best liked are "The Busher" series which are baseball stories and seem specially to please all classes of audiences. These are comedies, calculated by some managers to be even more popular when the baseball season is in full swing, although the public takes to them readily now.

These Tried and Proved Shorts are becoming a real feature on the programs.

'The Veiled Adventure'

Marriage Satire

Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Geraldine Barker, for a lark, decides to upset her brother's friend's code of principles. He says he would hate a woman who either lies or steals and would never elope with any girl. By a well laid plot Geraldine arranges to have him find her stealing, lies to him, and finally gets him to propose elopement with her. But it all turns out all right because the two find they really love each other and are married.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE demonstrates her remarkable capacities as a superb screen comedian, which is one of the basic reasons why this picture, originally released in December, 1922, is still so fertile as an unusual drawing attraction. It is a good, clean, wholesome comedy, full of life and romance whose charm it is hard to resist. It is, in short, the sort of entertainment that will find a ready reception with both sophisticated and simple audiences, because Constance Talmadge has the sort of appealing charm that captivates.

All that is necessary to make the picture a real money grabber is a strong exploitation shove. The big merchant tie-up is suggested in the story itself. Geraldine begins to doubt the man she is engaged to when she finds a veil in her pocket which she knows does not belong to her. Any department store or ladies' outfitter will probably immediately see the advantages of a window display in which there are featured a line of veils in conjunction with a series of stills from the picture which will supply the necessary background.

Another angle of attack is a tie-up with a beauty parlor in the neighborhood of the theatre. The veil that is found in Reggie's pocket is the property of a manicurist with whom he is carrying on a flirtation. Stills showing Harrison Ford seated at the manicurist's table have been incorporated into an attractive poster. Arrange to have several of these put in the window and then offer free admission tickets to all the manicurists in the shop for their cooperation in calling attention to the picture, by attacking it as a subject of conversation with customers. You should invite them to attend the opening performance so that they will be in a position to talk intelligently about the picture and can boost it with their customers for the other showings.

'What's Your Hurry?'

Auto Picture

Released by Paramount

BRIEF: Dusty Rhoades, a racing driver, loves the daughter of an auto truck manufacturer, but her father will not consent to the marriage because he does not like racing cars nor racing drivers. Finally, however, Rhoades, with a fleet of trucks arrives just in time to rescue the girl and her father from destruction through a flood. This act not only wins publicity for the trucks, but the hand of the girl he loves, and a job as general manager for the father's factory.

THE humorous suggestion contained in the title and the fact that Wallace Reid is featured in the stellar role are two of the reasons why this picture has met with unusual box office success. The scene in which Rhoades rushes the trucks to the scene of disaster and saves the day by his heroism, is a humdinger. It is the sort of thing that gets audiences standing on their toes, and sees them leaving the theatre well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

That's the reason for the long life of this film. It has crowded many a house to capacity and is no where near the end of its rope yet. As a matter of fact it is perhaps more in demand now than ever before since it remains as one of Wallace Reid's best.

And the title! No one could ask for a more pertinent title for wide spread exploitation. In the first place it will stop anyone, anywhere by its very tone. Before you realize you have stopped you are actually reading the ad. Imagine the effect of placarding an entire town or community with signs which compel attention by a glaring "What's Your Hurry?"

Think of the great tie-up with the city, on a safety slogan, "What Your Hurry?" Why, you couldn't hope for better. Any group of city officials could appreciate the value of "What's Your Hurry?" signs at every street crossing and should readily consent to you placing them there. The signs should also bear the name of your theatre and the date of showing. It matters little that this is in smaller type since it is the effect of the unusual name that you want to get across. That will attract the eye and impress itself on the minds of the passersby.

You can stop them right at the entrance of your theatre with some such device as this. Get a twenty-four sheet and cut out the figure of Wallace Reid. Cut off the right arm and mount the figure on cardboard. The arm should then be replaced by a very long one set on so that it will move up and down by a string. This string can easily be worked by the man at the door or the ticket seller.

In the hand should be a large sign on which is printed: "What's Your Hurry?" If the figure is placed just in front of the theatre, it can be manipulated so that the sign will spring out to meet the people as they pass by. This will not only amuse, but will undeniably center attention on your showing.

'A Lady's Name'

Love Comedy

Released by Selznick

BRIEF: A young authoress, a bit fed up with the routine of affairs, advertises for a husband. One of the candidates is a disguised butler who invites her the next day to tea. During the repast the master walks in. She caps the climax by marrying the master.

HERE is another Norma Talmadge picture with a title that is easy to exploit. Crowd in the name of Norma Talmadge wherever you can. Especially now that her latest picture has already become tremendously popular, it is a good time to show any of her pictures, since the public is keen to see her.

For this type of picture, which is comic in its make-up and whose name is interest arousing, the teaser ad is the best bet. Just get a good number of signs made such as these: "'A Lady's Name' is her fortune"; "The most sacred possession of all—'A Lady's Name'"; "'A Lady's Name' has wrecked many a home." These should be widely distributed in the neighborhood several days or even a week in advance of the showing.

You might also be able to arrange a tie-up with the local engraver, whereby for the added advertising which you will give him by means of the scheme, he will consent to make visiting cards for a reduced rate. Then you can arrange with him to send out form letters to women on your mailing list announcing that they can have cards made at.....'s shop at a reduced price during the showing of "A Lady's Name" at the.....Theatre.

The merchant tie-ups may also be profitably worked in connection with some special window displays. The scene in the home of the man who finally becomes Norma's husband, shows a beautifully furnished drawing room. Stills from this scene would make splendid material for a background in a furniture window. You should have no difficulty in arranging this type of tie-up.

You might also try the stunt of sending out letters to the men on your mailing list, asking them to take the undersigned out on such and such a night. The place of meeting should be designed as your theatre, and the letter should be signed with a fictitious name. The men will probably soon start comparing notes, and what's more, some of the wives will undoubtedly get hold of these and that will start tongues wagging. The result will probably be increased business.

'The Flame of Life'

Mine Tragedy

Released by Universal

BRIEF: Fighting against her environment, and seeking to place herself on a higher plane, the delicately sensitive girl who toils daily in the coal mines, finds life almost unbearable. She finally proves a real heroine, when she does some brilliant rescue work when the mine blows up. Among those she saves, is an overseer whom she loves and finally marries.

THE purpose of producing this story was to provide the rather jaded fan with a real thrill, a satisfying love theme, and a heartfelt pathos. In none of these details has the film fallen short. Time has proven that the story, complete as it is in every detail, has a wide appeal and a satisfying interest, and that it has by no means exhausted its drawing power as yet.

Priscilla Dean probably does some of the finest work of her career in these few reels, and the public is dully appreciative of this fact. Hence the continued interest in a film that has been on the market a considerable length of time. And it still presents a wealth of new exploitation stunts which serve to give the picture a new aspect.

Merely using the title as a catch line you should be able to effect a number of clever stunts. Arrange with the city or town officials to allow you to place on every traffic sign or at each street crossing, a sign which reads: "Drive carefully. The 'Flame of Life' is a privilege bestowed upon pedestrians as well as autoists. Give the man on foot a chance."

If any charitable organization is making a drive at this time, and there is one such at all times, you could give these organizations ideas for ads like this: "'The Flame of Life' is a precious thing. Help us to sustain it, and make life more livable for the less fortunate who are finding life almost too hard to bear, by contributing to the....fund."

Then, too, there is this rather unique scheme which should certainly attract attention to your showing. Costume a man in a uniform fashioned after the one worn by employees of the gas company. Have the words "Gas Tester" on his sleeve and his cap. Let him go from door to door and as each doorbell is answered have him ask how the gas is working. In most cases he will probably receive complaints on how the bills are over-large for the service received. Then hand the person an envelop in which is contained a facsimile gas bill on which is printed: "This is not a gas bill. It is an announcement that 'The Flame of Life' opens at the.....Theatre (date)." This stunt is sure to get the housewives talking, which means the whole town will soon know of the coming attraction.

To attract attention to the theatre at the time the picture is running it is a good idea to burn vari-colored street torches, such as are used for political campaigns. These flares are visible for great distances and will bring a large number of persons to your door. Once you have them there it is comparatively simple to get them.

'The Man Unconquerable'

South Sea Drama Released by Paramount

BREF: Robert Kendall is left a heritage of a pearl fisheries in Frenchman's Island. The property is being managed by Nilsson an unscrupulous rascal who, in league with several others, is stealing the pearls. Kendall is in love with a girl whom he meets on the island, but before he can win her he is forced to kill two of the gang that has been trying to ruin him. He thus rids himself of his oppressors and secures happiness for himself.

THE virile, red blooded type of picture which incorporates one or more hard hand-to-hand tussels, almost invariably gets across with the average audience. Add to that a bit of romance, a smattering of mystery, appealing scenery of the South Sea variety, and you have all the elements for a strongly appealing photoplay.

Since all of these are so inherently a part of this picture, all molded and seasoned together with an unusually fine direction, it is not at all surprising that it is numbered among the big successes. And it has proven its right among this class by its record at the box office. It has been a real money maker for so many exhibitors there is every reason to believe that it will pull well not only for a first showing but for a repeated showing.

Moreover, there are splendid possibilities in connection with this film for some fine exploitation tie-ups. In the first place it is essential to get the atmosphere of the picture across to the public. This can be readily done by means of fitting decoration of the lobby. Decorate the entrance with tall palms, and if possible, representations of coconut palms with real nuts. The box office may be made to represent a thatched hut and you might be able to induce the ticket seller to wear a headdress suggestive of the South Seas.

If someone in your vicinity has in his possession, some spears and knobberies, or perhaps a model of an outrigger canoe such as is used in the Southern Pacific, and he will lend them to you they will greatly help to create a wonderful lobby atmosphere.

If there is a health society near you there is a ripe opportunity of a tie-up with them on a campaign for better manhood. The title of the picture would make a splendid name title for the perfect physical man, while stills from the picture in which two or more of the actors are seen in a hand-to-hand encounter, would make splendid material for the society's ads.

If you stage prologues you might fittingly arrange for a Hula Hula dance or a small band of Hawaiian steel guitar players who will appear on a stage that has been decorated in a style suggestive of the South Seas. For this purpose you should use green material to decorate the entire stage which will also have the effect of making your screen stand out whiter in relief.

The title of this film is also valuable for a tie-up with the local gymnasium or Y. M. C. A. It carries with it the implication that if a man is physically fit he is "The Man Unconquerable." This can be further elaborated upon by the various types of ads in which the title of the picture is liberally used, and which mentions the play dates and the name of the theatre at which it will appear.

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

Leaders All—David Wark Griffith

of the Iroquois tribe, one of the powerful elements of that combination of redmen.

To this lake port come the vessels laden with iron ore. Here the future maker of "America" labored with his shovel many hours in a day.

From Tonawanda Griffith went to Canastota, where after undergoing a searching physical examination he went to work as a puddler in the mills.

After accumulating what in those days the young man considered a bank roll he proceeded to New York.

A Life-Saving Poem

While waiting stage employment he did considerable writing—verses, essays, and short stories, as well as a serious poem entitled "The Wild Duck." For this latter effort Leslie's weekly paid $35, a "life-saver" at the moment. Nevertheless the rank of the publication attests the quality that must have resided in the lines.

Although his success encouraged him to consider further and perhaps permanent work along similar lines he continued work on a play which was produced by Klaw & Erlanger with Fanny Ward in the leading role.

Another play was submitted to Wilham Winter, the famous critic of the New York Tribune and also a poet. Mr. Winter telegraphed the author:

"This is the most significant play written to date by an American dramatist."

Henry Miller on behalf of James K. Hackett accepted the play and paid the author an advance royalty of $2,000.

Because of happenings which will not be told here the drama was never produced. Nevertheless the two plays Mr. Griffith had written and one of which had received such strong praise from so eminent a critic as Mr. Winter were the vanguard of the "naturalist" productions which now are the accepted standard of the American stage and examples of which may be found in plays like "Lightnin'," "Rain" and "Seventh Heaven"—in other words, stories in which the characters act and talk like human beings of the day.

Journeying to Chicago Griffith saw a motion picture which did not greatly impress him. He believed he could write a better story. He went to his room and wrote out his idea of a motion picture tale. He returned to New York and submitted the effort to the Edison company. He has not heard from it yet.

Scenarist and Actor

He wrote another and a better story and submitted it to the Biograph company in Fourteenth street. It was accepted and a check for $5 was written. Also the author was offered a job as a scenario writer and occasionally as an actor—which was accepted.

In the studio the new employe began to be looked upon as a pest by some of those in subordinate positions because of his continual suggestions that the manner of doing things could be improved. At that time the cameraman was a powerful factor in the making of a picture—as much so if not more than the director.

When one day a director failed to put in an appearance it was determined to put the new-comer to the test. The first picture was "The Adventures of Dollie." Instead of the usual fifteen prints the demand for the picture increased the sale to twenty-five.

So Griffith became a director—but under these conditions: The American Mutoscope and Biograph Company specialized in mutoscopes. The new director was told he would have to make two mutoscopes a day and each day before he would direct a picture.

Undaunted Griffith concentrated on the mutoscopes and produced in one day enough to carry his stint through the week, leaving him five days for the production of pictures.

For the making of these single reel subjects the budget at that time—this was in 1908—was $75. Griffith made "The Trust" in close to 2,000 feet at a cost of $180.

Following the flat refusal of Griffith to cut the subject the distribution authorities at the studio declared there was no machinery for the handling of any such length picture and the producer was discharged. There is a legend, too, that something was said about a "damned fool director." But later in the same day it was discovered there was a way of getting around the difficulty and the director was re-employed.

The picture would be distributed in two sections, the first half as "His Trust" and the second as "His Trust Fulfilled."

So the first serial, in two episodes of one reel each, was put on the market.

Reference has been made to the importance of the cameraman in the making of pictures. When Griffith attempted innovations he quickly discovered deep-seated prejudices on the part of the photographer.

Just What He Wanted

The human figures were placed so far from the camera that it was the usual thing to attire the hero and the heavy in garb entirely different so that they might be distinguished. The same general rule applied to the two important women in a cast.

When Griffith sought to bring the camera nearer to the players so as to show by the faces of the actors something of the emotions that stirred the characters he was informed by the cameraman it could not be done. Nevertheless he insisted.

"Now this is what you had me do," complained the cameraman as he showed to the director a print with only the chest and heads of the players showing.

"And that is just what I wanted," was the reply.

The close-up has been a factor in picturemaking ever since.

In the early days it was the custom, for example, to show a girl floating down stream on her way to a watery grave without any interruption. Mother might be standing on the shore in helpless agony, but that factor would not be permitted to enter the drama until the swim was completed.

Griffith heightened the suspense by inserting in the scenes showing the drifting girl views of the mother. That was the "cut-back."

There was the same antagonism against the photographing of distant happenings, employed so effectively in the rides of Paul Revere and Nathan Holden and in the battle of Bunker Hill among other scenes in "America."

There were many screen classics produced by Biograph in the five years following 1908. To exhibitors and the public for the greater part of that time the former will tell you that a one-sheet outside their doors announcing a Biograph would be shown was sufficient to insure a full house for the day.

Old-time exhibitors will recall with smiles of satisfaction the comments of their patrons over such pictures as "The Battle," "Man's Genesis," "The Battle of Elderberry Gulch," "When Pippa Passes," "The Blot on the Scutcheon"—but why continue? Literally there were scores and hundreds of them.

Judith of Bethulia

As a result of the desire of Griffith to extend the length of pictures he was authorized to make "Judith of Bethulia," which in four reels was looked upon as little short of revolutionary.

In October, 1913, Griffith joined Reliance-Majestic, distributing through Mutual. His salary was reputed to be $100,000 a year, and there is every reason to believe the figure was authentic. It was a salary at that period practically unknown, with possibly one or two exceptions.

Here in a little over a year he produced several marked successes, and then resigned to go to Los Angeles to make "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, later to be more generally released under the title of "The Birth of a Nation."

This production, which was shown for the first time in Los Angeles February 8, 1915, reached high-water mark in film returns. No other picture has approached it, not by a half.

Among others which have followed were "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," "Way Down East" and "Orphans of the Storm."

"America" is the last—and without hesitation we will say it is the greatest of Mr. Griffith's works. The production easily came within the classification of "great" as it was presented on its first night in New York.

As a result of the pruning and trimming which Mr. Griffith bestowed upon it in the succeeding eight or nine days its dramatic effect has been vastly enhanced.

"America" is its producer's greatest work—to date. For it is well to bear in mind that its creator is but forty-four years old. His career practically has just begun. What he has achieved in "America" is proof that his star is still in the ascendant.

And right here we will return to the point where we started. The success of David Griffith has been due largely to his personal contact with those less fortunately placed in the battle ranks of life. He knows what is in the mind of the man who works as well as of the man who thinks.

More than that, he has the capacity most vividly to dramatize everyday happenings, to reach the heart of the man in the street.

CY THEREA

Starts, Where Language Stops

BUT, after all, we do not need to go out of the entertainment field to find the examples of 100 per cent advertising such as should be the general rule rather than the exception in the motion picture theatre's appeal. The original appeal of motion picture to the public was more like the appeal of vaudeville than of any other stage entertainment. Diversity has made and kept vaudeville the most popular amusement on the stage. Diversity made motion pictures popular in the first place. It will always be its biggest drawing power.

In vaudeville this appeal of variety has always been recognized, and vaudeville advertising shows it. Every vaudeville bill has it headliner. But practically every vaudeville advertisement not only tells about this headliner, but announces the other acts on the bill as well.

Certainly the feature picture is in most cases the biggest box office attraction on the motion picture program, and should be treated accordingly, being given the largest share of the newspaper advertising space and the first consideration in the "show window," or lobby, display. But at the same time the exhibitor who wants to make a 100 per cent appeal to his patrons must give adequate treatment to the comedy and the other units on his bill. This need not in any way detract from the force of the appeal made by the feature, but rather will add to this appeal.

We mentioned at the beginning the rare cases in which the value of the diversified appeal in advertising was understood. Fortunately some of the biggest representative theatres in the country are beginning to give more thought to the advertising of their Short Subjects—the first signs of understanding that the public which shops so carefully for its merchandise is going to shop just as carefully for its entertainment, spending its money where it has the best chance to get full value and where it runs the least risk of being disappointed.

length program that amuses and entertains and incidentally, at times, also, instructs.

We endeavor to present in interesting and entertaining fashion in Bray's Magazine, for instances, views and news from all parts of the world, scenics, scientific discoveries, nature studies, sports, thrills and comedies, carefully selected and arranged with the object of meeting the widest variety and entertainment.

In the Bray Nature Pictures, also, we endeavor to meet with a popular demand that we find is constantly increasing. These are rare and exceptional pictures of bird, animal and sub-sea life gathered by eminent naturalists, such as Professor Pycroft of the British Museum and the staff of the American Museum of Natural History, as interesting and novel as they are informative.

To return to my premise, while the comedy and cartoon will probably always be the leaders in popularity among picture-goers in the short feature field, I am firmly of the belief that the exhibitor-showman is going to realize more and more that he should give the most careful consideration in selecting his entire short program.

"Every exhibitor should encourage you in your good work by running every issue of Screen Snapshots as this reel is not only excellent entertainment, but it is doing much to offset the unpleasant and untrue publicity regarding life in Hollywood, as it being played up in the daily newspapers."

"There is a great need for good short material," says Mr. Cohn, "but it must be carefully selected. The day has passed when short subjects on programs were regarded as 'fillers.' It is now a definitely thought out part of a program, and is attracting the attention of the critics. The public and the exhibitors have been educated up to the feature calibre release."

Gentlemen:-

Just a few lines to tell you of the great pleasure and satisfaction I have experienced in playing your INCOMPARABLE UNIT ORGAN during the last 5 years.

Only such an instrument as the Wurlitzer Unit Organ could have influenced my decision to resign my Directorship of the Chicago Ziegfeld Musical College and enter the New Field created by your Unit Organ in the Motion Picture Industry.

It is a never ending delight to me the almost unlimited beautiful and unusual combinations procurable with one or more sets of Pipes; it awrds in comparison the Old Style with its limited Coupler System.

In my opinion your Unit Organ with its remarkable Simplicity of Control, wonderful Responsiveness and Tonal beauty, is magnificent and I may say truly amazing.

In closing I will say, your Unit Organ has been a very real and constant inspiration to me in my Composition work, and I look forward to very many more glorious hours at its Console.

Very Truly Yours,

Produced by Demand of the Great American Public!

FACTS

"Three Weeks" has sold more than fifteen million copies.

It has been translated into every language of the world except Spanish!

There is never a year that "Three Weeks" isn't a contemporary best seller in America. Last year it sold 100,000 copies.

It has been read by forty million people. Twenty-five million are women.

With the exception of the Bible it is the best-seller of all time.

Popularity is king in this business. When the public wants something it's got to have it. The consistent interest in Elinor Glyn's undying romance heralded the great motion picture that is now ready to be shown. And what a glorious showing it will be, for the production is a classic, a gem of artistic portrayal. Can you think of a title off-hand that has the popularity of "Three Weeks?"

Elinor Glyn journeyed all the way from her beautiful manor in England to superintend the filming of her great story in Los Angeles. She picked the cast which represents her imagination's ideal. And they performed her miracles. We'll deliver some reels of celluloid to you in tin film cans, but it's just like handing you a gold nugget on a silver platter.

As a Whole... SHOULD GET OVER MIGHTY WELL

Cast Some good names for you to work with. Pauline Garon who again does excellent work as the flapper. Harrison Ford who has a somewhat boob part of a lover and David Powell who is the "mean" villain. Others DeSacia Mooers, Burr McIntosh, Russell Griffin a smart kiddie, Fox Office Angle... If you know your folks like cabaret scenes and a cute love story this one may fill their needs nicely. You know how flapper stuff gets over with your people and Pauline G. does it very well in this.

"Look what Danny says—"

Exploitation You can tell them that this is based on a Saturday Evening Post story, that it has a good cast—mention the names—and that it is nicely produced.

Direction... William Christy Cabanne, good.

Scenario by J. Raymond S. Harris

Titles very good.

The News points out

The Average Woman
(C. C. Burr-Mastodon Films—6500 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)
The picture is a fine restraint by David Powell and Burr McIntosh. It is played with fine effectiveness to the denouement. The endhouse scenes carry the dramatic punch—and most of the atmosphere. De Sacia Mooers as the vengeful hostess gives a vital performance. A simple story, treated with considerable discretion, smoothly and logically told.
SUMMARY. Should excite interest despite familiarity of plot, because it is developed in progressive and logical manner. Carries punch in concluding scenes.

C. C. Burr Presents Real All Star Cast in Picture with a Theme

"Give 'em a theme to exploit and advertise" must be C. C. Burr's first rule. The second is "Give 'em a cast." On both points he has succeeded in his latest offering for the state rights market, "The Average Woman."
To back the exploitation up there is an acceptable production, with direction up to the standard by W. Christy Cabanne, and a cast of experienced players. There is some thing of suspense in the sequences feeding a wife, whose memory he reverses, had hidden a dread secret of illicit love from his

STATION E. T. R. presents its ROUND ABOUT THE STUDIOS NUMBER. A diverting program in which the exhibitor is taken to the backstage, so to speak, of the film industry.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for example, has something to say of its production schedule for the coming season. On page 6, in "The Paramount Production Urge," one learns on what basis stories, directors and players are selected in order to insure pleasant box-office experience for the showman.

It's dollars to doughnuts that when the reader has absorbed the thought-provoking comments in "In and Around the Studio," by J. L. Warner, of Warner Brothers Productions, he will have a dozen refreshing opinions on production economy, where possibly only one existed before. This article, on page 7, will repay the reader's time with profitable dividends of interest and information.

Exhibitors Trade Review, desiring to secure expert opinion on the song tie-up in its relation to increased box-office receipts, considers itself fortunate in securing a man who digs deep down into his experience as a popular song writer and motion picture advertising man, to reach some scintillating conclusions. It is all there for the reading, on page 31.

STAND by for next week's Special STATE RIGHTS ISSUE. The status of the Independent will be presented from the Independent side.

Conditions, as they are today in a constantly changing field, will be dissected and sprinkled with expert opinions.

The element of surprise, to which human beings inevitably react with the pleasurable thrills that stamp them as human beings, will be found holding down the center of the stage. Keep an eye peeled for Leaders All. Don't miss the STATE RIGHTS ISSUE.

Trade REVIEW

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Is Radio Responsible for the Closing of Blank's Two Houses?

TWO of the theatres connected with the A. H. Blank Theatrical Enterprises have been ordered closed. They are the Capitol and the Rialto, both of Des Moines. The new Capitol, which is one of the largest and most elaborate houses in the Middle West, opened with vaudeville and pictures last August.

The slump in the amusement business in that general section which started just before the holidays and has continued despite unusually mild weather has resulted in the shutdown of the Capitol on March 14.

The Rialto, one of the company's most modern Des Moines houses, is set for closing April 1.

In a statement issued by Mr. Blank it is declared the action is indicative of the seriousness of the general amusement situation in Iowa and Nebraska, which he says seems to defy any attraction.

FOR the condition of which he so substantially complains Mr. Blank ascribes no reason. If in his opinion it is radio he does not say so. He merely recites what has happened and what steps he has taken to meet the situation.

Sidney B. Lust, president of the Super-Film Attractions and an exhibitor of the nation's capital city, in a letter to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW agrees with William Brandt that "The radio is decreasing the patronage of the movies."

Mr. Lust declares his belief that he can speak with a fair amount of knowledge, having previously been in the radio business as well as being an ex-changeman and an exhibitor.

"Since the question became the topic of discussion I have talked with a number of our residential exhibitors," says Mr. Lust, "and they are all complaining about their night patronage decreasing. Surely at this time of the year the moving picture business should be excellent."

"As an illustration at my home I have installed a very fine radio set and on Sunday evenings when 'Roxy' is broadcasting my wife and a party of friends sit around and listen in. Formerly they would go to the 'movies.'

"I am given to understand that there are 75,000 radio sets in this city. What is the conclusion or result? Multiply this by three, which is a low average for the listeners-in, and you have 225,000 persons staying away from the pictures."

"While it may not decrease the patronage of the first-run houses or the down-town houses, the community houses are suffering. You understand I have asked a number of exhibitors who conduct community houses and this is their version of the question."

"There should be a solution of the problem. Who will be the genius to uncover it? I might suggest that we are making a mistake by encouraging the radio and the exhibitors are making a mistake by allowing their soloists and musicians to broadcast their talent when it should be paid for at the box office."

From the town of Exeter, N. H., comes an interesting letter from G. W. Yeaton, manager of the Ioka Theatre, who takes issue with B. P. Schulberg, who in the columns of this journal recently said he did not believe radio was hurting the motion picture business.

SAYING the producer may increase the price of his pictures at will Mr. Yeaton declares the exhibitor has reached the limit the public will stand.

"Mr. Schulberg is a producer," says the Exeter manager, "and I will admit that his company makes some good pictures, for I have used every one of them, but I do not think he is as well qualified to judge of the effects of the radio upon the moving picture public as the exhibitor in daily touch with his patrons and who knows exactly the causes that keep them away from the theatres, especially in small towns."

"I know from investigation that I am losing a hundred or so each week from this one cause—'radio.' People who used to attend my theatre two and three times a week now seldom come at all, and if at all only on an average of perhaps once in two weeks. Knowing nearly every one in town I make it one of my rules to find out the reason for their absence, and I learn that in nine cases out of ten the cause is radio."

"The town is honeycombed with radio bees and radio clubs. I thought a year ago it was only a fad and would soon wear out. Not so."

"It is ten times worse now than it was a year ago."

"They first get a one-tube set, which starts the disease. Then it grows to a three-tube and on to a five, and if the manufacturers could turn out the supplies fast enough I think it will run into hundreds."

"I know what it is, because I have got as far as the five-tube myself and have the parts on hand to make a 'super.' My business compels me to be at the theatre or I would be at home listening in with the rest."

MR. YEATON says when he is "soft" enough to sit up until 3 o'clock in the morning at the end of his day's work he is not going to permit any one to say the radio does not hurt his business.

He says it is not that people necessarily prefer the radio to pictures every evening in the week, but the radio is best in the evening, and they choose the radio with slippers and shirtsleeves to a long walk in the cold.

Mr. Yeaton declares his intention to go out and fight the radio situation and he is going to make a "super."

"I am going to try to keep 'one jump ahead' of every radio fan in town," he says. He declares he is going to have the best receiving set in Exeter and is going to give his patrons a little radio with their pictures.

The exhibitor plans to have his fellow-townsmen coming to him for advice, to consider him an authority on radio as well as pictures.

He admits it means a lot of hard work, but he is convinced that if he is to stay in the small town picture business he has got to combine the two.

The Paramount Production Urge

Box-Office Value of Story, Director and Player Is the Basis of Selection Before Pictures Go Into Production

BOX office value has been made the Paramount productions now one of the principal essentials in being made at the Long Island studio. Casts and directors have been carefully selected not only with an eye to their ability, but also after a careful survey of their records as attractions in theatres; and these directors and players have been assigned to stories the value of which has been established either on the stage or in book form.

The productions now being made at Long Island for Paramount are pointed to by officials of the Company as the type evolved by Jesses L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, during the brief shut-down period in the middle of the winter. At that time Mr. Lasky said that in the future every production would be thoroughly mapped out and carefully planned before work was begun, and that every effort would be made to make only those pictures which had a definite and assured box office appeal.

As evidence of this policy, the Company's officials are pointing to this group of pictures now being produced: Rudolph Valentino in "Monsieur Beaucaire," Thomas Meighan in "The Confidence Man," Gloria Swanson in

of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

"Manhandled," Herbert Brenon's production of "The Mountebank," and Alan Crosland's production "The Man Who Sold Himself" featuring Richard Dix.

In "The Confidence Man," one of the big box office appeals, aside from the presence of Thomas Meighan in the picture as star, is the fact that in this picture Mr. Meighan returns to the type of crook story which made him famous. The choice of "The Confidence Man" in which Meighan plays the role of a likeable swindler, was the result of a demand from Mr. Meighan's admirers and a number of exhibitors for another Tom Meighan crook picture, similar to "The Miracle Man," "The City of Silent Men" and "If You Believe It, It's So."

The vehicle for Gloria Swanson—"Manhandled"—was inspired and chosen by an expert in box office values—S. R. Kent, Paramount's distribution manager. Mr. Kent plotted out the story himself, chose the title for it and then got Arthur Stringer, a well known novelist and short story writer to write it as a serial story to be published in the Saturday Evening Post beginning next week. The picture is being produced by Allan Dwan, director of "Robin Hood," whose two latest pictures, "A Society Scandal" and "Big Brother" are proving immense successes.

Herbert Brenon's forthcoming production, "The Mountebank," has a quadruple combination of audience attractions—Mr. Brenon's name, which has been associated recently with "The Shadows of Paris," "The Spanish Dancer" and "The Breaking Point"; the story, which is by the famous English novelist, W. J. Locke, and Ernest Torrence in the featured role. Since "The Covered Wagon" every picture in which Torrence has played has been a big success. And he has become an individual attraction of the first order.

RUDOLPH VALENTINO loses nothing of his natural attractiveness in donning the powdered wig and knee breeches for Paramount's "Monsieur Beaucaire." If anything his portrayal of a character in a day when Grandma was a girl adds to his many achievements in the photodrama. Bebe Daniels likewise shows to unmistakable advantage.

In and Around the Studio

By J. L. WARNER

Production Manager Warner Brothers West Coast Studios

IN and around the motion picture studio, almost any studio will do, but Warner Bros. studio particularly as it is the one I am best qualified to speak for the visitor unfamiliar with such surroundings is usually struck with the apparent disorder and hectic atmosphere, if the various companies are at work "on the lot" or the apparent quiet if everyone is away on location. Then perhaps the visitor, who may be a journalist, goes away and is later quoted with some very emphatic remarks on the "waste and inefficiency of the movies."

It all depends on where you sit as to how the show will look and sitting in the chair of the studio production manager (and very few of them sit for more than two minutes at a time), the view is entirely different. The disorder which impressed the visitor is nothing of the kind. The coiled cables around the lights are not carelessly thrown there but placed that way to instantly permit of the lamps being moved.

The odd shaped pile of lumber was not forgotten by a careless carpenter but most likely placed there so that a "parallel" or elevated platform might be erected quickly for an unusual camera shot.

Even the pots of paint in the corner are only waiting for a scheduled moment to perhaps change a "flat" from a garret to a ballroom, for the Louis XIV ballroom today may be an East Side tenement tomorrow.

When a theatrical production ends its run the "storehouse" is usually the mausoleum of the scenic equipment.

Not so in the studio. Every stick of wood, piece of canvas and even the nails are made to do double and triple duty. Imagine a theatre trying to rehearse, stage and produce six different productions at once with varying periods calling for six different types of furniture, scenery and costumes.

Take the situation when all companies are on location as sometimes happens. Quite true one may see only a few carpenters or plasterers hammering at some shapeless mass in a corner of the stage. The activity now is concentrated in other places. Look inside the carpenter shop, you will see the men busily constructing everything from furniture to carriages and houses. The scenic artists are working from miniature models of some future "set," the seamstresses in the wardrobe rooms are busily sewing costumes and the laboratory men are engaged in assembling the "takes" of the previous day.

RESOURCEFULNESS is the watchword in our studio and if I may be permitted to say it, "The Warner Brothers studio has never yet been 'stumped' by a technical obstacle." We have successfully negotiated without leaving the grounds of the studio proper, earthquakes and volcanoes in "A Dangerous Adventure," a Northwest blizzard, ski-jumping contest and ice ring in "Main Street," a forest fire in "Lombard," the docks and streets of Calais in 1800 for "Beau Brummel," an ocean beach in "Broadway After Dark" and innumerable others

HOW is it done?" is fairly well answered in these pictures taken 'round about the studios. For one thing, the "shooting" of a fast moving automobile, seemingly so difficult, when seen on the screen, is made easy and accessible when one is let in on the "dark" secret here which space will not permit mention at this writing.

Thus it easily might be inferred after the consequent light has been thrown on the subject that what may appear to the uninitiated as an extravagant waste of resources and material, is really at a last analysis a strategic arrangement in which valuable moments are gained, and contingencies most capably met when the fire of pressure is at white heat.

Old Lady Astor Says

THE Quebec Board of Motion Picture Censors has discovered a new method of entertaining jurymen sitting on a murder trial. On a day when the twelve men were not busy hearing the evidence in the Father De'lorme case they were invited by the censors to join them in reviewing the daily grind. The censors did more than that. They invited the jurymen to look at pictures which had been condemned for public consumption, which a usually truthful correspondent declares were enjoyed immensely. The court, it may be noted, with judicial foresight sent along a police escort. Canadian exchangemen may be pardoned for making facetious remarks about the proceeding.

BRUCE FOWLER, director of McVicker's Theatre of Chicago, accompanied by H. Leopold Spitalny, director of music and production, and Ed Olmstead, director of publicity, were in New York last week as guests of the Famous Players coincident with the Paramount convention.

EDWARD EARL, president of the Nicholas Power Company, is back at his desk after a siege with the doctors. If he is glad to be on the job his associates in the company and his host of friends in the industry are happy to have him again in the active circle. While the head of Nicholas Power is a man of many interests he is a consistent follower of trade functions, and he is always one of the real members of any party.

MARCUS LOEW cut short his golf at Palm Beach in order to get back to New York on March 10, so that he might be present at the opening of Loew's State in White Plains on the evening of that day. In the same suburb of the big town Loew's Strand, a recent acquisition and which has been thoroughly renovated, was reopened on the following Thursday.

UNDER the patronage of Barron Collier of the New York police and the New York state exhibitors, through President William Brandt, E. B. Hatrick, general manager of International News, incorporated in that publication in its issue of March 8 the first of a series of "Safety First" incidents showing the dangers to pedestrians on crowded streets. Not much footage is devoted to the particular bit, but it is graphically shown and carries a real thrill. The spot selected for the first demonstration is Forty-second street and Fifth avenue, New York, believed by many to be the most crowded corner in the world.

LEE DE FOREST'S latest phonofilm is showing at the Rivoli this week. Chauncey M. Depew, one of New York's first citizens and approaching the ninety-year mark, gives a short and intimate talk on Abraham Lincoln with whom he was personally acquainted. Dr. Frank Crane' essayist, talks on "Happiness." The synchronizing is complete, the voices are loud and clear and the general effect is almost uncanny.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH, returning from Boston to New York following his great triumph there with "America," brought with him the bronze button of membership of the oldest military organization in the country, the Minute Men of Lexington. The honorary distinction was conferred upon the producer for the faithfulness with which he portrayed the battle of Lexington. The button was presented by Captain Breed, who was accompanied by fifteen members of the famous organization, on the stage of the theatre.

IT just happens that in casting "Along Came Ruth" for Metro all of the players with the exception of Viola Dana, who is the star, were born in small towns. As an example, Walter Hiers hails from Cordele, Ga.; Tully Marshall from Nevada City, Cal., and Gale Henry from Bear Valley. And so on with the half dozen others in the cast. Miss Dana is credited to New York, or Brooklyn to be exact and Flatbush to be even more exact. Now Flatbush as a part of Brooklyn was annexed to New York January 1, 1898, if our memory be reliable. Flatbush in those days had all the characteristics of a small town. So if—we said IF—Miss Dana will say she was born prior to the date mentioned she may qualify on that small town stuff, too, and make the cast 100 per cent truly rural.

THE producer of "The Uninvited Guest," J. E. Williamson, has again gone to the Bahamas, this time accompanied by two scientists of the American Museum of Natural History. While making the subject named he discovered some unusual coral growths, and he has returned to the islands for the purpose of photographing them.

THE Rockett Brothers have closed their run on "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln" at the Gaiety Theatre in New York. The final showing was on the evening of Sunday, March 9, to a full house. One of the unusual factors connected with the seven weeks' showing of this fine picture is the large proportion of men who visited the theatre. At the same time the women who have seen the picture have "raved" about it, representatives of women's clubs being particularly enthusiastic. George Billings, who so ably portrayed Lincoln, is returning to California to prepare for a long tour with the production.

IT is not often that a theatre celebrates its one hundredth anniversary, but that is what the Leland Theatre of Albany, N. Y., will do in May. The house was transformed for pictures several years ago while owned by the Proctor interests. It is in the business center and is regarded as one of the best moneymaking houses in the territory.

ERNEST TORRENCE is in New York to play the leading part in "The Mountebank," which Famous Players will make in the East. Mr. Torrence spoke from the stage of the Criterion on the opening night of the anniversary week of "Covered Wagon." The following day at the luncheon given to the reviewers at the Ritz-Carlton the portrayer of Bill Jackson again talked of the picture which just now is much in the limelight. Mr. Torrence is a finished speaker and always entertaining.

HELENE CHADWICK has been reading Samuel Goldwyn's declaration that there are only thirty-three extra good players appearing in western-made productions. She comes right back and suggests that in Hollywood there are only seven good directors. She also remarks that when an actor does a good piece of work the director is credited, but when a player is compelled to interpret a part contrary to his own good judgment and it turns out badly the actor bears the blame. Sic 'em, Tige!

MARY PICKFORD has received another honor—the naming for her of the grand prize winning orchid bloom of the International Flower Show at the Grand Central Palace in New York, which she formally opened. Miss Pickford is the first representative of the motion picture industry to be so honored. Among her predecessors are Mrs. Harding, Mrs. Coolidge and General Pershing. The flower has been named the Cymbidium.

United Artists Will Go Ahead Without Any Essential Change in Policy

Merely Readjustment to New Conditions, Says Miss Pickford

OUT of the maze of conflicting newspaper statements regarding the affairs of the United Artists organization and the four prominent artists who form its backbone from the production side there is emerging a general clearing of the situation.

Many things have been said, that the United Artists are going to be absorbed by some other organization and that the four chief contributors to the distributing company—Miss Pickford and Messrs. Griffith, Fairbanks and Chaplin—were acting in concert looking toward a change of alliance.

One of the lawyers closely connected with the situation on the side of one of the "four" remarked on Wednesday that "The cheapest thing in the motion picture industry as well as the most damaging and most expensive is talk—loose, unbridled, and irresponsible talk by those who don't know what they're talking about."

Another person, possessing what may be described as at least accurate knowledge of the affairs of the distributing company, declared the company would continue just as it had in the past and that there was no tangible reason why it should not.

In the first place, it was pointed out, the company had made money in 1923 and there were even far better prospects that it would do the same in 1924.

One of the parties in interest declared that while he had read a lot in the press it was not based on fact. Asked if there were any difference in the major affairs of the company today and six months ago he declared emphatically there was not.

Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists, has refused to be drawn into the discussion and has declared he would not dignify the alleged controversy by talking about the affairs of the company or its members.

Satisfied, Says Miss Pickford

Miss Pickford, when asked regarding the way she viewed the situation, said the company stood essentially just where it always has stood.

The United Artists, she said, was formed five years ago, with the aim at that time of producing and distributing twelve pictures a year, three from each of the four principals.

"Of course," she said, "none of us has made that number, with possibly a single exception in one year. But all of us are trying to make bigger pictures all the time."

"We have decided that the product we shall distribute will be restricted to the work of just the four of us. We are simply readjusting our organization to new conditions."

"We are just the same to each other as we have been. There has been much exaggerated talk regarding the company."

"The United Artists made a large profit last year, and the company is in a fine, healthy condition. We feel very satisfied with it. What is taking place is merely a change of policy to meet changing conditions."

From conversation with those in a position to know it developed that each of the four have contracts with the distributing corporation for a minimum of three pictures a year and a maximum of four a year for a total of nine productions.

Profit Last Year

Regarding the charge of high cost of distribution on account of the comparatively limited product the statement is made by a person who may be said to speak with authority that the United Artists in 1923 on a basis of 20 per cent for distribution made a profit of nearly $100,000.

It was further declared that the cost throughout the world, with every office owned outright by the distribution company, did not exceed 25 per cent. This, it was stated, was a showing which it was believed would be unmatched by that of any other distribution company now doing business.

One of the factors contributing to the discussion of the company's affairs has been the action of Douglas Fairbanks in employing Morris Gest to take charge of the exploitation of "The Thief of Bagdad," which is to open in New York next week.

Mr. Gest has made a sensational success with "The Miracle," the pageant showing at the Century Theatre in New York, and into which, according to his statement at the time, he invested his all. By common consent he will reap a fortune.

Gest to Aid Fairbanks

There is no denial of the fact that Mr. Gest is a high-priced representative, but also it may be said that he will bring to the distribution of the great production rare skill in exploitation.

One of the representatives of United Artists, in reply to a question, said contracts with exhibitors already were being signed in large numbers for "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," which he said was considered by officials of the company one of the greatest pictures ever made.

What is described as one of the difficulties which has led to the present discussion and what is believed largely to be responsible for any controversy are the handicaps encountered by the producers in financing their productions, owing to the plan of one operating independently of the other on the picturemaking side. In that respect the company is different from its competitors.

Griffith Gets Offers

It is known that Mr. Griffith is one of those who has felt that his attention has been distracted from production at inopportune times by reason of financial problems.

Perhaps it is on this account that he is reported to have given considerable thought to the increasing opportunities afforded him to make pictures abroad.

One offer was forcefully presented to him about the time that Ernst Lubitsch came to the United States. A large German concern was particularly insistent that Mr. Griffith return the international courtesy and come to Germany.

A representative of the Russian soviet has been in the United States for a long time and has brought to bear his best arguments in an effort to convince Mr. Griffith that a real opportunity awaits that producer in Russia. It is the desire of the officials to make Russian pictures, of a national atmosphere, showing the country and its people to the Russians and the world as they are and not as they have been caricatured.

Then, too, there has been a substantial offer from Italy, backed up by the highest authority in that country. Italy has ambition to be considered a motion picture country, just as in days past it has had rank in the automobile manufacturing field.

Of course, if Mr. Griffith goes abroad it is understood his releasing arrangements in the United States will continue just the same as if he were making pictures in this country—i. e., through the United Artists.

'COVERED WAGON' MAKES BROADWAY RECORD

Ends First Year with Impressive Official Ceremonies

THE COVERED WAGON" ended its first year on Broadway Monday night, March 10, with a special observance arranged by the Criterion Theatre management. Inasmuch as it was the first time any picture had ever had a year's run theatrical producers and a number of motion picture stars were among the guests.

To mark the event the big electric signs on the theatre were changed to indicate the opening of the second year's run, the interior of the theatre was decorated with flags and a special musical program which included "Covered Wagon Days" was conducted by Josiah Zuro.

The motion picture players present included Ernest Torrence, who played the role of the scout, Bill Jackson, in "The Covered Wagon" and won fame thereby. He made a short and effective speech.

Following the New York opening the picture was opened at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre at Hollywood on April 10. On April 22 a twenty-week run was opened in Chicago, followed by the opening in Boston on May 21. This run also lasted twenty weeks.

Despite the fact that the picture is confined to the epic period of American pioneering history it has been equally successful in Europe.

The London run began September 5 of last year at the Pavillion and is still continuing. On December 20 the picture was opened at the Madeleine in Paris and this is also still continuing. The Brussels engagement began February 15, and arrangements are now being made for engagements in Stockholm, Copenhagen and Christiana. Plans are under way, too, for openings in about a month in Mexico City, Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires. The Havana engagement is scheduled to begin in a few days at the Fausto Theatre.

In Australia the picture was received with enthusiasm. Last September an extended run began at Melbourne, followed by another at Sydney which lasted two months and then road companies went on tour in thirty of the principal cities and towns of Australia and New Zealand.

As a special honor for all of those critics who reviewed the production at its opening showing at the Criterion in New York a luncheon was given Tuesday, March 11, at the Ritz by Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky.

FIRST NATIONAL KEEPS COAST STUDIOS BUSY

Many Big Productions Now Under Way for Early Release

THE present activity of First National's own producing units rivals that of any company on the West Coast, according to reports received from the United Studios. With four companies at work the First National production force is probably busier than ever in its history.

Last week Colleen Moore started filming on her next First National picture "The Perfect Flapper," under the direction of John Francis Dillon, who directed Miss Moore in her memorable success, "Flaming Youth." The star's supporting cast includes Frank Mayo—the leading male role; Sidney Chaplin, Mary Carr and Phyllis Haver. The picture is an adaptation of a magazine story, "The Mouth of the Dragon," by Jessie Henderson.

The completion of "The Woman on the Jury," featuring Sylvia Breamer, this week releases Frank Mayo for the leading masculine role of the new Colleen Moore picture.

A third production now in work is "Sundown," an original screen story by Earl Hudson, expected to prove one of the biggest outdoor dramas ever filmed. The company is now on location in Mexico, near the Arizona border, in an enormous ranch. One of the unique scenes of this production will show the passage of many thousand head of cattle across the Rio Grande. The picture is under the direction of Laurence Trimble, and the cast includes Hobart Bosworth, Roy Stewart, Mary Alden, Tully Marshall, Charles Murray and Bessie Love.

A fourth picture, "For Sale," will star Corinne Griffith under the direction of George Archainbaud. Casting is now in progress. "For Sale" is a society drama, also from the pen of Earl Hudson, First National production manager. It will be Miss Griffith's third picture under the First National banner, its predecessors being "Black Oxen" and "Lilies of the Field."

NOVEL BEING WRITTEN FROM LOWELL'S 'FLOODGATES'

Following the announcement made last week by Lowell Film Productions, Inc., that its latest production "Floodgates" was to be syndicated in some fifteen hundred newspapers throughout the United States comes word that arrangements have been made for the story of "Floodgates" to be published in book form and that work on this is now under way.

The story was written by L. Case Russell and is said to be an exceptionally strong one which it is believed will have wide appeal to readers as well as motion picture fans.

Lowell productions point out that the publishing of the story in the leading newspapers of the country and also the book store tie-up that this gives the exchanges handling this picture makes excellent advertising and exploitation.

It is said to be the first time that a picture released on the independent market has had the story syndicated and novelized.

CHRISTIE PLANNING STRONGEST ATTRACTIONS FOR SUMMER

The Christie organization is already planning its feature and two-reel comedy production schedule so that its best foot forward will be during the Spring and Summer months, and there will be no hold-out of what are termed the strongest attractions until the so-called strong season of the fall commences.

It is stated by Al Christie, production head, that the first of the feature productions now being made for distribution through Hodkinson will be ready for release late in May or early in June at the latest, which means that the bulk of the booking can be for the Summer months when exhibitors need good strong entertainment just as well as at any other time of the year.

As for the two-reel production, it is also stated that the entire program of the year of the Educational releases which the Christie organization is making has been leading up to a strong wind-up with the pictures to be released in May and June, which again means general bookings of these comedies for the Summer months.

C. B. C. PRODUCTIONS WILL BE CALLED 'COLUMBIA PICTURES'

After many months of careful study and investigation the C. B. C. Sales Corporation have decided that all of their own productions would hereafter be known as Columbia Pictures.

Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn of C. B. C. were at first adverse to calling their pictures by any other name than C. B. C. which has become very well known to the industry in general within the past five or six years. But they have finally decided, nevertheless, to adopt the new name.

The importance of a good trade-name, C. B. C. feels cannot be overestimated. This was proven with four of their recent features "Yesterday's Wife," "The Marriage Market," "Discontented Husbands," and "Traffic-in-Hearts." They went under the name of Columbia Pictures, and with good exploitation they brought excellent results.

FAMOUSPLAYERS-LASKY REPORT SHOWS BIG EARNINGS

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in its Consolidated Statement (which includes the earnings of Subsidiary Companies), reports for the twelve months ended December 29, 1923, net operating profits of $4,245,783.93 after deducting all charges and reserves for Federal income and other taxes.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the preferred stock the earnings are at the annual rate of $15.07 on the common stock outstanding.

On March 10, 1924, the Board of Directors declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 a share on the preferred stock, payable May 1, 1924, to stockholders of record at the close of business April 15, 1924. The books will not close.

NEW BILLS INTRODUCED IN STATE ASSEMBLY

Sunday School Association Protects Against Censorship Repeal

ALBANY, N. Y.—Three bills of interest to the motion picture industry were introduced in the New York State Legislature last week. One introduced by Assemblyman Louis Schoffel, of New York, would make it a misdemeanor for a person, other than parent or guardian, or authorized adult, to secure or purchase a ticket, for or accompany a child under 16 years of age into any motion picture show, dance or theatre.

Two bills were introduced by Assemblyman Steingut. One amends the general city law by providing that miniature motion picture apparatus, use of which is permitted, must be of a type approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, or head of a fire prevention bureau of a municipality. The second amends the general business law relative to requirements for and approval of miniature motion picture machines.

Aside from an unofficial checking up on the attitude of Republican assemblymen in the New York State Legislature on the censorship repeal bill, nothing new developed during the past week at the state capitol. While there has been some talk of holding a hearing before the finance committees of both houses, the fact remains that no definite date has yet been named. Meanwhile, announcement has been forthcoming that the session will conclude on April 4.

Delegates to the New York State Sunday School Association, meeting in Albany last week, passed a resolution protesting against the repeal bill. Those who have checked up the Republican assemblymen declare that there are not sufficient votes to pass the bill despite the fact that Speaker Machold, of the lower house, has let it be known that every assemblyman can vote as he pleases regardless of politics.

'MARRIAGE CIRCLE' ESTABLISHES UNIQUE RECORD

The judgment of screen producers in playing up to the level of the film public, instead of down to them, was never more brilliantly vindicated than in the phenomenal results of "The Marriage Circle" in Boston last week. This Ernst Lubitsch Production, praised for its deft sophistication and delightful comedy, played simultaneously in the Hub City at three first run theatres: the Fenway, the Modern and the Beacon, record attendance being reported in each.

The fact that conservative New England received the production as it did is compelling logic from which may be deduced the certainty that the picture will sweep the country like wildfire. Warner Brothers may well adorn their metaphorical hat with another feature as a result of this notable achievement.

BELMORE IN 'SEA HAWK'

Lionel Belmore, well known screen character actor, has been engaged by Frank Lloyd to play the role of Justice Baine in his First National picture "The Sea Hawk." Belmore was recently seen in support of Norma and Constance Talmadge.

The addition of Belmore completes the big cast of "The Sea Hawk." Others already announced are Milton Sills, Enid Bennett, Wallace Beery, Lloyd Hughes, Wallace McDonald, Albert Prisco, George O'Brien, William Collier, Jr., Hector Sarno, Otis Harlan, Marc McDermott, Meda Rezina, George F. Romain, Fred De Silva, Frank Currier and Bobbie Bolder.

Communities Will Resent Chain Control, Says Milliken

Declares Country Cannot Be Cornered

CARL MILLIKEN, former governor of Maine and since its organization president of Pine Tree Pictures, was the star speaker at the luncheon of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors March 6. The Governor took for his subject "The Independent Market as Seen by a Tenderfoot Producer."

Mr. Milliken said one situation confronting the industry was that of chain control, which unless handled by men of great restraint would result in revolt on the part of the communities affected. Another condition for which there should be found a remedy is the writing off of some independent territories for which the others in the end have to pay.

The other speakers were Vincent Gilroy, chairman of the speakers committee of the Arbitration Society of America, who discussed "The Court of Arbitration, or a New Tribunal of Justice," and George Blaisdell, editor of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, whose topic was "Several Subjects, One of Them Short."

"The next speaker brings a viewpoint which for us is highly valuable," said President Chadwick in introducing Mr. Milliken, "that of the public man in the motion picture business."

The governor interspersed his talk with stories the application of which was clear, and he kept his auditors in most pleasant humor.

As an example, he referred to the dilemma of the independent producer when he is trying to learn how much money he shall invest in a production or after investing it how he can get any considerable proportion of it back. He said the answer to these questions was something like that to the question "How much whisky can a Scotchman drink?" The answer, he said, was "Not any given amount—all he can get hold of at the time."

"If we are to get along and let a little money percolate back to the producer," said Mr. Milliken, "and encourage him to keep in business then the independent market has got to hit on all cylinders. Territory is not played 100 per cent in the independent market."

"That is a problem in which all independent producers and distributors and I think all exhibitors, too, are interested—those of the latter who use independent pictures, at least. Because in the long run pictures cannot be produced unless money is made."

"If the poorer territories are written off the good ones have got to make it up. That is a problem to which I think the independent producers should address themselves and I believe they will."

"Another situation and one affecting the whole industry is that of the chain theatre, about which I have no words of wisdom or any particular remedy to suggest except this general one."

"Jim Hill said the most foolish man in America is the one who sells America short. One other man who is also foolish, more foolish than that if anything, is the man who tries to corner the United States and keep it cornered."

"There is an instinctive feeling in human nature that resents the thought something is being doled out in the proportion some one else determines."

"I have a notion that unless that situation is handled with great restraint by men who own the theatres that we shall find eventually and perhaps very soon a condition of revolt on the part of the communities affected. The fact is that things have moved so fast and people have been so busy trying to keep up with this moving picture industry of ours that they have not organized."

"Communities are not always going to stand for having their neighborhood sewed up by anyone unless the situation is handled for the good of the entire community." (Applause.)

Mr. Blaisdell referred to the apparent tendency on the part of producers in conformity with requests by exhibitors to get away from the extremely long features, and as an evidence of that quoted figures revealed by an examination of the footages of productions released during December and January last.

In December the average length of sixty features was 6,350 feet, while in January the average for sixty-nine productions was 6,130.

These figures indicated, said the speaker, there was a widening market for short subjects of quality, and that the situation warranted careful examination on the part of independent producers.

KANSAS SENATOR DECLARES HE FAVORS TAX CUT

Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas, who has received several heated letters from Kansas exhibitors following his proposed amendment to the Mellon plan, which would retain admission taxation to meet the demands for a soldiers' bonus, has shifted the blame to newspapers, alleging that he was misquoted.

A letter from Senator Curtis to Conrad Gabriel, Garden City, Kansas exhibitor:

"I have your letter of recent date and judge from what you write that the paper you read did not give my statement as I gave it out. My suggestions were only intended for consideration and I heartily agree with you that the smaller theatres should not be taxed and, so far as I am concerned, I would be willing to remove the tax on admissions below fifty cents. But my idea was to have them increase the tax on large admissions to prize fights, sporting events, clubs and other places of amusement where high prices are charged."

"I thank you for writing me and assure you that I always want to hear from my friends at home, and I have no desire to do an injustice to any industry."

KANSAS CITY EXHIBITORS IN LEGAL BATTLE

Fight Case Against Music Companies to Settle Old Dispute

THE case of four music companies against six Kansas City Exhibitors "went to bat" in the federal court in Kansas City, March 3 and a definite ruling now appears inevitable, following months of delay. The case was taken under advisement by Judge Arba S. Van Valkenburgh.

Witnesses for both plaintiffs and defendants were present, the exhibitors being represented by Samul A. Handy and, after a brief hearing and examination of witnesses, counsel for the defendants was given ten days by Judge Van Valkenburgh in which to file a brief, following which the plaintiffs will be given twenty days in which to file an answer.

The exhibitors are H. H. Barrett, Colonial theatre; A. M. Eisner, president of the Kansas City Division of the M. P. T. O. A. and owner of the Broadmoure theatre; J. T. Wilson, Queens theatre; J. Stockdale and E. F. Stockdale, Empire theatre; A. H. Boussad, World-in-Motion; Gillham Amusement Company, Gillham theatre. The music companies are Irving Berlin, the Broadway Music Company, Lee Feist and Stark & Cowan.

"A part of the complaint on the part of the music companies alleges certain music was played without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff," Mr. Eisner said. "It is the contention of exhibitors in the case that circular letters were sent to theatre owners by the music companies, urging them to play the music; that the music could not have been played without knowledge and consent of the music companies under such circumstances."

The exhibitors, through Mr. Hardy, will base their defense upon the contention that the suits have not been brought by the real parties at interest, that the interests of the individual music companies have been assigned to the Society of Authors, Publishers and Composers of America, which, according to Mr. Hardy, is contrary to federal statutes.

STRONG UNIVERSAL PICTURES FOR MARCH RELEASE

Universal announces the release of one big Jewel production and four five reel features during the month of March. This schedule is the equal of any month's output made available to exhibitors by Universal in many months.

The Jewel production for March is "Fools Highway," the new Mary Philbin picture. The features, in the order of their release, are "The Phantom Horseman," a Jack Hoxie picture; "Stolen Secrets," with Herbert Rawlinson; "The Night Message," a special written and directed by Perley Poore Sheehan, and "The Galloping Ace" another Hoxie.

Prints of all these pictures are now in the various Universal exchanges and can be previewed by Universal's exhibitor patrons.

"Fools Highway" had its premiere showing in the Atlantic Garden Theatre, 50 Bowery, New York City. This place was chosen for a presentation because the picture is a Bowery story of 30 years ago, having been adapted from Owen Kildare's world famed novel "My Mamie Rose."

CLOAKLEY JOINS UNIVERSAL

Oral D. Cloakley, manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Canada, has resigned to accept the position of director of exploitation for Universal's West Coast theatres. He was in New York last Tuesday completing arrangements. He will make his headquarters in Los Angeles.

THESE scene excerpts from Jane Murfin's "Flapper Wives," are fairly revealing as to the variety of emotional and dramatic interest of the Selznick feature. It is a happy blend of a powerful story, a rollicking idea, and the masterful strokes of laughs and tears. The cast is excellent, leading off with such sterling performers as, Rockcliffe Fellowes, May Allison, William V. Mong

Ohio M. P. T. O. A. Elects Officers At Annual Convention Many State Industry Officials Present

THE annual convention of the Ohio Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association was held in Columbus, March 6 and 7, and was attended not only by members of the association but by a number of state and industry officials.

The outstanding development of the convention was the announcement of Michael J. O'Toole, chairman of the welfare committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, that Sydney S. Cohen, president of the association for the past five years, would not be a candidate for re-election.

Immediately upon the announcement by Mr. O'Toole, a motion was unanimously carried praising Mr. Cohen's administration.

This is the third convention of the Ohioans and it was devoted to business concerned with the exhibitor at large. The convention was opened by an address of welcome on behalf of Mayor Thurber and was responded to by Charles L. Thurber.

Another prominent speaker was Governor Victor Donahey, who chose as his subject the importance of taxation. He expressed the belief that the problem would find a solution dent of the organization. He has been head of the organization since its inception and been instrumental in building the organization to one of great strength.

He will retire from office during the annual convention to be held in Boston in May.

Following are the resolutions:

By the Members of the Board of Directors and Officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in meeting assembled at New York City, January 17, 1924, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The services given by Sydney S. Cohen, as President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Chairman of the Board of Directors of the organization have been of a kind which merits the unqualified approval of all Theatre Owners because of the real constructive work he performed on behalf of this division of our industry, and

WHEREAS, Mr. Cohen has announced to the members of the Board of Directors his definite determination to retire from the presidency at the 1924 convention and thereby create a vacancy difficult to fill in a manner which will ensure the continuance of this great National work for the cause of the exhibitor.

Resolved, by the members of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, that we sincerely desire to record our appreciation of the great work performed by President Cohen on behalf of our organization and its members, and regret that business necessities require his relinquishing the executive office he fills with such credit and dignity. We hereby heartily approve of the official acts of Mr. Cohen, realizing that at all times he had the interests of the exhibitors at heart and moved in a way which won for our organization and our business generally the very highest measure of official and public appreciation and support in nation, state and community.

Resolved, that our heartfelt thanks are hereby extended to Mr. Cohen for this fidelity to duty and painstaking processes employed by him in caring for exhibitors' welfare. We pledge to him our undivided and unwavering support for the remainder of his term and entertain the hope that in the future we will have the full benefit of his aid and counsel in all matters affecting the welfare of our organization and the motion picture industry generally.

Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be presented to Mr. Cohen and spread on the minutes of the Board of Directors meeting.

A. WARNER LEAVES FOR COAST FOR CONFERENCE

A Warner has left for Los Angeles for an important conference with H. M. and J. L. Warner pertaining to the program of twenty productions to be presented by their organization during the coming season, all of which will be made at the Warner Brothers' mammoth studios which are among the greatest in Hollywood.

Since Mr. Albert Warner's recent return from Europe he has been busy formulating plans for the distribution of next season's output and also outlining the sales policy of the Warner organization.

PLANS COMPLETED FOR T. N. T. BANQUET

Publicity Men Set for Annual Frolic
at Hotel Astor, March 29

FOLLOWING the announcement that for the first time in banquet history there would be no speechmaking at The Naked Truth Dinner, annual gathering of the Associated Motion Pictures Advertisers, the imposing lineup of those who will tell Bedtime Stories in place of lengthy dissertation at the Hotel Astor on the night of March 29 is announced today by A. M. Botsford, chairman of the entertainment committee.

These notable Bedtime Story tellers will include: Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Will Hays, David Wark Griffith, Samuel Rothafel, Rupert Hughes and A. M. Botsford.

Far and wide will these Bedtime Stories by Mary, Doug, Will and Dave be heard, for Station WEAF is to broadcast them along with the rest of the entertainment by wireless—to the W. A. M. P. A. The picture is being made at Principal Pictures Studios and is the second of the series that Baby Peggy is signed for.

FUTURE ARLISS PICTURE FOR SELZNICK

*The First Under the New Agreement
Will Be '$20 a Week'*

BY the terms of an agreement just concluded, Distinctive Pictures Corporation will release future George Arliss pictures through the Selznick Distributing Corporation. The first of these will be a comedy drama, "$20 a Week," which will be ready about the first of April.

The picture is based on the Edgar Franklin novel "The Adopted Father." Supporting Mr. Arliss in this production are Edith Roberts, Taylor Holmes and Ronald Colman. Harmon Weight, who directed the previous Arliss pictures with the exception of "The Green Goddess" is responsible for this production.

The agreement was signed by Henry M. Hobart for Distinctive and W. C. J. Doolittle for Selznick. Negotiations have been under way between Mr. Doolittle and Mr. Hobart for the last six weeks.

The last Arliss picture was "The Green Goddess," which was placed first on the list of all great features of 1923 by F. W. M. Hall, critic of the New York Times, and was fifth in the symposium of national opinions gathered by Film Daily on the best pictures of the year.

The contract will not change in any way the existing relations between Distinctive and the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Corporation, it is said, by which the latter distributes certain other feature productions of Distinctive.

VIOLET MERSEREAU RETURNS TO SCREEN IN BURR PICTURE

Violet Mersereau, who has been vacationing from screen work for some time returned to the films recently when C. C. Burr engaged her for a leading role in "Lend Me Your Husband" now being produced by Burr Pictures, Inc., at the studios in Glendale, Long Island, under the direction of William Christy Cabanne.

Miss Mersereau makes her second appearance under the C. C. Burr management, having played opposite Johnny Hines in his popular melocomedy "Luck." Her most recent screen appearances have been in "The Shepherd King" and "Nero," both for the Fox Films. These productions were made in Italy and Miss Mersereau was the only American player appearing in the casts.

Beginning her career as a child player in stock companies, Miss Mersereau later toured with Margaret Anglin, playing Flora in the original company of "The Clansman." She attained stage stardom in the road company of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

'SIEGFRIED' GERMAN PICTURE HAS PREVIEW IN BERLIN

The first screening of the Decla super production of the Ufa, "Siegfried," the first of the two pictures in the Nibelungen production by Fritz Lang, was attended by representatives of the trade press not only of Germany but of Great Britain, France, Italy, Holland, Austria, Czechoslovakia and Roumania as well. The opening performance took place at the Ufa Palast, Berlin, the largest kino in the German Capital, last week.

The opening performance was a complete success. There was hardly an American or British correspondent stationed at Berlin who did not attend and for the first time in the history of the German film industry a film review was sent from Berlin to foreign countries by cable.

ENTIRE WARNER 1923 OUTPUT IN SELECTED LIST

All of the Warner Brothers releases for 1923 are represented in the ninth annual catalogue of selected pictures made by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures and compiled by the National Committee for Better Films. The inclusion of their entire last year's output is a significant sign proving that Warner Brothers Classics of the Screen are wholesome, clean and fit for both general and special family audiences, including children.

The Warner quota includes: "Brass," "The Country Kid," "George Washington, Jr.," "The Little Church Around the Corner," "Lucretia Lombard," "Main Street," "The Marriage Circle," "The Printers' Devil," "Tiger Rose," and "Where the North Begins."

BRAY STUDIOS MAY MAKE 'OUTLINE OF HISTORY'

John R. Bray Leaves for England to Confer With H. G. Wells

JOHN R. BRAY, president of Bray Studios, Inc., pioneer producer of educational motion pictures and the originator and inventor of the motion picture cartoon, sailed Saturday, March 8 on the S. S. Berengaria.

While in England Mr. Bray will confer with H. G. Wells, the author, regarding the picturization of the "Outline of History," the screen rights of which Mr. Bray controls. Arrangements to begin actual production on this stupendous screen epic, it is expected, will be completed before Mr. Bray's return.

Mr. Bray goes abroad at the invitation of British Army Officials to arrange contracts with the British Government for a series of technical motion pictures to be designed for instructional and training purposes.

He takes with him several prints of a film prepared under his supervision and direction and already contracted for by the British War Office showing the mechanism, movement and operation of the automobile down to the smallest detail and constituting a complete course of instruction. The series will be used in instructing all ranks of the British Army in the operation and mechanism of the automobile.

Mr. Bray during his stay on the other side will also arrange for the introduction in the United Kingdom of his latest invention the Brayco, a novel and compact projecting machine, which it is predicted will revolutionize visual education and home entertainment, by reason of its absolute safety and adaptability to all conditions. The machine which is smaller than the ordinary desk telephone is designed to project motion picture film instead of the old fashioned slides.

CHARLES CHAPLIN CHOOSES NEW LEADING WOMAN

After deliberation that lasted for months and continued while the picture already was in production, Charles Chaplin has chosen a leading woman for his new comedy. In a wire to United Artists Corporation, the comedian announces Lita Grey as the girl who is to play opposite him in the Alaskan "gold rush" story, for which he has already made preliminary scenes.

Lita Grey is a discovery of Chaplin dating from a minor role which she played in his "The Kid." While the decision to feature Miss Grey next to the star himself in the first comedy to be produced by Chaplin in two years came suddenly, it was only after an exhaustive competition during the last two months among a dozen selected candidates. Screen tests and acting rehearsals were given all of the young women, all of the aspirants being eliminated in the end by the superior attractions of Miss Grey.

PRINCIPAL PICTURES HAS STRONG LIST READY

Five Big States Rights Productions for Immediate Release

FIVE big States Rights productions, with stars whose names have great drawing power, are announced for immediate release, the distribution being through Principal Pictures Corporation. They are:

"Daring Youth," produced and presented by B. F. Zeidman. In the cast are Bebe Daniels and Norman Kerry, Lee Moran, Lillian Langdon, and Arthur Hoyt.

"The Good Bad Boy," another B. F. Zeidman production. This play is said to be as powerful as "Lightnin'" or "The Old Soak." Forrest Robinson plays a character similar to the ones seen in those big speaking stage successes. The principals in the cast are Joe Butterworth and Mary Jane Irving. Brownie, the famous "dog star," also has a big part. This production was directed by Edward F. Cline, who won laurels with Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days."

"Listen Lester," presented by Sacramento Pictures Corporation. A screen adaptation of John Cort's famous stage success of the same name which ran on Broadway for more than a year. In the cast are Louise Fazenda, Eva Novak, Harry Myers, George O'Hara, Alec Francis, Lee Moran and Dot Farley.

"The Masked Dancer," produced by Eastern Productions, Inc., with Helene Chadwick and Lowell Sherman, supported by Leslie Austin, Joseph King, Arthur Housman, Charles Craig, Mme. Andree, Dorothy Kingdon, Alyce Mills and Helen Ward. Adapted from "The Woman With the Mask," by Rodolph Lothar.

"Beggars on Horseback," a B. F. Zeidman production, starring Monte Blue and Marie Prevost. Distinguished cast, including Clara Bow, of "A Woman of Paris" fame. Directed by William Beaudine.

All of these productions are being distributed through Principal Pictures Corporation and are ready for immediate release. Preliminary reports from Branch Exchanges throughout the country are that bookings on "Daring Youth," the first production of the series are unusually heavy, and that there is a big demand for the other four.

FILM BOOKING OFFICE WILL DISTRIBUTE TRUART PICTURES

The Truart Film Corporation and the Film Booking Offices have consummated a deal whereby the latter firm have acquired for distribution the bulk of the Truart production in nearly all parts of the country. The contract does not take in the state of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and New Haven territories.

The first productions to be distributed under the new deal are "Broadway Gold," an Edward Dillion feature starring Elaine Hammerstein, including in the cast Elliot Dexter and Kathlyn Williams; "The Empty Cradle," adapted from Leota Morgan's novel "Cheating Wives," and directed by Burton King, with Mary Alden and Harry T. Morey in the leading roles; "The Unknown Purple," and a Carlos production with a distinguished cast including Henry Wathall, Alice Lake, Stuart Holmes, Helen Ferguson and others; "Women Men Marry," with E. K. Lincoln, Florence Dixon, Hedda Hopper, Julia Swayne Gordon and other players of merit; "Let's Go!," a Richard Talmadge production directed by W. K. Howard with Eileen Percy, Tully Marshall and George Nichols in the cast; "On Time!," another Richard Talmadge picture, and Elaine Hammerstein's "Drums of Jeopardy," with Wallace Beery and Jack Mulhall in the cast. * * *

DARMOUR IS TO ASSIST SELZNICK CHIEF

Well Known Picture Man Chosen for Constructive Ability

W. C. J. DOOLITTLE, President of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, announces the appointment of L. J. Darmour as assistant to the president. In accordance with the policy of the company, the appointment was made from within the organization, as Mr. Darmour has been connected with the Selznick company for a number of years.

In his new position, Mr. Darmour will work with all departments of the organization, at the same time giving special attention to the acquisition of new product.

Mr. Darmour has had an association of more than ten years with the motion-picture industry, and is thoroughly familiar with every phase of the production of pictures. For seven years before he joined Selznick, he was with the Gaumont Company. Among other posts he held in the Selznick organization were those of associate editor, then editor, of the Selznick News reel.

Following the war, Mr. Darmour was honored by being placed in charge of all the motion-picture work of the Peace Conference in Paris, for the United States signal Corps, and supervised the filming of the historic happenings there.

PLAN HISTORICAL SERIES OF TWO REELERS

Tefft Johnson Will Adapt 'Liberty Boys of '76'

THE screen rights to "The Liberty Boys of '76," one of the most popular group of short stories has just been contracted for by Tefft Johnson from Harry E. Wolff, the publisher.

It is conservatively estimated that no less than two million readers are familiar with this series of Revolutionary War stories, and today the circulation of the weekly runs high in the hundred thousands.

There was considerable competition for the screen rights. The series is to be directed by Mr. Johnson. Historical authenticity will be stressed in every instance. The stories themselves are based on fact are filled with the exciting adventures of those men who were responsible for the molding of the United States.

George Washington, Alexander Hamilton, Nathan Hale, Ethan Allen and a score of other heroic figures of early Colonial days form some of the prominent characters in the series.

Each story is to be treated in two reels. Preparations are now in progress for the production, work on which is expected to be begun during the current month.

It is likely most of the interiors of the productions will be made in New Jersey, with the exception of an occasional journey to a historical locale.

No expense will be spared in placing the parts of the heroic figures of the narratives in the hands of capable interpreters.

Tefft Johnson's admirable work on "Sonny Boy" series of films will long be remembered as a noteworthy achievement.

The world distributing rights for the films have been secured by the Kerman Film, Inc., of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

JACK ARTHUR TO MANAGE COSMOPOLITAN THEATRE

W. R. Hearst Brings Him from Canada to Direct Broadway Theatre

MOVING PICTURE men of Canada have been stirred by the announcement at Toronto, Ontario, of the appointment of Jack Arthur, director of music and productions of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto, to the general-management of the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York, owned by William Randolph Hearst, at a very large salary. Mr. Arthur will assume the position May 1.

As general director of music for Famous Players in Canada Mr. Arthur has had supervision of music and specialty presentations in all of the sixty theatres of the corporation in the Dominion and he has had outstanding success in the producing of novelties, dances, prologues and other features of moving picture performances at the large theatres on the circuit. Since he became musical director of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, when that house was opened as a moving picture palace in August, 1916.

Mr. Arthur, who was born in Scotland about thirty-five years ago, went to Canada when he was thirteen and was in the show business at sixteen after he had won a musical scholarship at the Toronto College of Music. He returned to Toronto from Broadway about ten years ago, after having been musical director with George Primrose Minstrels for some time. During the time that he has been presenting many and varied diversifications in Famous Players house, his happy slogan has been, "Something just a little different," and that has been the key-note of his success.

His Toronto headquarters since the fall of 1922 have been at the Hippodrome, the manager of which is Clarence Robson. Here he has presented many production details and has directed the orchestra along with Lloyd Collins, with Ernest Hunt presiding at the immense Hope organ, reputed to be the largest organ in Canada.

Mr. Arthur is the second official to leave the Famous Players Canadian Corporation within recent months, the preceding departees having been Charles Branham, who resigned from the post of director of theatres for the corporation in order to become general manager of the Gordon theatre chain, with headquarters at Boston. Mr. Arthur is known by practically every moving picture man in the whole of Canada, and he is never known to have made an enemy.

COHEN NO LONGER HEAD OF T. O. D. C.

True Resumes Office of President of New Corporation

THROUGH the incorporation of Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation in New York with papers filed at Albany on March 7, it became known that both Sydney S. Cohen and Harry Davis are not connected with the organization and that William A. True is president.

The organization of a Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation under the laws of New York State, according to the officers, became necessary for the protection of exhibitor interest and to divorce the idea of co-operative picture distribution from the handicaps and strangulation of exhibitor organization politics.

Previous to the annual meeting of February 13, a lawsuit was filed in the city court of New York City by Attorney Charles E. Thorne, acting on behalf of Harry Davis, vice-president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and one of the organizers of the theatre owners distributing corporation.

The action of the vice-president of M. P. T. O. A. immediately brought forth a statement by President Sydney S. Cohen, in which he claimed that it was the result of the desire of Davis to dictate to his fellow directors.

It seems that throughout all of this controversy William A. True held to his opinion that exhibitor politics had no place in the theatre owner distribution idea and that if pictures "by exhibitors and for exhibitors" were to be a success, all tie-ups or affiliations with organization politics must be eliminated.

Within a few days of the issuing of the Cohen statement in the Davis-Cohen controversy the incorporation papers were filed at Albany which show Sydney S. Cohen out of the new organization and William A. True once more presiding over the destiny of exhibitor-distribution along the lines of his original co-operative ideas.

The officers of the newly formed organization state that, in their opinion, politics threatened to interfere seriously with the very definite aims of exhibitors who are unselfishly interested in the acquiring and distributing of pictures for the real benefit of all theatre owners, and who hope to see an efficient organization developed along co-operative lines.

Mr. True says: "The new organization starts with a clean slate, having no liabilities or entanglements. Its sole purpose is to occupy a neutral position between picture production, distribution and exhibition for the benefit of all concerned and the aggrandisement of the industry in general."

BEAUTIFUL THEATRE PLANNED FOR MOUNTAIN, MO.

A new ground floor picture show and theatre will be one of the additions to the rapidly growing city of Mountain, Mo., in the Ozarks. A considerable amount of money will be spent in remodeling the Collier-Robertson building for a place of amusement, to be opened some time in April.

It will be modern, sanitary and fire-proof in every respect, with a lobby front, elevated seats, opera chairs, and motor-driven machines, and will be beautifully decorated and lighted.

Dr. F. M. Riley, of Mansfield, Mo., who has owned and conducted the Nugget Theatre at that place for a number of years, will be the owner and manager of the new Mountain Grove house, which is to be named by the public. At the new house all new pictures will be shown. There will be a stage equipped for vaudeville and theatrical troupes.

Neighborhood House Sets Pace

The Apollo Theatre, Kansas City, in adopting a first run policy for a suburban house this week, has set a precedent which may bring about a great change in the motion picture industry in Kansas City, according to the opinions of several leading exhibitors. The theatre, owned by the Ralph Amusement Company, played to a large attendance for a week with a first run of "The Judgment of the Storm," and this was instrumental in leading the management to become convinced a first run policy would be successful.

What of the Radio?

THE announcement of the A. H. Blank Theatrical Enterprises that it will close two theatres in one city brings to the fore the question which many persons in the motion picture business have been asking recently:

What of the radio?

Without in any measure qualifying for the alarmist group we believe nothing will be lost by indulging in a discussion of the situation.

There has been a tendency to ignore in a public way the question which in many minds has been gradually increasing in importance. That is the part of sanity and is the path indicated by sound judgment.

But the issue has been raised in letters which have reached us this week. They contain matters of news as well as of views and are legitimate objects of attention.

Mr. Lust in Washington, long time film man and exhibitor, admits that he is one of those who have fallen for the lure of "Roxxy" on a Sunday evening and that usually he is joined by several friends.

He adds that it is estimated in Washington City there are 75,000 receiving sets and that conceding an average of three persons who listen in to an instrument 225,000 persons are staying away from the pictures on a Sunday night.

Mr. Yeaton, an exhibitor of Exeter, N. H., says he knows he has lost many patrons through the seductive influence of the radio.

The Washington exchangeman says many owners of community houses have told him their attendance has been decreased by reason of the growth of the radio influence. He says there must be a solution of the problem and asks who will be the genius to discover it.

Also he expresses the view that we are making a mistake by encouraging the radio and that exhibitors are making a mistake by allowing their soloists and musicians to broadcast talent that should be paid for at the box office.

In Peekskill, N. Y., on the recent occasion of the broadcasting of an address by the President a local theatre owner played to a practically empty house.

Mr. Yeaton boldly announces his intention of going after the situation by combining the two amusements. He is going to devote his time and attention to the end of becoming an authority on radio and of encouraging his patrons present and prospective to come to him for advice on the technicalities of the new amusement.

His experiment will be followed with close attention by his fellow-exhibitors, especially those in smaller communities.

A recent report estimated that in Des Moines there were about 1,000 receiving sets, which hardly would account for the closing of two houses in that city. One film man suggested that the town was overseated.

Other previous summaries have indicated that attendance at theatres was not being hit by radio. One of the best evidences was the increase in tax admissions, which after all is a most important factor.

Nevertheless the exhibitor should be alert to meet the issue if it is presented to him and quick to tell his fellows how he meets it.

One Year, One House

THE completion of one year's showing of a motion picture in one house is an event in the motion picture world. It has been a long time coming, but the fact is so emphatic in its general aspects that it is of all the more significance.

In the first place, according to present plans, "The Covered Wagon" not only will complete a full twelvemonth in the Criterion but will extend its stay for several months.

Secondly, during all of the run the house has played approximately to capacity, so nearly so that such a claim is justified.

It is worth noting that the production is far from being one of the most expensive pictures ever made. Undoubtedly there is many a subject the cost of which has substantially exceeded that of this Paramount picture. We are indulging in cold-blooded comparison.

This is not to suggest that "The Covered Wagon" did not cost a lot of money. The picture itself proves that it did. But the money that was spent was expended on the screen—in panoramic impressiveness.

What is suggested is that in its power and appeal and magnetism the production possesses attributes that money cannot buy. If it could there would be unlimited sums available to provide its duplicate.

The picture is great not so much because of its heroic theme but rather because of its highly intelligent direction and remarkably keen interpretation.

In other words, it was a strong story, but it was not what is known as "actor-proof." It had to be played—and most gloriously it was.

"The Covered Wagon" will live as long as there shall be Americans or men and women in whose blood there remains a trace of the pioneer breed.

LEADERS ALL

Jesse L. Lasky, Showman-Producer

THIS week "The Covered Wagon" will complete one year in the Criterion Theatre in New York. It will be a record run for a motion picture. That this long time dream of the picturemaker is now an accomplished fact is due primarily to the following out of an ideal of one man, a man who worked on a definite principle.

When Jesse L. Lasky entered the picture business he laid down for himself the rule that no director should undertake the making of a picture unless the latter could "see" it.

"The Covered Wagon" had been practically assigned to one of the successful directors of Famous Players and a young woman had been notified she would play the feminine lead.

It was at this stage of the proceedings that James Cruze saw the story. His enthusiasm was marked. It was communicated to Mr. Lasky.

The result was that Mr. Cruze was named to direct the picture. Mr. Lasky sent for the young woman who had been chosen originally for the feminine lead and talked her out of the idea.

Under the original plan the picture might have worked out the way that eventually it did, but the chances are against that remarkable result.

As we see the picture today it is easy to believe nothing but intense enthusiasm could have achieved the end.

Speaking still of "The Covered Wagon" there is behind that masterpiece of dramatic simplicity a bit of company history not generally known.

MR. LASKY is a Californian. Not only was he born in the Golden State, but so was his father. In other words, he is a native son of the second generation. His grandfather was a forty-niner who traveled the rough trail of the goldseekers as outlined by the heroes and heroines of Hough's imagination.

Perhaps here is another factor of the more or less sub-conscious sort entering into the making of the great production: While it is true this story is to be about Mr. Lasky it may be here wedged in that Mr. Cruze was born in Salt Lake—and also the descendant of pioneers.

LEADERS ALL—JESSE L. LASKY

BECAUSE before entering upon the production of motion pictures he had been thoroughly grounded in the science of showmanship, of out-guessing the other fellow in what the great public will like; because steadily he has striven to reach the best type of citizen and with marked success; because of his adherence to the principle that maximum results are attained only by intrusting the making of a production to a director who is convinced of its solid merit as dramatic entertainment

Mr. Lasky was born in San Francisco September 13, 1880. His mother was Sarah Platt, a native of Hamilton, N. Y., whose mother was born in New York City.

Shortly after the graduation of young Lasky from the high school in San Jose, Cal., his father died. Being an accomplished cornet player the lad, then eighteen years old, went to San Francisco and joined the musicians' union, and for two years played first in the orchestra of the Alcazar Theatre and then in that of the Columbia.

EARLY in 1900 came the gold rush to Alaska. The spirit of the pioneer came to the top, and the young man sailed north with the first hundred men to land at Cape Nome. The ship got away so unseasonably early it was necessary to break ice in Behring Sea, but all other craft were outdistanced.

While in Alaska the adventurer devoted his whole attention to mining, but six months later he was "Back Home and Broke."

He renewed his membership in the musician's union. There being no positions open in the city he accepted an opportunity to go to Honolulu and join an orchestra there.

A few weeks after he landed in the islands the theatre closed and the salaries went the same course. The young man was "up against it" and two thousand miles from home.

Offered a temporary position by Berger, the world famous leader of the equally famous Hawaiian Band, Mr. Lasky accepted it. Aside from the leader he was the only non-native member of the organization.

While playing in the park and in other public places Mr. Lasky frequently overheard between numbers heated arguments between tourists to some such effect as "I tell you he is," "No, he is not," and similar controversial expressions.

The musician remained with the Hawaiians until his bank roll was sufficiently replenished to return to San Francisco. Following a short experience as a reporter on a San Francisco newspaper he secured an engagement in vaudeville in a musical act.

The show was a hit locally, so pronounced that an engagement was offered it in Boston. Accordingly the long jump was made and the act went on at the Music Hall.

IN 1904 Mr. Lasky joined Herrmann the Great and toured the country. After two seasons as a member of the company the magician had controversies with his manager, and the former musician became in 1906 the executive head of the show.

At the end of that season Mr. Lasky opened offices in the Broadway Theatre Building. From this point he sent out vaudeville acts while still retaining the management of the Herrmann act.

As a vaudeville manager Mr. Lasky had an instantaneous success. Some of the more popular of the half hundred acts which went out under his name were "The Red Heads," "The Trained Nurses," "The Love Waltz," "The

EPIC FILM WILL RELEASE HEPWORTH PRODUCT

Obtains Rights for Entire Output for Year for Illinois

EPIC FILM ATTRACTIONS, Chicago, and Hepworth Productions Inc., have just closed contracts whereby Epic will hold the rights for the entire Hepworth product to be released this year for Northern Illinois and the State of Indiana.

R. T. Cranfield, president of Hepworth, in commenting on the new arrangements said: "We believe that the seven Hepworth features to be released before August, 1924, will secure a solid foothold in the territory that Epic Film Attractions serves. Mr. Grossman of Epic is well known and very popular with the exhibitors, having attained this exhibitor good-will successively by his associations in the past while connected with Famous Players, Associated Producers, and very recently, with Preferred Pictures."

Mr. Grossman on his behalf said: "It is very gratifying to tie-up with an organization like Hepworth and handle a quality of photoplays such as they are offering on an equitable franchise plan. I am preparing to launch a campaign to thoroughly place Hepworth Pictures solid in my territory, and intend to circulate the first release, 'Lily of the Alley,' not later than April 10."

The seven productions mentioned are: "Lily of the Alley"; "Mrs. Erricker's Reputation"; "The Pipes of Pan"; "John Forrest Finds Himself"; "The Amazing Quest"; "Mist in the Valley"; and "Justice Raffles."

'HUNCHBACK' GETS GOOD SEND OFF IN PITTSFIELD

A week in advance of the appearance of the "Hunchback" at the Colonial Theatre in Pittsfield, Manager Powell with the aid of Richard Weil, exploiter for Universal, started a far reaching exploitation campaign that brought the townsfolk out in all kinds of weather to see the film.

All the publicity which the picture had received through its showings in the key cities at the first run houses, and the special campaign which was launched were responsible for the very marked interest in the film. Since the first performance at this theatre, the manager has been forced to turn away hundreds every night, and he predicts that before the conclusion of the run all records will have been broken.

METRO FILMS SCORING AT BOX OFFICES

New and Old Releases Get Cordial Receptions Everywhere

IT is but a few weeks since Metro assumed the distribution of "The White Sister," the Henry King production starring Lillian Gish, yet the number of bookings already secured includes cities from New York to California, and from Michigan to Texas. Exhibitors prompted by their patrons, are manifesting a desire to get the picture as soon as possible.

A great deal of the phenomenal booking interest is attributed to the successful six months run of the picture on Broadway. During its showing during this time it was the subject of much flattering comment which speedily reached the public ear and has made people anxious to see the film.

Another Metro release which is calculated to cause favorable comment is the new Laurette Taylor picture, "Happiness" which is playing this week at the New York Rialto. For many months Miss Taylor played the same role when the story was a popular Broadway stage production. It was written for her by her husband J. Hartley Manners, who is also responsible for the screen version.

The very latest Fred Niblo production which is also a Metro release is "Thy Name Is Woman," which had its Eastern premiere at the Lyric Theatre in New York, and its Mid-Western opening at the Capitol Theatre in Detroit.

The picture called forth the favorable criticism of both the reviewers of the New York and the Detroit papers, and according to them is worthy the attention of large audiences which it should have no difficulty in securing.

The film also had a first showing in Pittsburgh at Loew's Aldine Theatre, where it broke all house records and set up a new high mark for the entire city. Selling at a top of fifty cents, the film grossed $18,436 which is the largest amount ever taken at this top in Pittsburgh.

played "The Ninety and Nine," an all-star Vitagraph feature. Mr. Murray gave a showing to the ministers of his town prior to the play date and on the Sunday before playing the picture announcements of it were issued from the pulpits of the churches. This co-operation brought to the theatre many new faces, people who ordinarily do not attend picture theatres.

'NAME THE MAN' GOES BIG AT MOSS' BROADWAY

Surprised to Find That Majority of Patrons Are Men

ALTHOUGH Victor Seastrom's "Name the Man" was predicted to be pre-eminently a woman's picture, it can and does attract the men. This, Manager MacDonald of B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, New York, avows with enthusiasm and bases his judgment on the fact that while the picture showed at the theatre it attracted as many men as women patrons.

The showing was not exploited in any unusual or sensational manner. As a matter of fact it was accompanied only by the usual newspaper advertising, and the painted signs customarily employed for each picture were placed above the entrance under the marquee.

Yet despite this meagre exploitation the film drew big crowds to the theatre. And among these there were mostly men. At the first showings each day the ticket buyers were almost entirely men. The manager was so impressed by the long line of men waiting to buy tickets that he had pictures taken. Not one woman can be seen in any of these photographs.

JACK PICKFORD FILM 'HILL BILLY' IN NEW YORK

The evening of March 10 saw the New York premiere of Jack Pickford's new photoplay "The Hill Billy" at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. This is Jack Pickford's second independent production and is being released by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

The most notable incident of the opening was the presence of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, both of whom had been too busy with their own new pictures to take the time to see this film at a pre-view showing.

The picture, which is to have a circuit booking through United Booking Offices, is a Kentucky mountain melodrama. Miss Pickford aided her brother in selecting the story for the film, but it is entirely his own production.

MIDWEST CIRCUIT TO PLAY 'AFTER THE BALL'

Through the announcement of Anderson Pictures that the whole Midwest Circuit would play "After the Ball" it became known that the thirty theatres in Illinois and Wisconsin booked by Midwest Theatres, Inc., have arranged for practically all of the pictures they can use until next September. According to W. D. Burford, who is associated with Frank Thielen, Charles Lamb and B. A. Lucas in the management of Midwest Theatres, Inc., the one hundred-odd days required to take care of "After the Ball" put the finishing touches to tying up the entire circuit for at least six months.

'THE YANKEE CONSUL' SCORES HIT IN CLEVELAND

Douglas MacLean in "The Yankee Consul" has just closed a run at the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, where it packed the house every day. The Cleveland Plain Dealer said of this second of Mr. MacLean's independent starring productions for Associated Exhibitors:

"'The Yankee Consul' is funny throughout. Ever since MacLean made 'Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave' he has been hard put to keep up his speedy cadence. He succeeded in 'The Hottentot,' and he fairly comes in under the wire with this picture."

'MARRIAGE CIRCLE' PLAYS BOSTON HOUSES

Three First Run Theatres Play to Capacity Audiences

THE success which is greeting "The Marriage Circle" in Boston is characteristic of the way it is being received everywhere that it has played. This Ernst Lubitsch production praised for its deftness and delightful comedy, played simultaneously at the Fenway, the Modern and the Beacon, three first run houses, and at each it drew a record attendance.

The turn away at each afternoon and evening performance was fairly astounding and was proof conclusive of the drawing power of this Warner Brothers' production. This hearty reception duplicates that accorded the film at its premiere in Los Angeles and its primary showing in New York at the Strand.

The fact that conservative New England received the production as it did, seems to be compelling evidence that the film will undoubtedly sweep the country like wild-fire.

Before its opening at the Orpheum Theatre in Chicago, a splendid advertising campaign and generous publicity paved the way for it with the result that the crowds just poured to the theatre to witness the showing of a picture whose worthiness had been heralded by its previous comments when it showed in other cities.

Hundreds of prints have been simultaneously released and from Main to California the millions will probably flock to see the picture that New York sophisticated reviewers so generously showered with their unstinted praise.

'VIRGINIAN' BREAKS HOUSE RECORD IN SALT LAKE

Owen Wister's "The Virginian," a Preferred Picture release, recently established a new box office record for the Victory Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, and by so doing dethroned "Woman to Woman" which had, up to this time, held first place in theatre receipts at this house. Moreover it is stated, by the manager, that the record was broken by a wide margin, "The Virginian" playing to capacity at every performance.

This is not the only city in which the film has established a record. According to a number of other reports, it has gotten enormous business in every key city in which it has already played.

Its cast includes Kenneth Harlan, Florence Vidor, Pat O'Malley, Russel Simpson and Raymond Hatton.

SWANSON SCORES IN 'A SOCIETY SCANDAL'

'Glorious Gloria's' Gowns and Acting Form an Unbeatable Combination for Box Office Purposes

A SOCIETY SCANDAL. Paramount Photoplay. Adapted from Alfred Sutrö's Stage Play, "The Laughing Lady." Director, Allan Dwan. Length, 6,433 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Marjorie Colbert	Gloria Swanson
Daniel Farr	Rod La Rocque
Harrison Peters	Ricardo Cortez
Hector Colbert	Allan Simpson
Mrs. Maturin Colbert	Mrs. Ida Waterman
Mrs. Hamilton Pennfield	Mrs. Thelma Converse
Mr. Schuyler Burr	Fraser Coalter
Mrs. Burr	Catherine Proctor
Patricia DeVoe	Yvonne Hughes

Marjorie Colbert and her husband disagree continually. She is compromised by an unconventional visit paid to her room by Harrison Peters. Colbert sues, and obtains a divorce, his success being due to the eloquent attack on Marjorie's reputation made by lawyer Farr. Marjorie plans revenge on Farr, vamps him and entices him to her apartment, where she screams for help. Farr's reputation suffers, but Marjorie suddenly repents when she realizes that they love each other. He forgives her and all ends well.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE is every reason for believing that this picture will mark up a high score on the box office target. Since making its metropolitan debut at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, it has kept the S. R. O. signal flying and the chances are that it will pack 'em in at big and little houses alike.

It was good judgment that dictated the selection of this adaptation of Alfred Sutrö's stage play as a vehicle for Miss Swanson. For "A Society Scandal" possesses double appeal, the lure for feminine patrons of the gorgeous gowns worn by the star, and the charm of a well told, cleverly acted story for those who want something more solid than mere creations of the dressmaker's art.

Gloria Swanson was great in her previous screen contribution—"The Humming Bird," in which her ability as an emotional actress was thoroughly demonstrated. But during the major portion of that film she appeared clad in male Apache garments, there was no fashion display, and the enthusiasts who always associated the sobriquet of "Glorious Gloria," invented by canny press agents, with a dazzling exhibition of female attire, resented the lack of a clothing parade.

As a matter of plain fact, Miss Swanson in the past was exploited in a number of pictures which were "clothes crazy" enough, but had no more real heart interest or straight story value than a department store advertisement. Yet those who shaped her screen destiny knew that she could act if given the opportunity, and they have turned the trick neatly by putting her into this Marjorie Colbert role, which not only capitalizes her fame as a fashion model, but enables the star to shine brightly on the dramatic horizon.

Director Allan Dwan has handled the plot ingeniously, polishing situations which border on the risqué with such delicate craft that the army of ultra-moralists, always on the watch for something to bombard, are left "up in the air," so to speak, without a definite object of attack. But in so doing he has not weakened the narrative's emotional sway.

The scene where Harrison Peters compromises the young wife is put over in trenchant style, and the trapping of Farr by the heroine, in her scheme of just revenge, which later turns to remorseful love for the victim, registers as a veritable cyclone of conflicting human passions.

Miss Swanson is at her best in this last episode, which furnishes a startling contrast to her work in the picture's earlier stages as the fascinating, butterfly young wife of flirtatious tendencies.

Rod La Rocque shares dramatic honors with the star and the other members of the large cast render efficient support.

The interiors are resplendent with superb settings, society atmosphere de luxe governs the entire production, there are many fine closeups and distinct lighting prevails.

In exploiting this feature, make the most of the ravishing gown display for which Miss Swanson and her feminine associates are responsible. Your women patrons expect great things of the widely advertised Gloria in this respect and they will not be disappointed.

Tie-ups with style emporiums are naturally suggested and should be easily accomplished. But don't forget to stress the story's dramatic strength and the acting of the principals, lest the fans should get the idea that they are about to witness only a clothes revue. Where possible a fashion show prologue might be arranged.

TRUART HAS GOOD THRILLER

'Drums of Jeopardy' Exciting and Should Please Majority

DRUMS OF JEOPARDY. Truair Film Corporation Photoplay. Adapted from Harold McGrath's Novel of the Same Name. Director, Edward Dillon. Length, 6,529 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dorothy Burrows	Elaine Hammerstein
John Hawksley	Jack Mulhail
Gregor Karlov	Wallace Beery
Cutty	David Torrence
Olga Andrevich	Maude George
Banker Burrows	Eric Mayne

John Hawksley, confidential secretary to Grand Duke Alexis of Russia, is given on the death of the Duke, two jewels known as "The Drums of Jeopardy." The jewels are of great value and Gregor Karlov attempts to secure them. They are sent to the United States with a trusted friend who gives them to Banker Burrows for safe keeping. Karlov in an effort to steal them kills the banker and kidnaps Hawksley. Dorothy Burrows with Cutty, a secret service man, determine to bring the culprit to justice. He is traced to "Little Russia," a New York cafe, and in a fight is killed. Hawksley marries Dorothy and the jewels are returned to him.

By LEN MORGAN

THERE are no idle moments in "Drums of Jeopardy." It is a typical Harold McGrath story and moves at a rapid pace. Some of the scenes are somewhat incredulous, but these are overlooked in the excitement of the moment. It is an interesting, well-directed picture and should prove a good box office attraction.

The story is an international affair that carries swift action with a well developed plot. Action starts in Russia, where the Revolutionists are in power. The scene is then carried to America, where more or less blood is spilled and rescues are commonplace. Elaine Hammerstein is excellent as Dorothy Burrows.

"Drums of Jeopardy," although lacking in detail, makes very good entertainment and will please the large majority of theatre patrons.

In exploiting the picture, drums may be placed about the lobby or a man may be employed to carry a sign on his back and parade the streets with a drum. It might be possible to secure the services of a Boy Scout drum corp for the occasion.

'Vagabond Trail' Has Sufficient Thrills and Enough Fast Action to Please All

THE VAGABOND TRAIL. Fox Film Adapted by Doty Hobart from George Owen Baxter's Novel, "Donnegan." Directed by William Wellman. Length, 4,302 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Donnegan	Charles Jones
Lou Macon	Marian Nixon
Aces	Charles Coleman
Slippy	Frank Nelson
George	George Reed
Lord Nick	L. C. Shumway
Nellie LeBrun	Virginia Warwick
Colonel Macon	Harry Lonsdale

While playing with his younger brother, Lord Nick is the cause of his injury and when he learns the youngster will die he leaves home and becomes a vagabond. The boy did not die and when he grew old enough he set out to find his brother. He has a great number of thrilling encounters, among which is one with a bully who shoots him and wounds him rather severely. It develops after the shooting, that the man who has committed the crime is the brother for whom he has been searching. A reconciliation is effected which brings happiness to all concerned.

By HENRIETTE SLOANE

CHARLES JONES is Fox's favorite "Western" man, and in this newest film of the "great open spaces" he gets another chance to endear himself to that portion of the public which adores the hero and despises the man who makes life hard for him. That is why this picture will hit the right spot with this type of audience.

If your patrons like pistol play, physical encounters on the peak of a high mountain below which lies the dreaded ravine, if the simple little girl who is devoted to her crippled father, can wring tears from your patrons' eyes, then don't hesitate to book it.

It is the sort of film in which one exciting incident crowds in on the other; there is a colored lackey who provides a substantial comedy element; the heroine is easy to look at and the photography is capably handled.

Charles Jones is a delightful hero. The fact that at times he is made just a bit too god-like is counteracted by the virility and nerve which he displays when he is fighting off his enemies. All together his performance is genuinely delightful, and though the picture is in no sense a real feature, it should undoubtedly go well in neighborhood houses.

For purposes of exploitation the exhibitor will find that the picture is extremely easy to handle. In the first place the heroine and her father made the trip across the mountains in a Ford. This should give you the basis for a real tie-up with the Ford agency, with whom you might arrange for a street bally.

Then if any agency in your town carries a camp car trailer, you have an opportunity for another outdoor tie-up. Two banners have been prepared, one for each side of the trailer, with a poster cut-out of Charles Jones on the banner, if desired. It also carries copy similar to the following: "Take a trip with your family in a.....camp car trailer. The great outdoors awaits you along 'The Vagabond Trail.'"

A store selling bicycles or motorcycles should readily lend its co-operation. You should get several of these and have them ridden through the streets by men with signs both on the front and the back. One should bear the message "Follow the 'Vagabond Trail' to the.....Theatre." The other should be an ad for the bicycle shop.

OLD STAGE PLAY
MAKES BULLY FILM

*'Nellie,' the Beautiful Cloak Model,
Revamped and Modernized,
Should Score Heavily*

NELLIE, THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Photoplay.
Adapted from Owen Davis' Stage Play.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Nellie	Claire Windsor
Nellie (Five Years Old)	Betsy Hisle
Jack Carroll	Edmund Lowe
Polly Joy	Mae Busch
Shorty Burchell	Raymond Griffith
Walter Peck	Lew Cody
Robert Horton	Hobart Bosworth
Thomas Lipton	Lillian Tashman
Nita	Dorothy Cummings

Ill used by her father, Nellie Horton is taken in charge by Thomas Lipton and brought up in poor surroundings. When Lipton dies Nellie becomes a cloak model. She is continually persecuted by her mother's nephew, owner of the shop where she works. He endeavors to get rid of her so that he can obtain a fortune to which she is heiress. After many adventures, including her rescue from under an elevated train by the man she loves, the girl finds happiness.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

FROM the box office viewpoint this looks like a "can't miss" proposition. Director Emmett Flynn and his cast of clever players have done wonders in the shaping of this hoary old melodrama into acceptable screen entertainment. It's "hokum" of the most pronounced kind, all right, but put over with a bang, crammed full of thrills, comedy and pathos, moving at a mile-a-minute gait, so swift of execution and loaded down with colorful atmosphere that the illogical absurdities of the plot are lost in waves of pleasurable excitement.

This stirring tale of Nellie, her woes, persecution and ultimate triumph, is not, however, of the same vintage that tickled our fathers' palates in the good old days of the "ten, twenty and thirty cent melo." It's Nellie brought strictly up-to-date, struggling in the life vortex of modern New York, the ancient thrills and griefs are there, but staged against a 1924 background.

And very effectively staged too! You get flashes of Fifth Avenue in its busiest hours and other well-known points of interest, the elevated thunders along overhead, the countless throngs come and go, the traffic gets twisted and untwisted again under the watchful eyes of the traffic cops. It's all a great visualization of Gotham in its glory, something to minister to the native sons' pride and pique the curiosity of the outlanders.

Nor must the fashion show be forgotten. Here is where the women folks will enthuse rapturously over the varied display of gorgeous gowns, frills and furbelows of the latest style, set forth in backgrounds of dizzy grandeur.

The best of this film is that it offers a little something for everyone. Plenty of lively comedy, savage scrapping bouts, love, romance, hairbreadth escapes, etc. There is a bully fire scene, a kidnapping incident pulled off with spectacular ginger, a smashing auto wreck, and the big situation where Nellie is saved from an untimely demise under the flying wheels of an elevated train.

Of course, the highbrows here and there may handle Nellie and her doings the scornful ha-ha; but it's a safe bet that even the cynics will find lots of amusement in watching these reels unfold. It'll give 'em a good laugh, anyway.

Claire Windsor is a stunning heroine. She fits finely into the role of Nellie, which she plays with just the necessary mingling of pathos and strenuous "melo" punch. An easy part, this, to overdo and turn into burlesque, but Miss Windsor never exceeds its legitimate limits.

She is well supported. Mae Busch and Raymond Griffith are responsible for most of the mirthful comedy phases. Hobart Bosworth shines in a double role. Edmund Lowe, Lew Cody, Dorothy Cummings and others in the large and carefully selected cast contribute to the film's success. Exteriors and interiors are beautifully photographed and faultless lighting prevails.

Go as far as you like in advertising this as one of the big melodramatic hits of the season. It will please young and old. The title naturally suggests tie-ups with local stores on the fashion angle, and your feminine patrons should respond to the lure of the Fifth Avenue styles.

JUGGLING JAZZ AND JAGS

'Daughters of Today' Frames Foolish Flappers in Fantastic Frolics

DAUGHTERS OF TODAY. Selznick Photoplay. Author, Lucien Hubbard. Director, Rollin Sturgeon. Length, 7,280 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Lois Whittall	Patsy Ruth Miller
Ralph Adams	Ralph Graves
Mabel Vandergrift	Edna Murphy
Peter Farnum	Edward Hearn
Reggy Adams	Philo McCullough
Dick Vandergrift	George Nichols
Ma Vandergrift	Gertrude Claire
Lorena	Zasu Pitts
Maisie	Marjorie Bonner

Lois Whittall's wealthy father is interested in a blonde charmer. Lois and her college chums are out for a good time and en route pick up Mabel Vandergrift, a little country girl very strictly reared. A gay roadside party is wound up by a moonlight bathing frolic. The youngsters are scattered by the outraged villagers. The two girls get mixed up in a murder mystery, but all comes out right in the end and they find happiness with their respective lovers.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

BOOZE, jazz, indiscriminate love-making and moonlight bathing, with a murder mystery thrown in for good measure are the principal ingredients of this film dish, cooked especially to please the appetites of the sensation-seekers. Yet, after all, it isn't half so wicked as it reads in print. There's plenty of risqué suggestion and doubtless the censors in certain states will demand that it be pruned good and plenty. But when you come to analyze the rather tangled plot, it's all a case of a lot of smoke caused by a very little bit of fire.

Reputations may be slightly smudged, but are rubbed bright again. The theme is supposed to work out as a sort of expose of the wild fly-by-night life of the modern American girl, but no sensible person is likely to accept it as such, or even take it seriously at any stage. When all's said and done, you get the impression of a bunch of flappers flapping fantastically with the aid of electric lights and moonbeams, trying to be real devilish and not accomplishing anything particularly hellish in the long run.

The story has nothing original about it, but the action is sufficiently fast and smacking enough of the spectacular to please those who want "peppy" stuff on their amusement bill of fare. For this reason it will probably score well at the box office in some localities. The exhibitor must decide for himself if "Daughters of Today" is the kind of picture likely to catch his patrons' fancy. If he caters principally to what is known in the trade as "the family circle" it won't suit his book. On the other hand, there are less particular folk who will "eat it up" and figure that they have received full value for their money.

The roadhouse party, the storm episode, the moonlight bathing frolic, and automobile wreck register as the most effective scenes. A sentimental squirt is injected when the caressing youngsters combine to keep the truth about her daughter's "goings on" from the slivery-haired old mother," the murder mystery, which isn't so awfully mysterious, is solved and a happy climax achieved.

The photography includes many handsome interiors, the exteriors offer a variety of fine long shots and close-ups, and good lighting prevails. You can play this up as a sure-enough jazz picture. The title has strong drawing power, and the players are worth featuring.

Crook Melodrama*

LOVE'S WHIRLPOOL. Regal Pictures Photoplay. From a Story by Elliott Clawson and Bruce Mitchell. Directed by Bruce Mitchell. Length, 6,028 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jim Reagan	James Kirkwood
Molly	Lila Lee
Larry	Robert Agnew
"Pinkey" Sellers	Mathew Betz
Richard Milton	Edward Martindel
A Maid	Margaret Livingston
Nadine Milton	Madge Bellamy
A Lawyer	Clarence Gilbert
"Parson" Monks	Joe Mills

Jim Reagan, a master crook, tries to force his young brother to go straight. The lad, however, attempts to bunco an old man in a bank lobby and is arrested. Jim asks the banker to get Larry off from a jail term but the banker refuses and the lad draws a ten-year sentence. Jim arranges for Larry's escape, but the boy is killed by the guards in the attempt. Jim and his wife save the banker's daughter from drowning and use her to try to break the banker's spirit by holding her captive. Molly is touched by the banker's kindness and returns the daughter to her father. Jim is made to see the right way to live and reforms.

By LEN MORGAN

LOVE'S WHIRLPOOL" is one of those pictures that make the exhibitors believe in Santa Claus again. It has all the earmarks that go to make up a box office hit. It abounds in excitement, humor and heart interest, and has an appeal that is far-reaching. It is head and shoulders above the average crook play and carries a well defined moral lesson.

James Kirkwood, when given a proper vehicle, can be sure to turn out an excellent picture. In this production he has found a theme that abounds in opportunities to display his versatile ability, and the result is an exceptionally entertaining picture. He takes the part of the master crook to perfection.

The outstanding scene of the picture is the sinking of an ocean liner. The panic among the passengers is thrilling, and the directing and camera work are of the best. The scene is not too long drawn out to spoil the effect.

Contrary to the usual run of crook plays there are no underworld scenes or anything that might prove objectionable. It is a strong, clean melodrama with all the sordid tricks left out.

Lila Lee as Molly, Jim's wife, is good. She is called upon in several scenes for real emotional acting and her work is all that could be asked.

Madge Bellamy, as the banker's daughter, wins the sympathy with her clever acting. She has a charm and appeal that make her stand out prominently in the picture.

The characters are all well cast and work hard to make the picture a success, and the exhibitor will reap the benefits of this entertaining picture.

In exploiting the picture it would be well to play up the names of the stars, as each has a large following. Go the limit there, and your patrons won't be disappointed.

FAIR PROGRAM ATTRACTION

'The Wolf Man' Has Leading Role Unsuitable to Star's Personality

THE WOLF MAN. Fox Photoplay. Authors, Frederick and Fanny Hatton. Director, Edward Mortimer. Length, 5,145 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Gerald Stanley John Gilbert
Elizabeth Gordon Norma Shearer
Beatrice Joy Alma Frances
Lord Rothstein George Barrou
Pierre Eugene Pallette
Phil Joyce Max Montisole

Gerald Stanley, young British nobleman, believing that while intoxicated he killed a friend, runs away to Canada. Hearing of the marriage of his former fiancée, he goes on a spree, saves Elizabeth Gordon from assault by a drunken man, but carries her off into the woods. Pursued, he and the girl float down the rapids. He saves her from drowning. They are in love but Gerald is too ashamed to confess his passion. Suddenly he learns that he is guiltless of the murder that haunts him and he and Elizabeth face a happy future together.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE are plenty of melodramatic thrills and good scenic stuff in this picture, which ranks as an average program attraction suited to the needs of neighborhood and smaller theatres. Considered as a vehicle for exploiting John Gilbert, it doesn't fill the bill, the role of hero Gerald Stanley being a trifle too "roughneckish" in parts for this star's polished personality.

The fact that the said hero is represented as a decent chap when sober but an untamed devil when soused, handicaps the character quite heavily so far as winning an audience's favor is concerned. He appears to be such an infernally uncertain quantity that you can't trust him, ready to break out of the Volstead reservation most any time on any pretense.

Indeed, Old John Barleycorn takes the lead at a good many stages of the production, the hero getting into trouble while jagged, hitting it up again furiously after he emigrates to Canada, beating bitterly another rum-hound who makes offensive proposals to the girl in the case, but kidnapping her himself for a change. Later, when his alcoholic spasms subside, he expresses gentlemanly regret and conveys Elizabeth back to civilization.

This sort of lovemaking possesses at least the merit of being a bit novel in conception, even if not particularly convincing, and of course, the situations which develop as a result of the flight of drunken swain and abducted maiden are sufficiently exciting to please all admirers of flashy melodrama. Among the big scenes are Gerald's savage combat with Pierre, the lumberjack, and the perilous voyage of the canoe down the foaming rapids, the overturning of the craft and rescue of the girl from a watery grave.

John Gilbert is at his best when portraying Gerald Stanley in the latter's milder moods, but he is not the kind of actor who shines brilliantly if called on to put over "cave-man" stunts or give a correct impersonation of a mad-drunk, scrapping wastrel. Norma Shearer is an extremely pretty heroine, Eugene Pallette plays the boisterous, brutal Pierre to perfection and the work of the supporting players is adequate. The photography includes strikingly beautiful forest and water shots, with excellent lighting.

Exploit this as a fast-moving melodrama, with thrills galore, a romantic love story and unlimited outdoor color. The names of John Gilbert, Norma Shearer, Alma Frances and Eugene Pallette are worth featuring.

HIERS IN A RUSTIC ROLE

'Fair Week' Starring Rotund Comedian, Should Please the Young

FAIR WEEK. Paramount Photoplay. Author, Walter Woods. Director, Rob Wagner. Length, 4,636 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Slim Swasey Walter Hiers
Ollie Remus Constance Wilson
Madame La Grande Carmen Phillips
Jasper Remus J. F. McDonald
Tinkle Mary Jane Irving

Slim Swasey of Rome, Mo., is guardian of Tinkle, a six-year-old girl deserted by some member of a traveling show. During Fair Week Madame Le Grande, balloonist, arrives. Kelly and Sherman, crooks, plan to rob the bank. When the balloon ascends Tinkle is its solitary passenger but is rescued by Slim. Later he foils the crook's plot and wins the girl he loves. Madame Le Grande turns out to be Tinkle's mother.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE isn't much of a plot to this picture, which relies mostly for its amusement values on small town atmosphere and rural character sketching. The clever work of that very agreeable comedian, Walter Hiers, is responsible for the development of some extremely humorous situations, but the dramatic sequences seem forced. As it stands "Fair Week" will hardly find favor with sophisticated audiences. But the "kiddies" ought to enjoy it and as a program attraction it should bring good box office returns.

In the film's early stages the action moves at a deliberate pace, but speeds up toward the middle and swings into a rapid climax. Slim Swasey, the rotund hero, is a lovable sort of chap who wins one's sympathy and liking right away, a serio-comic character with a genius for making blunders and getting out of them; little Tinkle, the girl whose mother deserted her, is a darling and there are numerous other types which fit neatly into the rustic surroundings.

The big thrill of the feature is registered by the sudden flight of the balloon, carrying away Tinkle, Slim's rush to the rescue and the acrobatic stunts by means of which he extricates her and himself from the perils of a skyward-bound voyage. This ascent act is just the least bit obvious in its staging, but not bad on the whole.

Another highlight mixture of comedy and melodrama is the scrap between the hero and the crook who has robbed the bank. Earl Metcalfe impersonates the light-fingered gent and fights back in tiger fashion, until his canny opponent brings his bulk to bear on the enemy and crushes him into surrender.

There are many pleasing country shots, the ballyhoo scene as the fair opens is particularly well done and the grouping of the crowds very effective.

Walter Hiers is on view most of the time and plays the part of Slim Swasey in a care-free, unaffected fashion which makes that bucolic hero appear exceedingly life-like and appealing. Constance Wilson is pleasing as his sweetheart.

You can exploit this as an amusing rural comedy drama, with some love interest and an occasional thrill. Walter Hiers should be prominently featured in your billing.

HAS GREAT SCENIC CHARM

'Damaged Hearts,' a Strenuous Melodrama Staged in Everglades

DAMAGED HEARTS. F. B. O. Photoplay. Author, Basil King. Director T. Hays Hunter. Length, 6,154 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

The Mother Mary Carr
David (The Boy) Jerry Devine
David (The Man) Eugene Strong
The Girl Helen Rowland
Sandy Tyrone Power
Celia Stevens Jean Armour
Edwina Winfield Sara Mullen
The Cripple Charles DeForrest
Hugh Winfield Thomas Gillen

Owing the entire world a grudge, a man immures himself in the Everglades. The wife of an enemy is kidnapped by him. They fall in love. Learning that her husband is suspected of having slain her, the woman returns to her lawful spouse, but finds him with another charmer. The husband seeks revenge, but is stabbed to death underwater by a hunchback. The Everglades hermit finds happiness with the woman he abducted.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THE scenic charm of this picture can scarcely be overestimated. Its backgrounds consist almost entirely of views of the Florida Everglades, with their wealth of tropical grandeur, silver streams flowing through mysterious swamp lands, majestic forests and masses of overhanging foliage. The camera technique is admirable and fine effects of delicate lights and shadows are achieved, making the production an artistic delight.

The story is melodramatic to the 'teenth degree, so much so that the element of probability is completely lost sight of at times. For instance, the recognition of the missing wife through the medium of a photograph taken from an aeroplane hovering at an immense height in the distance, is an altogether incredible piece of "hokum," yet this incident plays an important part in the plot.

The hero is an orphan whose only sister, adopted by some wealthy folks dies. He is badly treated by the son of the family and later, in revenge, kidnaps the latter's wife. How his hate turns into love for the woman he has seized, forms the theme of the narrative. It is all very hectic stuff and rather artificial, but outside of critical audiences, will likely be favorably accepted.

The Everglades atmosphere furnishes peculiarly appropriate settings for such a tale of passion and revenge. The surroundings are so eerie that you can't help feeling that people living among them are likely to be driven by subtle influences into the commission of most any sort of wild deeds.

The fight under water between the husband and the man who hates him, is a startlingly spectacular affair, all the more grisly and ape-like in its details because the combatants are clad in diving suits, which impart to the struggling figures the semblance of grotesque monsters from another world. The husband succumbs to a stab administered in mistake by a hunchback, who is jealous of the abductor and thus a climax of a decidedly effective nature is attained.

Eugene Strong plays the hero role of David, the recluse, when grown to manhood, and gives a capital performance, which stamps him as an artist of considerable dramatic ability. Sara Mullen is emotionally convincing as Edwina Winfield, Thomas Gillen is excellent as her husband, Charles De Forrest provides a gressome character study of the cripple and the support is adequate.

You can exploit "Damaged Hearts" as a strong melodrama, replete with thrills and unique situations. Dwell upon the film's scenic beauty and give plenty of space to a description of the big fight under water. Eugene Strong, Mary Carr, Tyrone Power, Sara Mullen and Charles De Forrest are names worth featuring.

A Word From Dr. Shallenberger On The Serial's Value

W. E. Shallenberger in speaking of the new Arrow chapter play says:

"My experience with serials, now called chapter-plays began with 'The Million Dollar Mystery,' the success of which marked an epoch in the history of screen entertainment."

"The really meritorious serial will bring in the audience week after week with a most gratifying increase in the box office receipts. Every exhibitor who has booked good serials and displayed any degree of showmanship in exploiting them will agree that they are consistent profit makers."

With this point in view, "Days of '49," based on the most dramatic period of Californian history (from 1847-'48 and '49) is now being made with the co-operation of the California Historical Society as to characters, locations, costumes and other data necessary to make the film correct in every detail.

The second chapter has just been screened by Arrow and the wagon train chased by the Indians looks as if the wagons were coming right out over the orchestra due to some nervy work on the part of the camera man.

Harry McCoy Making First Starring Vehicle

Under the direction of Noel Smith, Harry McCoy is appearing in "Stranded," the first Century Comedy in which he solely is starred. The picture is being made from one of the European stories Century's vice-president, Abe Stern, brought back with him.

A perfect cast has been assembled to support McCoy in his first featured production for the Century organization. Among those who have already been engaged for important parts are Betty Young, McCoy's leading lady; "Fatty" Karr, erstwhile Fox star; Al Alt, who recently joined Century's permanent stock company, and Herbert Sherwood.

McCoy had been appearing as the "short" of the Earle-McCoy team, but it is the intention of Stern Brothers to make fewer of these "team comedies," letting Harry slowly branch out into a Century star in his own right. If "Stranded," which deals with the happenings of a theatrical troupe in stranded straits, proves successful with McCoy carrying the bulk of the comedy honors, Julius and Abe Stern intend to let Noel Smith continue producing others bought "across the pond," which are admirably suited for McCoy.

And by the use of this method and the aid of "glasses" with green and red lenses, the man shooting off a gun and the kid squirting a hose, seemingly are brought out to the spectator's very nose—producing a startling and highly laughable effect on said spectator.

Turning 'Window Shoppers' Into Movie Patrons

Window Displays Give the Showman a Highly Productive Medium of Advertising at Little or No Cost to Him

WHEN Loew's Ottawa played Universal's "White Tiger," Liggett's Drug Store proved an enterprising co-partner in bringing the public's attention to the show. Each puppy had a letter attached, and, when spelled out in proper order, gave the name of the photo-play. Interest ran high

S. S. NATHANSON, Optician and Jeweler of Asbury Park, N. J., was not loath to attract folks to his window through the urge of co-operative window display. So Universal's exploiteer took advantage of the opportunity "to tell folks all about "The Hunchback" at the Strand

Does the Song Tie-up Strike a Box-office Note?

One Expert in Adopting Movie Titles for Songs, Says It Does, But Only Under Circumstances Described Below

By FRED RATH

Of the Advertising Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Co-Author of the Current Song Hits, "Just a Girl That Men Forget," "Big Brother," etc.

YES, the song tie-up does help the exhibitor—sometimes. When the song itself has merit and the publisher and the producer join hands to put it over.

Under these conditions, the song tie-up offers unlimited possibilities and opens up any number of channels which unquestionably lead to the box-office. Done well, you can't beat it. Half-baked, it's practically useless. The best you might get out of it is a window display or two—but that's only the start of a good song hook-up.

Mention song tie-up to the average music publisher and he suddenly becomes hard of hearing. No, sir, no more picture songs for him. Didn't he publish "Remnants of Revenge" inspired by the Gondola epic of the same name? And didn't he lose he doesn't-know-how-much on it? So he tears his hair at the very thought of another bloomer and stays picture-shy.

Any exploitation stunt can be killed by too frequent repetition, and that's what's wrong with the song tie-up. "Remnants of Revenge" is absolutely worthless as a song title, doesn't interest the people who sing and buy popular music, and just helps to poison the minds of producer, publisher, exhibitor and public against picture songs in general.

But take a title which lends itself to successful song transformation—there are plenty in any company's releases—and you have the foundation without which no tie-up can hope to bring good results.

Granted, then, that the song is good, what can be done with it to help the exhibitor?

Teaser stunts.

It can be played or sung in the theatre in advance of the showing, coupled with an announcement about the picture. It can be introduced at local affairs—dances, club shows, etc., with program mention of the picture, theatre, play dates. It can be radioed. It can be made a part—and a big part—of almost any ballyhoo stunt you can think of. And every time the title of the song is heard, the title of the picture is being exploited. In a way that makes people remember it!

Store tie-ups.

You get a certain amount of publicity, of course, out of every window display—shoe store, millinery shop, what not. But the music dealer not only can give you an attractive window display, selling the title on every cover, but can also make it 100% effective by having the song sung in his store—a sure attracter. Thus the song has both an eye and an ear appeal. No other song tie-up can give you as much.

Every copy sold goes into the home and is played and sung, so that the whole family hears it. A constant reminder of the picture; an advertising medium which carries its own follow-up.

Aside from the regular exploitation angles, and the prologue and theme-song possibilities which tend to enhance the picture itself, the film song opens up an unending flow of special stunts like these. Ed. Olmstead, publicity man for McVick-ger of the Paramount Empress Theatre. In Portland, Oregon, the leading hotel staged a special revue. "A Night in Spain," featuring "The Spanish Dancer" song. The backs of dummy song covers were used as menus. A girl dressed as Pola Negri did a Spanish dance. The whole thing was tied up tightly with the picture and the theatre.

On the "Big Brother" tie-up song, an unprecedented amount of good publicity was secured, with the returns still coming in strong at the time this is being written.

In Memphis, Manager Waugh, of Loew's Palace Theatre, had a song radioed from two different stations, secured big window displays and a lot of co-operation from the music stores, had it sung in the theatre a week in advance of the showing, prologued it with a special setting and made it sell plenty of seats for him. A thousand copies were sold—worth mentioning because it indicates the interest which the song had aroused.

MICKEY BENNETT child actor in the "Big Brother" picture, radioed the song twice from WOR, Newark, the announcer stating that the song was inspired by the Paramount picture. Hundreds of letters were received from all over the country, expressing appreciation for Mickey's part of the program and in particular praising the song.

In Los Angeles, the song was turned into a good seat-seller. Aside from the regular run of stunts, special slides were flashed in the theatres announcing that Mickey Bennett was to radio the song and the music stores went in for big displays. It showed at the box-office.

Even in New York where tie-ups are hard to effect, all the Loew theatres had a singer do the song, together with an announcement heralding the coming of the picture. Incidentally, this singer—a high-class, high-priced man—was especially engaged and paid by the publisher. This brings up the question: Just how much can the publisher do to help the exhibitor?

The big publisher, with his chain of branch offices, can do a vast amount. Working from a list of play dates supplied by the home office, the branch manager can keep in close touch with the theatre and work jointly to mutual advantage.

If the services of a singer are desired by the theatre, the publisher's nearest branch will supply one. And if it's a high-class theatre, the publisher will send a man with a worth-while voice—not just a mere "plugger." If a prologue is to be staged, the music house then will lend its expert assistance in framing and staging it. In fact, many times the cost of building the set is met by the pub-

What's Wrong With the Song Tie-Up?

In order to show the constructive possibilities of the song tie-up, Mr. Rath first dwells on its destructive qualities.

Having purged the subject of all its lesser clay, the author of the accompanying article then starts with a clean slate to show that box-office possibilities are indeed enhanced when the public can be gotten to keep the title of the picture on its tongue in the form of song.

Mr. Rath is in a position to treat the subject from every angle valuable to the showman. The combination of successful popular song writer and film advertising man eminently equips him for the task.

er's, Chicago, tied up with the "Chicago Evening Journal" on "The Spanish Dancer" song, published in connection with the Negri Paramount picture of the same name. For five nights the paper ran a double-column spread announcing a $50 cash prize for the best additional lyric written to the melody. Thousands of lyrics were submitted and on the last night of the run the winning one was featured in the theatre. Two hundred regular copies of the song were given away to the writers of the best two hundred. The stunt proved itself at the box-office.

IN Salt Lake, groups of girls, costumed as Spanish dancers, were sent out on a ballyhoo, singing the song and actually selling copies. Fourteen hundred copies were sold and there wasn't a single person in Salt Lake who didn't know about the picture. The stunt was engineered by Renaud, Paramount exploiteer, and the mana-

'NAME THE MAN' WINDOW DISPLAY

Macauley's Book Store of Detroit showed more than a willing desire to co-operate on Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's "Name the Man," a fact which wasn't lost on the Broadway Strand Theatre. And a fact which showed no unmistakable effect in the rise of box office receipts when the money was counted

Puppy Stunt Attracts Large Crowds to See 'White Tiger'

An improved variation of the old "turtle stunt" was worked to great effect by Captain Goodale, manager, and O. J. Harris, assistant manager, of Loew's Ottawa Theatre, for "White Tiger," when that Universal-Jewel played the Canadian house. Besides their ingenious stunt, these enterprising showmen were responsible for a particularly attractive lobby display on the Dean production.

Liggett's drug store, situated on one of the principal business thoroughfares, donated a window to the stunt, while the live stock was obtained from a local dog store in exchange for the advertising copy carried on the display signs.

Ten puppies, each wearing a blanket whereon was a letter from the words, "White Tiger," frolicked and romped in the window, attracting huge crowds. The people massed ten deep in front of the window all day; in fact, it was necessary to wait until after midnight before a photograph could be obtained.

Prizes totalling twenty-five dollars were offered to those first solving the question: "What Do the Puppies Say?" As the animals were continually jumping about and running in and out, it was most difficult to make sense of the letters on their blankets.

The following week, a fine display in the window announced the name of the attraction and the theatre, as well as the list of winning contestants. The stunt was actually the talk of the town, and was instrumental in bringing considerable business to the theatre during its run of the Universal-Jewel.

A shadow box, about four feet wide, four feet deep, and eight feet high, was placed at the foot of the main staircase. A cut-out of the "White Tiger" six-sheet was made and placed on a compo board floor, with one "board" torn up. A considerable amount of flashy "paste" jewelry was scattered about, a black cat in cut-out form, a broken mirror, and a calendar, display the date, Friday, 13, helped stress many of the most vivid dramatic sequences of the production.

The entire interior of the shadow box was painted a dead black, with only illumination coming from a baby spot placed in the lower left-hand corner. This gave the effect of a burglar's lantern resting on the floor and threw heavy shadows against the background, heightening the effect immeasurably.

SPECIAL MUSIC NUMBER

"Sporting Youth," first of the Laemmle month offerings at the Seattle Columbia, was attended by considerable press publicity. In addition a special preview was given and written up. M. H. Newman, who is general manager of the western division of theatres for Universal, and who is also proving himself a musical composer of note, came through in time to furnish a new foxtrot ballet, "Not for a Day But Forever," which was used as a musical theme for the feature. It made a decided hit with the patrons of the theatre.

'HUMMING BIRD' OFFERS OPPORTUNITY

Humming Bird Stockings Make Good Tieup for Picture

LEON J. BAMBERGER, who is handling the Paramount end of the Humming Bird Hosiery hook-up with the Gloria Swanson picture, reports that it is running like wildfire in all the big first-run cities, where the complete co-operation of hundreds of stores has already been secured. So successful has the tie-up proved that H. Walter Fred, president of the Davenport Hosiery Mills, of Chattanooga, manufacturers of the Humming Bird brand, has written to Mr. Bamberger that he has about completed his plans of co-operative advertising to include every city and town where there is a Humming Bird Hosiery dealer.

In Chicago, where Ed. Olmstead, of McVickers Theatre, worked in with Mandel Bros., the big department store put on special window displays and engaged forty extra salesgirls to take care of the run on (not "in") Humming Bird Hosiery during the engagement of the picture at the theatre across the street. Full page advertisements were placed by Mandel Bros. in both the Tribune and Daily News, and a page-wide credit line referring to the picture at the McVickers.

MOVING FINGER IN LOBBY

Goldwyn's Victor Seastrom picture, "Name the Man!" received one of the most extensive exploitation campaigns which Cleveland had ever seen when it was shown at the Allen Theatre.

In the rotunda of the exclusive Allen Theatre where exploitation material had never been permitted, was placed a cut-out from the twenty-four sheet poster, including a crouching figure, the pointed, accusing finger and the letters of the title. The cut-out of the hand was attached to an electrically driven motor which kept it moving up and down; on each downward stroke the finger pointed directly at the girl. A cut-out of a big exclamation point was used at the side of the girl.

JACKIE'S WINDOW DISPLAY

In one of the most prominent stores of Dallas, Texas, this display helped to awaken the interest in Metro's "Long Live the King" when the picture played the Palace Theatre of that city.

BOOKSTORES TIE-UP WITH 'PALACE OF THE KING'

ALL of the bigger book shops in Chicago were tied up in the exploitation of Goldwyn's picturization of F. Marion Crawford's novel "In the Palace of the King" for its extended run at Balaban & Katz' Roosevelt Theatre in Chicago.

Window displays of the photoplay edition of the novel, together with stills, portrait enlargements and a special half-sheet window card displayed in a score of book shops.

HAT STORE WINDOW DISPLAY FOR 'NAME THE MAN!'

A fine display for "Name the Man" was obtained in the Stetson hat store on the strength of a Stetson hat tie-up arranged with Goldwyn's leading male players by J. A. Jackson, manager of studio publicity. The photograph showing the six men wearing Stetson hats was displayed prominently in the window of the store, together with stills from the production and special cards calling attention to its engagement at the Allen, in Cleveland.

The radio stores were tied up with a photograph showing Mae Busch "listening in" on a radio set; a card carried the information that Miss Busch received her instructions from Mr. Seastrom while making the picture by radio. Free tickets were offered to the first hundred persons who correctly deciphered a radio message which was placed in a conspicuous place at the Radio Show and in the windows of radio stores.

Valuable publicity was obtained at the Automobile Show by the use of a photograph of Conrad Nagel riding in a Dodge car and Victor Seastrom in a Packard car.

GONG SOUNDER GETS CROWDS TO 'CONDUCTOR 1492'

A double appeal that made a bid to both eyes and ears of picture fans was used by Manager Dan Burgum in putting over the Warner Brothers' picture "Conductor 1492" starring Johnny Hines, at the Rialto Theatre in Des Moines recently.

Manager Burgum had an art display of a street car filled with passengers built across the front of the lobby. Entrance to the lobby was gained through the doors of the trolley cars and every time the door of the trolley car opened it sounded a loud gong similar to that used on real street cars. The car flash in the lobby resembled closely the car used by Johnny Hines in the picture. While the display itself was a puller, coupled with the clanging of the gong it made a flash that was a puller. The novelty of seeing a display street car with a gong that really sounded every

SCARAMOUCHE WINDOW TIE-UP

When Metro's Feature played the Opera House in Fremont, Ohio, this window display in Smith's general merchandise store attracted considerable attention. "Smith's" is one of the big stores on the main street of this thriving Ohio community time the door was opened proved a tie-up with the picture that kept the theatre filled to capacity the entire week.

Manager Burgum used a tie-up that was good for both newspaper and word of mouth publicity by offering a free door to all street car men in uniform the first part of the week.

'BLACK OXEN' PARADE

When "Black Oxen" played the Seattle Strand, Seattleites were treated to the unusual sight of a yoke of real black oxen drawing an ox cart, driven by a picturesque ox-driver. It attracted much attention. The cart was placarded with signs that advised:

"These are real black oxen. You may also see REEL 'Black Oxen' at the Strand. No Bull." A splendid business was done. The fact that the book was being serialized in a morning paper, furnished another tie-up.

CITY DETECTIVES USED IN PUBLICITY STUNT

Novel Idea Gives Sleuths Chance to Show Puzzle Ability

EVEN the city detectives couldn't guess "who killed John Prentiss" and it made wonderful front page material for the Birmingham papers, when L. R. Towns gave a private screening of "The Acquittal" to the plain clothes members of the police force.

"If the detectives can't guess who killed Prentiss, what a sweet mystery this will be for you," was the theme of Towns' and the day following the special showing. It didn't do the police force any good, but it certainly helped the engagement.

Towns offered prizes of good hats to the detectives who guessed the culprit when the picture was stopped after the fifth reel. Towns expected that it would cost him a hat or two, but figured that it was worth it if the detectives made strong statements about the mystery. When the detectives failed, however, to guess the killer of Prentiss, Towns saw several good front page stories. He saw right.

On the opening day Towns gave a ten-thirty matinee to get the picture going, and offered free tickets to "West of the Water Tower" his next engagement, for those who guessed right when the picture was stopped. Slips of paper were provided for opinions which patrons turned over to the ushers at the end of the performance.

SILHOUETTE SHADOW BOX

The guests of the Fentriss garden party got a dry swim in the window of the Owl Drug Store in San Francisco when the First National picture "Flaming Youth" played Loew's State Theatre. A silhouette shadow box stage was arranged in the window. The title of the picture was lettered in distinctive outlines. The bathing figures were painted in on the sombre back drop.

The attention the display attracted had been bolstered up by advance reviews on the book and the picture, when it was shown, found a public ready and waiting.

The tie-up with the Owl Drug Company was cemented by other window displays. The Colleen Moore perfume talc came in for considerable notoriety as an honor to the player.

BLACK OXEN FIVE AND TEN-CENT STORE TIE-UP

Gordon's Olympia Theatre of Boston, Mass., lost no time in playing ball with Kresge's 5 and 10 cent store, when First National's "Black Oxen" played the house. Suffice to say there was no little interest aroused and that many Kresge window shoppers became Olympia ticket buyers

Barry Helps Exploitation

Wesley Barry, the youthful Warner Brothers' star, was in Galesburg, Ill., recently to aid in exploiting "George Washington, Jr." The manager of the West Theatre immediately arranged a number of window displays and a tie-up with the Ingersoll Pencil Company. Wesley Barry made a number of personal appearances during the showing of "George Washington, Jr."

The whole town was divided into two debating teams. One team adopted the affirmative and one the negative on this question, "Is Wesley Barry really in Galesburg?"

When Kellogg Drake and Company co-operated with the exhibitor, and arranged, as a special advertising feature, to have Barry give to the boys attending the Children's Party at the West Theatre's special Saturday morning showing, a number of Ingersoll Pencils; no doubt remained as to whether Wesley Barry was in Town.

In a contest, a gold Ingersoll Pencil was given to the boy most resembling Barry. Pencils were also given to the fattest, thinnest and ugliest lads. A special prize was given to the boy whose birthday was on the same days as Wesley Barry's. Names, addresses, days, months and years, of the boys, were written on cards and left at the box-office. This scene aided materially to the exhibitor's mailing list.

Penny Show Makes Hit

When A. J. Sosnosky booked the Universal chapterplay, "Around the World in 18 Days," he called in W. P. Allen of the Universal exploitation staff to help him put it over.

Allen suggested that instead of giving the usual free show for the kids at the opening, he advertise that every youngster who would bring a penny of the vintage of 1919 would be admitted to the show. Sosnosky did this and more kids came to the show than they did when he gave a free performance. His house seats 360 and he collected 615 pennies.

The result was a well filled house for the remaining weeks that the chapterplay was shown and an exhibitor so well pleased with the results and the assistance of Mr. Allen that he wrote the exchange about it and at the end of his letter said: "Hooray for Mr. Allen and Universal."

Dunce Caps for Publicity

One of the most noteworthy exploitation accessories ever devised by Pyramid Pictures, Inc., for one of their productions was the conical dunce caps which were used with such effect in the exploiting of "What Fools Men Are," when that picture was given its premiere at Cameo Theatre, New York. Scores of men were hired to parade the streets, wearing these dunce caps, and gave the production a great deal of effective publicity. Subsequently similar dunce caps were used as effectively by other first runs.

As a result of this, and with a very keen desire to assist the exhibitor in the exploitation of this frolicsome flapper comedy-drama, Pyramid Pictures, Inc., has laid in an additional large supply of the dunce caps which they offer absolutely without cost to exhibitors booking this picture. The caps are black with lettering in bold orange, the combination being very attractive to the eye. They bear the legend, "Ask Any Woman 'What Fools Men Are.'" There is a space for theatre name and playdates, and as they come flat, they may be run through a press for imprinting this information.

The wise exhibitor will get a quantity of these caps and will run a slide on his screen asking for twenty-five, fifty or a hundred kids to be his guests at the showing in return for a little frolic on the streets. Easy to get scores of kids with this bait. Then form them into a parade and let them march around town.

PONJOLA LOBBY BALLYHOO

Interest in First National's "Ponjola" took a decided boost when the management of the Vendome Theatre of Nashville, Tenn., inaugurated this barber stunt in the lobby. Anna Q. Nilsson's "coiffure" was the setyle after which the local belles had their curly locks modeled

Holyoke Adopts Peggy

Holyoke, Mass., has adopted New York's Darling, meaning of course that Baby Peggy has scored again in her initial feature production, "The Darling of New York."

George A. Miller, Universal exploiter is partly responsible for this because of his effect campaign for the picture. He tied up the Baby Peggy waltz and plastered the whole town with covers of the song as well as sending of pluggers who told about the showing at the Suffolk Theatre while they were pushing the song. He also tied-up with the town's two big department stores that were handling the Baby Peggy doll and in this connection secured several fine windows decorated with photos from the production and signs advertising the showing.

The result was that the Suffolk opened to the largest matinee in its history despite a ferocious New England storm. They had to turn away over five hundred admissions. The nights were all sold out too and the engagement had to be extended.

There are so many Baby Peggy brands of merchandise on the market it is no trouble to obtain a tie-up. There are dolls and many articles of wearing apparel for children.

New Prologue Stunt

In these days of super-showmanship the absolutely original stunt is a mighty hard thing to think of. When something new actually comes along it should be hailed with joy by the industry, for once tried and proven successful, a new stunt is bound to be taken up and utilized by hundreds of exhibitors.

Credit for springing "something new under the sun" is hereby given to George V. Holloway, manager of B. F. Keith's Hamilton Theatre at Broadway and 145th Street, New York City.

The special stunt which merited the praise in the opening remarks of this little article, consisted of a special prologue run in connection with the trailer on the picture.

Mr. Holloway's stunt is unique and novel in that the prologue did not precede the actual showing of the picture but was used one week in advance to herald the coming of "The Darling of New York." Six dancing girls were engaged and, under the direction of Harry Shaw, famous Keith presentation specialist, stepped through a fast little act with songs which ended in an announcement of the Baby Peggy picture. The girls were dressed up to represent Baby Peggy herself. The setting was a beautiful black plush drop, in back of which was a special back drop view of the sky-line of New York, the windows in the buildings dotted with twinkling lights.

At the conclusion of the act, as the lights faded out, the regular trailer of the picture was flashed on.

Oxen Painted to Order

Aiding the exploitation of First National's "Black Oxen" at the Loew State Theatre, Los Angeles, where Frank Lloyd's first independent First National Picture established records and held two weeks. Manager Bill Knotts of the local First National exchange hired a team of real oxen to carry the print of film from the exchange through the busy downtown traffic on the second Saturday of the run to the theatre.

Unable to get real black oxen, Mr. Knotts arranged with J. L. Johnston of the Frank Lloyd studio to spray two docile steers with lamp black water color, hitch them to a cart and have them transport the film down Olive Street from the exchange past the Biltmore Hotel, the Auditorium to Broadway and Fourth and thence up Broadway to Seventh Street where Manager John P. Goring and Dick Spier, advertising manager for Loew's State with several ushers awaited the delivery of the film.

At every corner on the way the oxen tied traffic in a knot and the efforts of the policemen to extricate them from the mass of automobiles, bicycles and pedestrians caused much comment, many newspaper pictures and considerable talk all of which helped at the box office, according to Mr. Goring.

Here's a Good One

Harry Brouse, proprietor of the Imperial Theatre, of Ottawa, staged some effective boosting for "David Copperfield" as the feature attraction at the theatre during the week of March 10. On the Friday afternoon previous to the engagement, a special private screening was held at the Imperial for every school teacher and clergyman in the city. Special invitations were extended to each school teacher to bring two of her pupils with her and much novelty was employed in the selection of the two scholars in various classrooms, all of which assisted materially in drawing attention to the picture. In some instances, the classrooms conducted popularity contests of their own and the boy or girl receiving the largest number of votes from schoolmates were given "the trip to the theatre." An essay contest was also conducted for cash and other prizes during the engagement in co-operation with The Ottawa Journal and special display space was also used to good effect.

CY T H E R E A

AN unusually complete and helpful exhibitors' service book has been prepared for Cosmopolitan's picture, THE GREAT WHITE WAY, based on H. C. Witwer's story, "Cain and Mabel." On the front cover, which is printed in black and red, is a scene from the prize fight, from the rehearsal of the "Follies" chorus and caricatures by the various cartoonists who appear, incidentally, in the film. The inside cover page is devoted to a detailed account of the story, the second page contains the cast and pictures of the stars and many notable writers, artists, fight promoters and others who figure in the incidental action. Another page contains a night photograph of the great crowds that thronged the Cosmopolitan Theatre for the first midnight showing of "The Great White Way."

Two pages are devoted to reviews of "The Great White Way," and four pages to stories for motion picture editors of newspapers.

The advertising cuts are most attractive and are unique in conception and in execution. Some of the advertisements employ the silhouette.

AWAKE to the possibilities of current events in live advertising, the management of the Lyric Theatre, New York, inserted an ad in the papers offering $200 in cash to the famous "Bob Haired Bandit" who has been active in Brooklyn for several months, if she would attend the opening of THY NAME IS WOMAN and write a 300 word impression.

The money was to be paid in any way suggested by the bandit.

This novel ad caused considerable comment since the lady bandit finds a place on the front page of the New York papers almost daily.

ADVERTISING AIDS

A PRESS SHEET is being prepared by the Warner Brothers publicity staff for THE MARRIAGE CIRCLE, the latest Lubitsch production. Every angle of the story has been considered with the purpose of establishing every conceivable merchant tie-up and suggesting a variety of lobby displays that will be unusual and will at the same time immediately suggest the text of the picture. A maximum of newspaper stories, that should help the exhibitor get space in the local papers, have also been prepared.

The campaign will abound in attractive posters of all sizes and colors each carrying a different appeal, yet all emphasizing the name of the production and the prominent stars among which are Florence Vidor, Monte Blue and Marie Provost.

R. C. GARY, Universal Exploiteer, operating in the Wisconsin territory in the interests of THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME, is responsible for one of the most unusual exploitation ideas ever put into effect. In his campaign for the Rialto Theatre, Marinette, Wis., Mr. Gary secured the cooperation of Werner M. Schomaker, Mayor of Marinette, who caused a proclamation to be published in the newspapers over his name and seal.

The proclamation calls upon the citizens of the city to respond to the "Better Pictures Day" movement which was started by Universal. The object of the movement is to place the picture industry on a higher plane and co-operate with patrons in making pictures of a higher educational and moral standard.

The proclamation was only one of several advertising mediums used but its punch put the picture over with great success.

THERE are press books and press books but the new one issued by Universal in Japanese is the last word. It is printed in color and contains scenes from many of the latest releases together with photos of popular players. Practically all the text is in Japanese.

THE exhibitor will profit by using ads outlined in press sheets. The Hodgkinson ads shown below are good examples.

"Can't go wrong on Meighan"

D. F. Wolfe, Princess Theatre, Lansing, Iowa

No, sir, you can't go wrong on Thomas Meighan either. He's the best box-office male star on the screen today. Every picture he ever made is a big profit-winner for the exhibitor. If you want to make sure of the crowds and the cash, book Meighan—any Meighan picture. Your Paramount exchange has perfect prints and a complete line of advertising aids. Here's what other exhibitors find:

"THE MIRACLE MAN"

—A splendid picture, full of absorbing interest. Should please all seeing it. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

"IF YOU BELIEVE IT, IT'S SO"

—Like all other Meighan's, it draws the crowd and keeps them entertained. Seven reels.—Amsberry & Leuzinger, Carthage theatre, Carthage, S. D.—Small town patronage.

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN"

—The slogan, "You can't go wrong on Meighan" still holds good. He goes over better for me than any other star. He just acts natural and you can't help but like him. Cast hard to beat. Print good.—D. F. Wolfe, Princess theatre, Lansing, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

"THE NE'ER DO WELL"

—Good feature. Moral tone very good and is suitable for Sunday. Draw farmers and merchants in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travell, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

"THE CITY OF SILENT MEN"

—Well, well, I never have played a bad Meighan picture yet and this one, boys, is sure fine. I sure wish some or all of our screen opponents could have seen this. It would teach them a lesson they need. Five reels. Reels in good shape.—G. L. Blasingame, Halls theatre, Halls, Tenn.—General patronage

"BACK HOME AND BROKE"

—Oh, boy, this is one picture. I had old people out on this one that never came to a show, simply because of Thomas Meighan. "Good luck star" is right. I can always bank on a crowd when I have Meighan. It's simply a dandy, clean and entertaining picture. Book it and step on it. It's worth it.—L. E. Gray, Movie theatre, Drayton, N. D.—General patronage.

"THE BACHELOR DADDY"

—The best bet yet. Pleased 100 per cent and people still laughing and talking about it. Remark to one man that I heard the kids shouting lustily and he replied: "Kids, hell! It was us grown-ups that was shouting." Play this one sure. Seven reels.—J. W. Woodman, Gem theatre, Frederick, S. D.—General patronage.

"WOMAN-PROOF"

—They liked it. No squawks and it did a nice business so there you are. Used everything for advertising. Had good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

"CAPPY RICKS"

—Had some of my patrons tell me this was the best I ever ran. Think they were stretching it a bit. Very good but not that good. Six reels.—D. F. Wolfe, Princess theatre, Lansing, Iowa.—General patronage.

"THE MAN WHO SAW TOMORROW"

—A good picture. Well received. Film in good condition. Have had no bad film from Paramount in a long time. Seven reels.—School theatre, Denmark, S. C.—Small town patronage.

ROGERS-PATHE COMEDY BREAKS RECORD

'Two Wagons—Both Covered' Plays for Two Weeks at California

THE honors for what is said to be an unprecedented occurrence in the realm of short subjects, falls to "Two Wagons—Both Covered," a Tried and Proved burlesque on "The Covered Wagon."

"Two Wagons—Both Covered" lays its claim to Tried and Proved honors on volume of bookings since its initial release by Pathe. It has played in a great number of houses but it was not until it reached the California Theatre in San Francisco that it attracted phenomenal attention to itself.

It happens that the week selected for the showing of the picture, the feature on the program was a very weak and inadequate attraction. The manager looked with gloom upon the business prospects for the week, for he had not figured that his two-reeler would be able to pull things through for him. Yet that is precisely what happened.

"Two Wagons—Both Covered" created such a sensation at the California that the aggregate business at the end of its run showed it had broken the house records. But it did more than that. It became so talked about in the vicinity that Manager Nat Holt was forced to put the picture on for another week after it had finished its run and had been withdrawn, so persistent was the demand from his patrons.

What is more, the film was reviewed in the Los Angeles Express with the dignity and space usually accorded the feature and the reviewer, Charles Goss, boldly stated that the picture is "so meritorious as to steal first place honors on the California bill from an excellent feature picture."

What is more, the presentation was accompanied by an extensive exploitation campaign of feature proportions. Throughout the week prior to the opening, over a hundred banners announcing the coming engagement of the comedy at the California were prominently displayed on the outside of jitneys and other autos traveling through San Francisco's shopping and theatrical district.

TAKING IT OUT ON BUDDY

To lively incidents like this may be attributed the popularity of Universal's "The Flirt," an old and unquestioned Tried and Proved picture

'Save Them from an Untimely Death'

THE firm of Goldstein Brothers, with its sixteen theatres, stands for Tried and Proved Pictures. It is so stated in its advertising and in its program for the Palmer Theatre of Palmer, Mass.

"A Tried and Proved Show of 100 Per Cent Features," is the announcement to its patrons.

Manager H. A. Chenoweth declares the week's program has been tried by leading theatres country wide.

It has been Proved by capacity crowds to their satisfaction for their good cash.

Cash, the manager continues, spells satisfaction, approval, joy and admiration.

What is being done by Mr. Chenoweth is being done by many other exhibitors throughout the country.

"Tried and Proved" is positive and definite.

It means that the productions coming within that division have been given the seal of the public's approval.

Another New England exhibitor of pictures writes to say "Amen" to our leading article in the issue of March 8 entitled "Save Them from an Untimely Death."

The writer is not desirous of showing first run pictures. He says that in the last five years there have been produced many pictures "excellently adapted" to his needs, but again and again exchanges reply to his inquiries that "That picture is no longer available."

It is pointed out by our correspondent that if the distributors will make it a point to keep on hand prints of some of the outstanding successes of previous years not only will a favor be done their customers but there will be provided no excuse for the formation of companies designed particularly to provide what commonly is known as non-theatrical subjects.

The great point to be remembered is that a good picture does not die. Every picture is new to the man who has not seen it.

Every worthwhile production is entitled to "run its course," to reach all the photoplay public.

If the good pictures are kept in circulation right up to the saturation point it will have a beneficial effect upon the producer of indifferent pictures.

It will mean that in making pictures there will be a realization they cannot be booked because they are new but because they have merit.

'TO HAVE AND TO HOLD' HIGHLY PRAISED

*One of Few Costume Plays Pulling
Well in Small Towns*

TO Have and to Hold," the Paramount feature starring Betty Compson and Bert Lytell is more than holding its own in the race for box office records. The film was first released in November 1922, and the fact that it is still drawing special comment from exhibitors who are just booking it, or running it for a second time, is proof enough of the power of a good picture to do good business despite its age.

The picture is a costume play and it is commonly admitted that this type of story often has difficulty in getting across to a great portion of audiences. That this one can capably surmount this difficulty is attested to by the enthusiastic reports from exhibitors who admit that their audiences are not usually very strong for costume pictures.

There can be no doubt that a great deal of the success of the film is due to the work of the two stars, for in speaking of the picture, exhibitors have especially indicated the appreciation which their patrons showed for the splendid performance of both Bert Lytell and Betty Compson.

Perhaps the most concrete way of indicating what is thought of this Tried and Proved Picture is to reprint the actual written opinion of some exhibitors who have commented on it.

When the film showed at the Star Theatre in Hay Springs, Neb., the manager said of it: "It is a very fine production. A costume picture, it is true, but beautifully photographed and well directed. When a costume play pleases our patrons like this one did you may be sure it is practically a one hundred per cent production."

The report from the Hudson Theatre in Rochester, New York, said in part: "This is a good picture and one of the few costume pictures that pleased. I had put off playing it but after I had seen it, I felt I gave my patrons a real treat."

This report corresponds to others which indicate that the picture is a big drawing card.

TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES

'Drifting'

Opium Drama Released by Universal

BRIEF: Cassie Cook, engaged in selling opium, becomes remorseful and wishes to save her chum from the habit, decides to leave China. She wins the confidence of a white man in Hang Chow who tells her he is there to fight the evil. Cassie feels like a cheat and decides to betray her comrades. A fight ensues between the two factions from which Cassie emerges with a clean and honorable love.

THE life of the Orient is a never failing source of interest to the movie public, and Priscilla Dean is a well-liked star when it comes to "atmosphere" stories. These two facts explain readily enough, therefore, why this picture is still the subject of lively bookings and why it is being shown for a second time in some of the best houses in the country.

To arouse the desire to see the film, the stills may be used to excellent advantage in arranging a lively lobby display. Nothing could more truly suggest the atmosphere of the picture than these stills which tell at a glance what may be looked for in the way of entertainment.

To attract the attention for a distance it might be wise to hang dozens of Japanese lanterns of as many bright colors as you can secure, above the entrance of the theatre. Not only will the colors get the eye, but the Oriental suggestion will immediately be conveyed by the lanterns.

You can give the showing some splendid advance publicity from your own screen a week or more in advance of the play date. Here is one good way of getting this attention. Use a slide worded something like this: "How many words can you spell from the word 'D-r-i-f-t-i-n-g,' the Universal-Jewel coming to this theatre (date). Two admission tickets will be given to the person turning in the largest list at the box office."

[This award can be anything you see fit, and the contest should be followed up in your newspaper advertising. You might also arrange to have merchants in the vicinity carry ads of the same nature. To tie-up with some product of their own they might offer prizes along different lines.

You might arrange, too, to have the druggist make a display of incense burners and have the display illustrated with stills and posters from the picture. This too, will immediately tie-up with the Oriental atmosphere and suggest the theme of the story.

'A Dangerous Adventure'

Jungle Love Released by Warner

BRIEF: Two girls and their uncle go into Africa in quest of a buried treasure. They encounter wild animals, terrible natives and rampaging storms but they escape them all and are brought back by their sweethearts who have traveled to their rescue. Directed by Sam Warner.

TAG a key with a number, and put it away where no one but yourself can learn what the number is. The key will be one used to open a large treasure chest which you have on display in the lobby. The person holding the number which coincides with the one on the key will receive the contents of the chest a brand new ten dollar bill. The only way in which a patron can secure a number is to purchase a ticket to a performance of "A Dangerous Adventure."

Here you have the idea for an exploitation gag which carries publicity for the showing of the Warner production in two ways. You are inciting the urge to attend by the idea of a substantial reward for the lucky patron, and at the same time you are providing a fitting lobby display in the form of a treasure chest which should be arranged to look as genuine as possible to convey the impression that this is the very chest upon which the story of the picture depends.

Since a number of the scenes feature wild animals and their habits you have a strong appeal to the school children on this score.

'FLIRT' STRONG ATTRACTION IN SMALL TOWNS

Even the newer Booth Tarkington pictures can't shut out the old ones. As a matter of fact it might be that the appearance of the new pictures has been responsible for a greater interest in this author which accounts for the growing popularity of his pictures be they new or old.

"The Flirt" is a real old Universal picture and is Tried and Proved in every sense of the word—in its box office drawing power, its ability to draw well on a repeated booking, and the number of bookings which it has to its credit.

It is now having its run with the small town houses whose patronage is general and managers of these theatres reported splendid success with the film. It ran recently at the Maxime Theatre in Crosland, Mich., and according to the manager the patrons were very much pleased with the film. Several of those who came to the theatre stopped to tell how much they enjoyed the picture and how grateful they were for the showing.

A very similar state of affairs obtained when the picture showed at the Whynot Theatre in Greenfield, Ind. As a matter of fact during its run the weather was very unfavorable, yet it drew very gratifying crowds.

'Lawful Larceny'

Vampire Love Released by Paramount

BRIEF: A modern vampire who runs a gambling house with a male partner, who directs the victims to the house, ruins Andrew Darsen financially while his wife is in Europe. When she returns she hears all and determines on revenge. She goes to the gambling house and succeeds in ensnaring the vampire's partner by which means she wins back her husband's fortune, and regains her own happiness.

A LAVISH display of exquisite clothes, and elaborate interior sets characterize this story of the modern Cleopatra which has found a very ready audience among a wide range of audiences, especially in the smaller town where this type of picture always goes big. Up to date its record of prolonged runs puts it among the foremost Tried and Proved Pictures.

And always, wherever it has shown, there has been a concentrated advertising campaign to back them up. A very helpful aid in this connection is a form of teaser ad printed on glazed cardboard. This should bear the message: "Wanted—Information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the man or woman who robbed Hepburn's safe. See 'Lawful Larceny' at the.....Theatre next week for complete details."

Some real selling ads of various sizes have been prepared by the Paramount publicity department, and are contained in the press book. They emphasize the various phases of the story and are pictorially so attractive that they would be sure to arouse interest wherever they are used. They suggest at a flash the highlights of the picture in a very attractive manner. They are available in mat form at the various exchanges.

Then, too, there are the posters which may be profitably used for advertising purposes as well as for lobby decorations. They radiate the punch and appeal of the picture in bold bright colors that force the attention.

Suggested letter and post card forms are also at the disposal of the exhibitor who will find them valuable if he has a mailing list or can secure one. Material that comes through the mails always receives more dignified attention than paper handed to you on the street, besides which if it comes through the mail it is sure to get directly into the home where it will be seen not by one but by many.

The message contained in these need not be long. Something like this will do very nicely. "Dear Miss....., A new Paramount picture, 'Lawful Larceny' will be the feature at the.....Theatre for.....days. Hope Hampton, Nita Naldi, Lew Cody and Conrad Nagel are featured. Allan Dwan, who made 'Robin Hood' directed the picture which is undeniably one of the hits of the season."

While this message says nothing out of the way, it carries dignity and the impression that the person receiving it is being personally solicited to be present as a regular patron of the theatre.

New York,

Dear Sirs:

Please renew my subscription to the Trade Review and find enclosed check for two dollars ($2), payment for same.

The Box Office Reviews in your magazine are very helpful to an exhibitor, as we are sometimes unable to get press matter from the Exchanges on the very latest productions. I use the Box Office Reviews, or a part of them, for my program. I like the way the different attractions are written up by your critics.

Wishing you every success for the New Year, I am

Very truly yours,

GEORGE H. COOKE,

Mgr., Hub Theatre, Mill Valley,

It is letters like this one that convince us we are working ahead in the right direction. It is the purpose of the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW to render every possible service to exhibitors. Every department is planned to help the exhibitor get ahead. Now it is the Box Office Reviews that are singled out for special praise.

These are written not only so that they are easy and pleasant to read, but for the purpose of giving the exhibitor a straight-from-the-shoulder tip on every picture that is reviewed. When a man selects these reviews to reprint in his program, we know we are accomplishing our purpose—rendering real service to the exhibitor.

Play Pictures with a Reputation!

WHAT in the world is the use of playing unknown pictures when here are pictures that have been tried and proved 100% at box offices all over the country. When you play pictures with a reputation it means that ready-made audiences are waiting for them—it means that they can be easily exploited—and that you can make real money. These Jewels have a reputation for entertainment value and for making money. If you haven't played them, there is real money waiting for you. Now is the time!

'Merry Go Round'

Story of Nobility Released by Universal

BRIEF: An Austrian noble falls in love with a peasant, but his position forces him to marry a countess. Then comes the war. Nobility disappears, the countess dies, and fate again throws the lovers together. Now it is possible for them to marry and they find happiness together.

SO many theatre managers are finding that they have to rebook "The Merry Go Round" in order to give the portion of their patrons, who couldn't get there the first time, a chance to see the picture, that bookings are as lively as ever, and the film belongs among the foremost Tried and Proved Pictures.

Probably one of the big reasons for the popularity of the film is its easy adaptability to clever exploitation stunts. Despite the fact that for several months exhibitors in all parts of the country have been active on all sorts of schemes to give the picture a great deal of publicity, there seem still to be a quantity of new ones that are entirely original.

Here's one that should occasion a great deal of comment if you can manage to pull it. If you stand in with the police—and if you don't you should as soon as possible—get permission to erect on each of the corners leading to your theatre, a traffic post, on the top of which should be a rather large waterproof pin-wheel. The posts should be made of wood with a fairly heavy base. On the post should be a sign printed in large letters with the words: "Turn here to see 'Merry Go Round' Theatre."

Then, too, you can put over a whale of a stunt with the taxi stations. Get a square of wood a foot and a half and in large letters have printed along each side, the name of your theatre. In the center of this base erect a round stick a few feet high. On the top of the stick should be a large sign on which is printed "Our taxis take you direct to 'Merry Go Round.'" This should be printed on both sides so that passersby going in all directions will notice them.

You can easily arrange with the taxi company for permission to place these signs at their stands. Besides giving you publicity, it carries the suggestion that with very little effort you can be conveyed to a place where there will be furnished some real entertainment.

A number of exhibitors have found that an attractive lobby did wonders in interesting the patrons in the picture. The film suggests any number of these, some of the most effective being those in which the marquee plays the big part in the display.

By the use of compo and beaver board, you can get your carpenter to make a very substantial merry go round. Cut-outs from the twenty-four sheets will supply you with just the right figures to place in the merry go round. Then get plenty of colored flags and put them all around so that as the thing revolves (and this can be easily arranged by means of an electric battery and some simple wiring), the flags will blow and thus attract further attention.

You might also be able to secure a small merry go round, the kind they drive about on small wagons, and on which children ride, and make that the central figure in your lobby. This should also be brightly decorated with flags and streamers, and in addition you might arrange to give children free rides on it. This will keep a crowd in front of your theatre at all times, and will certainly make a marked impression on prospective patrons.

'De Luxe Annie'

Crook Drama

Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Julie Kendal, loving wife of a devoted husband, is struck on the head and becomes an aphasia victim. While in this condition she becomes the confederate of a crook who practices the old badger game. She one day strays to the town in which she lives, and all unwittingly is led by a chain of events to her own home. There her husband and a doctor friend find her. By means of an operation she is restored to health, and she and her husband are happily reunited.

OF all Norma Talmadge's earlier successes, this one is credited to be her most notable and in the role of De Luxe Anne she has endeared herself to a great many audiences.

Besides the popularity of this star there is also a contributing factor in the form of Eugene O'Brien who is her leading man. There is a great deal of publicity to be gained from featuring these two names in conjunction with a lobby display in which studio pictures of the production are given a great deal of prominence.

These stills should be attractively mounted and placed both at the entrance to the lobby and in the lobby proper. If you can get frames for them, so much the better for they become more compelling when they can show off to better advantage.

You should also get some stills to place in windows of shops in the community. Several of these show Norma Talmadge in some of the elaborate gowns which appear in the picture and among gorgeous settings. Hence they would be specially suited to apparel shops, or furniture stores where the tie-up would be very obvious.

The mystery aspect may also be profitably played up in an exploitation stunt of this nature. Have posters printed announcing a reward for the capture and conviction of "De Luxe Annie" and her slick accomplice. These posters should be given prominence in all parts of the town for several days in advance of the showing, to insure impressing the name on the public.

The posters which have been prepared by Selznick have all the necessary elements for arousing the curiosity and creating a desire to see the film. They should therefore be used both in the lobby and in the various shop windows where they will be easily noticed and will do the most good.

AUDIENCE APPROVES 'PAWNED'

"This is the kind of picture which builds up business and at the same time leaves a profit in the till," said an exhibitor recently in talking of Selznick's "Pawned," a Tried and Proved Picture starring Tom Moore and Edith Roberts.

The exhibitor was H. H. Francisco of the Terrace Theatre, Kendall, Wis. He ran the picture for several showings at each of which he succeeded in packing the house. After each performance, patrons stopped to tell him how much they enjoyed the film which got over big because of the surprises, thrills and suspense which it contains.

Other exhibitors have reported similar success with this easily exploited film.

'The Flirt'

Society Love

Released by Universal

BRIEF: The Madison family is short of money, though Mr. Madison's name and credit are good. Cora, one daughter, is lazy and selfish, but pretty; the other is a reflection of her gentle mother. Cora's flirtations with the men of the town, the struggle of the father to maintain the station of living, how he is involved in a confidence game, and the eventual triumph of love, makes a blending of drama and comedy.

HERE is a film whose record stands ready to attest to its place among Tried and Proved Pictures—it has been booked about 7,000 times. If properly handled it can be depended on to make money for practically every exhibitor. A little originality will go a great way toward making the public take notice and "The Flirt" presents excellent opportunity for that sort of thing.

In the first place every exhibitor whether he is running this picture for the first time or as a rebooked attraction should lay stress on Booth Tarkington, the author. The picture was made from the book of the same name and has had a tremendous sale. Coincident with the appearance of the picture, Grossett and Dunlap, the book publishers, put out a special motion picture edition illustrated with stills from the film.

Such an addition makes exploitation by means of a book tie-up just that much more useful. Arrange with the book dealer or dealers in your vicinity for the sale of this special edition at the time of the showing. You might even allow him to place a table with a few copies in the lobby of the theatre. The table should be made attractive with large stills or posters. People coming into the theatre might stop to glance at the books, become interested, and decide to buy a copy. A sign telling where they are for sale will give the book dealer sufficient good reason for consenting to tie-up with you.

Another good stunt is to get a large quantity of cheap, black masks, on which appear the name of the production, the name of your theatre, and the playdates. Arrange to have these distributed either through some local dealer or at the theatre. This should be done several days in advance of the showing. The children will be delighted with these and there is no doubt that in carrying them about with them they will give your showing plenty of publicity where it will do the most good.

Another way to get the whole town talking is to have a red card the size of an ordinary post card printed in white with the words "Beware of 'The Flirt.'" Have some small boys or men go from house to house and leave one at every door. You will soon find that every one is all "pepped" up about the mysterious "Flirt."

'The Old Homestead'

Small Town Life

Released by Paramount

BRIEF: The village vamp induces the town weakling, who works in the general store, to steal for her. Suspicion falls on Reuben, son of Uncle Joshua, and he flees from town. The storekeeper, who holds a mortgage on Uncle Josh's house, has decided to put it under the hammer because the mortgage can't be paid off. Through a round of dramatic events the facts are revealed as they really are, and everything turns out happily for all concerned.

THERE seems to be something in this picture that has endeared it to the sophisticated city audience as well as to the simple, small town folk, and it is for this reason the picture has met with an almost phenomenal success.

James Cruze is the man who is responsible for the production, and due to his more recent successes, he has crowned himself with new laurels which are reflecting back and making this film as popular as ever. And certainly this popularity is not undeserved. The hurricane scene in "The Old Homestead" is a miracle of fine film work and would give even the most hard-boiled a genuine thrill.

This is the real highlight of the film and should be made important when the exploitation campaign is begun. The way to do this is to play up the posters which feature these scenes and give them wide distribution in every possible avenue.

Work with the charitable organization in your neighborhood and benefit it while you gain publicity for yourself. The way to arrange this is to get them to adopt as a slogan for raising funds some such lines as these: "A coin or two in this box will help us save 'The Old Homestead' for some poor unfortunates." Almost everyone will consent to having a charity box in his store in a prominent place and the title of your picture will thus also receive important attention.

The lobby of the theatre should be decorated to give the effect of an old homestead. This could be done by covering the posts with imitation shingles, putting up compo walls to resemble the outside of the house, and placing cut-out figures at the front of the door of the house to give the thing a realistic appearance.

You might even arrange with the local furniture dealer to have him put some furniture within these compo walls to make it look like a sitting room.

'By Right of Purchase'

Society Drama

Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Margot Hughes, a society butterfly, consents to marry a man of wealth and understanding and be his wife in name only for three years as a sort of trial marriage. She continues her flirtations with a former admirer but at the same time she is learning to love her husband. She does not tell him so, however, and things are going from bad to worse until a friend intervenes and restores happiness to both of them.

HERE is another Norma Talmadge-Eugene O'Brien revival with a story and a record that should make it immediately popular again. The film was first shown in February, 1922, and judging from its success following that date there should be no difficulty in re-viving its popularity on a second showing.

It is the sort of thing that strikes the popular note squarely. The story is one of romance and intrigue, the principals are charming and easy, indeed, to look at, and the clothes worn by Miss Talmadge would gladden the heart of any woman.

All of which adds to the salability of the film because of the ease with which it may be exploited. Stills from the picture used in the lobby and studio shots on attractive posters should immediately arouse interest in the film. Besides there are the names of the two stars. Not only has Norma Talmadge a large following, but Eugene O'Brien also has many friends among the Great American Public. The dope on this picture, then, is to play up these two as big as possible. Give their names prominence every plausible place.

A good stunt might be to get a great number of telegram blanks and on each type-write a message inviting the addressed person to attend the showing at your theatre. These may be delivered by a few small boys and should be sent to your personal mailing list. Those destined for women patrons should be signed with Eugene O'Brien's name while the messages which the men will receive should appear to come from Norma Talmadge.

You should also arrange for an attractive window display of women's clothes in the foremost shop of the vicinity. Besides an elaborate display of the newest styles there should be a large number of stills of Miss Talmadge in her most elaborate costumes, and with these a neat but conspicuous sign reading: "On the ... floor you will find a large selection of clothes like these, any of which are yours 'By Right of Purchase.'"

Gloria Swanson Superb in 'Humming Bird'

Critics Laud This Paramount Montmartre Story

FOR sometime past the critics have not been overkind to Gloria Swanson whom they accused of being capable only of wearing beautiful clothes to decidedly good advantage. But at her dramatic ability all were wont to scoff.

But Gloria has finally redeemed herself. Having seen her in "The Humming Bird" all are now anxious to make retribution and offer humble apologies for a hasty judgment.

With one or two exceptions this is precisely what they have done. A more favorable general opinion could not be hoped for. The Syracuse Telegram has this to say:

If a cinema can be spiritual—if it can reach the heart (or what passes for the heart) of a cynical and hardened movie reporter, then "The Humming Bird" is spiritual. The secret of the brilliant success which Miss Swanson scores is her sincerity of treatment. You find the same sincerity in the admirable casting and in Olcott's direction, and this goes far to redeem a story which might otherwise fail to impress.

The reviewer of the Chicago Post is another who makes apology for his previous belief that "Gloria Swanson was a cold proposition, a beautiful model for stunning clothes" and joins the ranks of ardent admirers of real ability. He says:

She cannot be accused of being cold in this picture. She makes Toinette a personality, a temperamental girl. You think we think only of Gloria. Well, she so dominates this picture that even a very good supporting cast receives but slight attention. Edward Burns seems a rather unemotional lover but perhaps it is in comparison.

"Miss Swanson's masquerade is one that will please her admirers," says the Newark, N. J., News Reviewer. Especially her interpretation of an Apache living in the Montmartre underworld seems particularly commendable to this reviewer. He says further:

She has a tender side as well, as is shown in her love for an American and her care in nursing him to health. Sidney Olcott has obtained many fine effects in lighting, photography and action. The scenes on the French battlefield being among the most illusive ever seen on a screen here.

The critic of the New York Tribune records her surprise and delight in the film which far surpassed the stage version according to her opinion. She, too, takes occasion to comment on the remarkably fine work on Miss Swanson as well as on the finish and delicacy which marks the direction.

'Atmosphere' the Motif in 'Cameo Kirby'

Fox Film Accorded Praise for Realism and Novelty

THE story is cleverly complicated but never confusing, and the film has been given a careful, accurate and colorful production," says the reviewer of the Cleveland Plain Dealer in his comment on Fox's "Cameo Kirby," a melodrama of the old school, by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leone Wilson.

That critics from other papers concur in this opinion may be seen in an excerpt from the Los Angeles Express, which says:

Old time melodramas are apt to seem stilted to modern theatre goers whether revived on stage or screen. But "Cameo Kirby," which was one of the most popular productions of our American stage lends itself admirably to the screen and John Gilbert, who has the title role in the Fox photoplay, is exactly suited to the part. He is dashing, upstanding and dramatically alert to most of the finer points in the characterization.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger also seemed to be more seriously attracted to the portrayal of Kirby by Gilbert than to the film as a whole. It says:

John Gilbert has an appealing smile and an altogether romantic appearance.

Says The Indianapolis Star in respect to the effect of realism created by the film:

All that remains to re-create the Dixie atmosphere is for the management to serve mint julep at intermissions and to permit the ushers to drop their r's. . . . Fox has provided the story with a colorful atmosphere and the cast is made up of some first rate actors. John Gilbert is a gracious Southern gentleman. His work as Cameo Kirby is about the best he has ever done.

The reviewer on the Newark News evidently was much pleased and impressed with the play, for he has gone on to a lengthy exhortation of scenes, the story, and atmosphere of the film. He says: "In its pictured form the play has greater spaciousness than could be given it on the regular stage. Its depiction of Lightning, one of the faster stern wheel boats plying the Mississippi in ante-Civil War days, and of open and interior scenes of New Orleans coupled with the costumes lend it an air of novelty and help to create an atmosphere that continually interests the spectator. That interest is heightened by the tragic and interesting developments."

John Gilbert makes up so well as Kirby that he is very satisfying. Allen Hale brings a bearing and ease to his work and Miss Gertrude Olmsted's beauty minimizes certain amateurish qualities in her acting.

KANSAS M. P. T. O. EXPECT RECORD CONVENTION

Exhibitors' Midnight Frolic Will Be Feature of Meeting

A SURPRISE, "The Exhibitors' Midnight Frolic," not only promises to be a feature of the convention of the M. P. T. O. Kansas at Emporia, Kas., April 1 and 2, but may become an annual addition to the convention. An elaborate thirty-page program of the convention is being prepared this week by C. E. Cook, business manager, and a new high mark in attendance appears certain.

The "surprise" will be staged in the Strand theatre, Emporia, about midnight, Tuesday, April 1, exhibitors only participating. Mr. Cook will leave for Emporia in a few days to complete arrangements for the meeting. The business program involves the following:

Discussion of co-operation with national association of broadcasters in combating music tax and the appointment of a legislative committee to work toward obtaining an amendment to the copyright act.

A report of the activities of the Kansas City Joint Board of Arbitration during the last six months.

Discussion of complaints pertaining to poor prints issued by exchanges.

Discussion of amendments to by-laws.

A discussion: "What makes high film rental—competitive bidding or excessive production cost?"

Approval or disapproval of a central shipping bureau of films and accessories.

Adoption of plan of co-operation with parent-teacher associations and aiding in public service work.

Formulation of plans to aid exhibitors in Kansas oil towns where business is depressed.

Free luncheons and a free banquet are among the features of the meeting. An effort will be made to obtain a prominent speaker who is not connected with the industry or politics, in the effort to obtain a frank expression of opinion regarding the type of pictures and entertainment most desired by the public.

DOUGLAS MACLEAN PICTURES FOR IDEAL FILMS

A bomb-shell was exploded in film circles on both sides of the Atlantic recently when contracts involving approximately half-a-million were signed by Harry Rowson, president of the Ideal Films, Ltd., and J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., by which the British rights to all Douglas MacLean productions were taken over by the Ideal.

Aside from the financial consideration it is an especially interesting transaction in view of the rabid attacks that have been made on American films abroad lately. A determined propaganda campaign has been run in all British publications to try and "sell" exhibitors on the English productions. The contract for the MacLean productions, coming right in the middle of the campaign, probably will prove a serious blow to certain British interests.

UNIVERSAL TO PRODUCE THIRTY SIX FEATURES A YEAR

Universal has definitely lined up its product for next season, and not only has practically completed most of next fall's pictures but is all set on its entire release schedule from August to January. This information comes from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, who now is at Universal City, Cal., at the helm of the greatest production drive ever experienced by Universal, and probably by any other company.

Universal is increasing its Jewel or high-class picture output from twelve to thirty-six a year. Next year's output, to be known as the Perfect Thirty-Six, is already well under way, many of the pictures having been completed and several of them having already arrived in the East. This has been made possible only by Laemmle's constant presence at the big studio plant the last three months, and his far sighted studio enlargement activities. "U" City has 18 companies at work.

ALICE JOYCE TO APPEAR IN ENGLISH PICTURE

Alice Joyce, it has just been announced, is sailing for England within the next two weeks, to assume the starring role in "The Passionate Adventurer," the first of a series of productions to be made in England under the supervision of Myron Selznick for release through the Selznick Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Selznick sailed last Saturday, to make preliminary arrangements for starting production immediately. Marjorie Daw, who will be one of the featured players in the picture is also on the way abroad.

MABEL TO VISIT NEW YORK

Mabel Normand, the Mack Sennett, Associated Exhibitors star, will arrive in New York in a few days for a visit with friends here. This announcement was made at the Associated offices this week. Miss Normand, it is understood, will make a personal appearance in connection with the showing of her latest picture, "The Extra Girl," at the Branford Theatre, Newark, during the week of March 22, and may possibly appear also at the showing in Passaic, N. J., March 29 and 30.

TO HONOR M. J. MINTZ

M. J. Mintz, president of the Cameo Music Publishing Company, will be the guest of honor at a banquet tendered him by his friends in the moving picture field to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of the "Thematic Cue Sheet," which is now part and parcel of the accessory list of every big producing company. By the Mintz process a big picture can be given a complete musical presentation without the musical director of a theatre spending hours and even days trying to obtain the proper musical refrain to correctly follow the picture.

Country Club" and "The Pianofends," in the latter of which twelve players performed on six instruments.

At no time were there less than ten or twelve companies in profitable operation.

Mr. Lasky entered partnership with Henry B. Harris, a stage producer and the owner of the Hudson Theatre.

The vaudeville manager conceived the plan of putting on the Folies Bergere in New York in what is now the Fulton Theatre. He brought the first cabaret, in fact he introduced the term, into America. Also he staged the first revue that New York had known up to that time.

The latter effort failed financially, and Mr. Lasky went back to the vaudeville stage.

It was not long after this that he became interested in pictures, an idea which slowly had been forming in his mind.

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was organized, with Samuel Goldwyn as business manager and executive and Cecil B. De Mille as production head. Arthur S. Friend, later to be treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky and the head of Distinctive, was the attorney for the company.

In a little plant in Los Angeles, a barn converted into offices and on a small stage, "The Squawman" with Dustin Farnum in the leading role was started. Mr. De Mille took up the study of picture technique with Oscar Apfel, the company's first director.

After the picture was completed there were some dark moments on account of laboratory troubles, but the situation was straightened out by "Pop" Lubin at his Philadelphia plant. The production was issued early in 1914 and was a success.

As set forth in the beginning of this story, Mr. Lasky at the inception of the company made it a rule to ask no director to undertake the production of a story unless the latter believed in it as a picture.

Ten years ago it was the usual thing for a home office to purchase a story and send it across the continent to the production forces, who would put it in work. It might be beyond the director's vision or not in it at all, but it had to be produced. Upon completion the film would be sent back east to be edited and titled.

Mr. Lasky inaugurated the policy of consulting with the director and he has never swerved from it. The directors who have served under him, and some of them have become famous during their service, have been appreciative of the consideration and have demonstrated it in many ways.

It was in 1916, nearly eight years ago, that the Lasky company was merged with Famous Players, Mr. Lasky becoming first vice president in charge of production.

Of his work in that capacity it is unnecessary to dwell at length here. It may be said in all truth it speaks for itself. He has been a most important factor in the building up of a great organization.

ELINOR GLYN SIGNED BY MAYER

Elinor Glyn, who has signed a contract with Louis B. Mayer to produce a series of specials, arrived in New York from England Tuesday abroad the Aquitania. Despite a drizzling rain and the knowledge that the censors of her native land had frowned upon "Three Weeks," the famous writer of love passion stories was in high spirits and announced that after a brief rest in New York, she would proceed at once to the Mayer studios in Hollywood to start work.

THE MODERN THEATRE

SAN FRANCISCO'S ALEXANDRIA THEATRE, DESIGNED BY REID BROTHERS

Alexandria a Monument to Egyptian Design

Unique Egyptian Structure Is a Notable Contribution to San Francisco's Chain of Motion Picture Palaces

THE Alexandria Egyptian Theatre, owned and built by George A. Oppenheimer and Alex E. Levin, and costing $350,000, is San Francisco's latest contribution to the chain of beautiful motion picture houses. The Alexandria has the distinction of being the only theatre in northern California with the Egyptian motif.

The dedication of the Alexandria was an event in motion picture circles. Officials of the city, including Mayor James Rolph, Jr., supervisors, and presidents of four improvement clubs, participated in the opening ceremonies. Throngs of people from all parts of the city, eager to see the new showhouse, blocked the streets, the assistance of special traffic policemen being necessary to handle the crowds.

Introducing a new idea in theatrical construction, the Alexandria marks a step beyond residential classification. At the very entrance the stamp of things Egyptian is unmistakable. Two guarding Sphinxes, with outstretched paws, are placed on each side of the outer lobby. From the grand foyer short tunneled entrances lead to the main auditorium. The theatre proper may also be entered from the rear of the raised seat section by means of a stairway leading from the grand foyer to the mezzanine with an entrance to the top rows.

While the Egyptian idea has been carried out everywhere the tones are subdued and in excellent taste. One of the most daring and successful decorative notes is seen in the enormous pillars in full relief at either side of the proscenium arch.

Mirrors are at every turn, reflecting the architectural details. An innovation is the modern stage device by which the stage, under control of concealed machinery, slides out over the orchestra pit revealing a special setting of black and gold, upon which Ben Black and his Band, an organization of syncopationists is presented.

UPON the side walls are pilasters with conventional Rameses heads. These are niched to enclose ornamental jars from which softly diffused lights radiate. A jar of exquisite design located in the lobby bubbles over with drinking water at the touch of a hidden spring. A beautiful domed ceiling resembles a huge inverted bowl.

Although the Alexandria seats 2,000 people, all of the seats are on one floor. The absence of a balcony gives the auditorium the effect of spaciousness and contributes materially to the value of ventilation. Loges and boxes are in a section which inclines easily from about the center of the auditorium to a comfortable altitude at the rear.

THE curtain is one of the distinctive attractions. It is cloth of silver with blue and pink tints playing in shimmering effects on it.

Alex E. Levin achieves an ambition in the Alexandria Egyptian Theatre. He has grown up with the motion picture business and during the construction of the theatre he put into it the result of years of experience, energy and inspiration. George A. Oppenheimer represents the kind of a man who brings brains and money into the business. As head of the organization, George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., he is distributor in California, Nevada, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands for Warner Brothers "Classics of the Screen." Together Oppenheimer and Levin have achieved something for the city of San Francisco as well as for the motion picture theatre business. Reid Brothers of San Francisco were the architects.

KUNSKY TO BUILD LARGE HOUSE IN DETROIT

Negotiations Already Completed for Work to Start in Summer

JOHN H. KUNSKY of Detroit, is to have another large theatre.

Negotiations were completed and leases signed, February 25, covering one of the largest plots of downtown property in the Motor City, which will give Kunsky a fourth large house in which to accommodate his extensive picture bookings. Already operating the Capitol, capacity 4,250, Madison, capacity 2,350 and Adams, 1,950, besides several large residential houses as well as other theatres in Detroit, the new theatre completes a string of downtown holdings which more firmly than ever place Kunsky in the foremost ranks not only of Detroit theatre operators, but in the country at large as well.

The new house, as yet unnamed, will occupy a site within a stones-throw of the other Kunsky houses about Grand Circus Park, the new business center of Detroit, and will seat more than 3500. The investment concerned amounts to better than $2,000,000.

Negotiations were successfully completed for the huge realty deal by Mr. Kunsky's associate, George W. Trendle, acting for Kunsky. Trendle has been the main figure in the consummation of the biggest theatre deals pulled off in Detroit during the past several years, and this latest involves the largest amount of money yet. Particularly outstanding has been Trendle's handling of the huge financial ventures of the Capitol and Madison.

With a frontage of 110 feet on Woodward, the town's main thoroughfare, and 400 feet on Elizabeth Street, there will be built in addition to the theatre itself, a modern office building with stores and shops occupying the first two floors. The building will be eight stories high. Work will begin during the coming summer, notice having been given already to all tenants occupying the present buildings on the site.

The theatre will be built under the supervision of C. Howard Crane, constructor and architect of the Music Box, New York, and who has been recently selected to draw the plans for the new Theatre Guild, New York. Crane, a Detroit man, has drawn the plans for all the Kunsky houses in Detroit, including the beautiful Capitol, and is widely known from coast to coast due to his activities as architect for several of the largest houses in the country, as well as his activities in London, England, where he is shortly to supervise the construction of a new house for English interests.

With the construction of the new house, Messrs. Kunsky and Trendle will be able to absorb for Detroit showing, the output of virtually every large producer, as well as having housing for first runs for the cream of the product of the independent producers. Its completion will also mark sufficient accommodation for years to come in the way of Detroit theatre. In accordance with the population, another house the size of the Kunsky theatre assuredly will over-seat to an unfortunately degree the motor city. The Kunsky deal effectually closes any thought of successfully operating any other new Detroit picture theatre, of which there has been talk for some time.

PROPER LENS IMPORTANT IN GOOD PROJECTION

In these days of keenest rivalry among moving picture theatres no detail which will make for a better show can afford to be overlooked by the enterprising exhibitor.

So much depends on the proper projection of the picture that a great deal of attention should be given to the selection of the proper lens in order to get the best possible effect out of every picture. Very often a beautifully photographed picture, excellent in shadings and scenic effects, is virtually ruined by poor projection.

Realizing the importance of having as nearly perfect a lens as it is possible to get, Bausch and Lomb have concentrated a great deal of time and attention on securing the best possible product. The results of this research work is the production of the Cinephor Lenses which have been designed to fulfill the four big requisites of lens perfection; definition, flatness of field, illumination and contrast between black and white.

PLEASURE INSURANCE

—THEATRE TICKETS—

—By Y. ECKIM—

DID you ever stop to think just how much of our daily life is based on tickets and how correct handling of them makes for smoothness while the slightest flaw simply ruins the day?

In the morning it is the laundry ticket before you have a clean collar, and then the ticket for breakfast, to say nothing of transfer tickets on the way to work. It is the shoe repair ticket, the street car ticket, the soda check, and then sometimes about 4:30 in the afternoon alas, the corner cop with his ticket. In order to arrange bail, sometimes it requires a pawn ticket.

But after all, the tickets that we pay most attention to are pleasure tickets. You know yourself that the railroad ticket in your vest pocket that is going to take you on your holiday finds a stealthy finger seeking it out a hundred times before it is used, just to be sure it is there.

That only happens once or a few times a year, while the pair of seats for the best girl and the best show in town are thought about, safely stowed away and often looked upon with an extreme sense of pleasure before they are used. If you do not believe me, ask any theatre manager why his most expensive seats are usually pale lavender paste boards. The answer is everyone vibrates to lavender.

This may seem a small matter, but the vital question is, "Are you taking into consideration even the small matters?"

When you have a long line waiting in front of your theatre, have you ever thought that the long restless chain represents a group of human beings seeking pleasure and that you, as their agent, ought to issue them the greatest pleasure insurance policy within your power. This consists of—a courteous cashier, the latest improved change maker, and efficient ticket chopper, a good quality ticket, and last but not least, a splendid good show. With this policy, you are assured of being one of the most successful "Pleasure Insurance Brokers" in your town.

CO-OPERATIVE POSTER SERVICE

Morris Cruhlack and Louis Sapir, owners of the Reliable Poster Mounting Company, of New York, who have been serving exchanges and exhibitors for ten years, have just finished two large orders of cut-outs for the "Telephone Girl Series" for F. B. O., and "The Gumps" for Universal.

The heads of this concern are glad to help exhibitors on new ideas for lobby display, special twenty-four sheets, and carry in stock cut-outs of a special three sheet on all serials, which can be used for full run of serials.

COOLING SYSTEM INSTALLED

Installation of a cooling system to cost $100,000 will be started shortly at the Palace Theatre of Dallas, Texas, John J. Friedl, director, announces. The work will be done by the Carrier Engineering Corporation. Operation of the plant will cost about $500 a week, Mr. Friedl said.

CHICAGO GETS MIGHTY WURLITZER ORGAN

Instrument Said to Be Largest of Its Kind in the World

THE mightiest pipe organ in the world made its debut in public on Sunday noon, March 2, when the Balaban and Katz, Chicago Theatre, unveiled its newest musical sensation during the regular bi-weekly Sunday noon organ recital by Jesse Crawford.

The "mighty voiced Chicago Theatre grande organ," has always been known as one of the world's organ marvels. Its single console, presided over by the gifted Mr. Crawford, has displayed musical resources that have astonished music lovers from all over the world. Now, however, Balaban and Katz announce that for over a year they have quietly been doubling the resources of the instrument, and have added a second console to the first.

Mr. Crawford will, of course, play the first console, and the second one, which will provide the coloring and accompaniment for his solo and concert work, will be played by his wife, Mrs. Jesse Crawford.

The entire organ equipment is from the factory of Wurlitzer, and marks a new epoch in organ building. The idea is said to have originated within the Balaban and Katz organization, and quietly worked out by them. It will require at least two years before competitors can possibly duplicate the idea even in appearance, it is declared by organ experts.

With both consoles in operation, it will be possible to produce every known tone and melody and effect, it is declared. After the first concert with the "Double Mighty Grande Chicago Theatre Organ," photographs and sketches will be available.

ELECTRIC SEAT FINDER PROVES EFFECTIVE IN PRACTICE

An indicator for vacant theatre seats is being offered to exhibitors by Wilfred L. Guerlin of New Orleans, La.

It is the general practice in motion picture theatres for ushers to hold back waiting patrons at the back aisles while another usher walks down the aisle and looks for vacant seats, and then walks part way back up the aisle until he reaches a point near enough to the usher at the rear so that he can see his frantic waving of hands and fingers indicating the number of seats vacant.

To do away with this slow and cumbersome system the indicator was devised. It consists of a box containing an electric battery wired to a number of small electric bulbs set in slots in the front face or side of the box. On top of the box are switches which the operator presses to illuminate as many lights as there are vacant seats.

The usher does not need to waste time in walking back and forth in the aisle as the ushers at the rear can readily see how many patrons can be seated by noting the number of lights illuminated in the indicator carried by the seat-searching usher.

Numerous tests and experiments as well as actual demonstrations in theatres during the running of the show has proved the efficaciousness of the seat finder. The device is something concerning which it might prove of advantage to showmen to inquire. If the seat finder inaugurates an era in which raucous impromptu races down the aisles are relegated to the limbo of the past, it will unquestionably receive a royal welcome.

TO INTRODUCE NON-REWIND

Edward C. Earle, representing Bioscope Improvement, Ltd., of Johannesburg, South Africa, and introducing the Way Non-Rewind, a device for the elimination of rewinding motion pictures, says his organization has placed an order with "The Pneumoelectric Corporation" of Syracuse, New York, to start the manufacture of the Way Non-Rewind in this country.

Does the Song Tie-up Strike a Box-Office Note

lisher. The publisher's branch can take care of all the routine work in connection with store tie-ups. The home office provides a great amount of advertising material for that purpose—window strips, chorus slips, special announcement slides, chorus slides, etc. And aside from this stock material, the publisher is often instrumental in devising special stunts. As, for example, when the publisher and McVicker's, Chicago, put over an effective campaign on "Big Brother." Thousands of window strips were distributed with the slogan, "Make This a 'Big Brother' Christmas," some talk about "Big Brothers" and a cut of the picture-song cover.

The music publishing business is one that requires tremendous exploitation campaigns and the heads know that they've got to spend to get. Give them the right kind of co-operation and their money will go to yet you money!

Yes, the song tie-up does help the exhibitor! But the song must be good and the exhibitor must be awake to its possibilities.

"THE HILL BILLY"

A motion picture written and adapted by Marion Jackson from a John Fox Jr. story.
Directed by George Hill. A Mary Pickford production.

THE CAST:

Emmy Lou Spence.....	Lucille Rickson

Aaron Spence.....	Ralph Yearsley

Tabb Tafel.....	Snitz Edwards

One of the most beautiful performances of recent times in the films is Jack Pickford's in "The Hill Billy," now at B. S. Moss's Broadway. We are going even farther than that and say that Mr. Pickford's work here is so finely timed and so wistfully appealing that we have decided there isn't another young man in pictures who has surpassed him this season in emotional pantomime. We think we never had seen Mary's brother in films before. Now the question arises as to why some one like Mr. Griffith doesn't take this lad and make another "Tol'ble David."

It seems rather improbable that a boy whose whole life has been so far removed from clod-hopping could step into the part of a long-haired mountain hick and act precisely like one. It is interesting to see a young man step out of a Stutz bear-cat and straddle a plow horse.

In story, "The Hill Billy" follows conventional lines, the hill billy, himself, developing rapidly into the abused hero early in the picture and rising gradually to grand acts of courage and sacrifice in the end. Still, suspense and gallantry are extremely well carried out. At the moment when Mr. Pickford picks up his shot gun and defends the pretty neighbor girl from the evil intent of her depraved cousin, everything in the world seems at stake. It is a picture which holds you and carries you away. This is due largely to expert continuity and, as we have said, a very genuine piece of acting by the star.

This is a picture play which we recommend.

Plan the Second Step First

Whether you be EXHIBITOR or DISTRIBUTOR, Consider—before you take the first step of your booking or advertising campaign—WHERE IT WILL ALL LEAD!

If you are an EXHIBITOR, how can you better balance your expenditures and program and show more consistent profits and satisfaction?

If you are a DISTRIBUTOR, how can you best profit by the interest your picture creates and thwart that inevitable cooling of interest which comes from FORGETTING?

Those who do not remember that TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES are just as important as New Releases remind us of the MONKEY and the NUTS.

A monkey (Aesop speaking) tried to take a handful of nuts from a small-necked jar, but he grabbed too large a handful and couldn't get his hand out, nor did he until he dropped some of the nuts.

And so with the EXHIBITOR who insists upon ALL new pictures. And so with the DISTRIBUTOR who tries to divert ALL the attention to new production contracts and new releases.

'A Lady's Name'

Love Comedy Released by Selznick

BRIEF: A young authoress a bit fed up with the routine of affairs, advertises for a husband. One of the candidates is a butler who invites her the next day to tea. She accepts. During the repast the master walks in. She caps the climax by marrying the master.

THE name of this delightfully comic bit is good for exploitation work. Use the teaser type of ad. Write personal letters to the ladies of the neighborhood stating that you can implicate her husband if she is interested. The answer to this letter of yours should be an announcement of the showing of "The Lady's Name" at your theatre.

After it is all over there are few who will fail to appreciate the joke and you will get them in a good frame of mind for your showing.

The one scene in the house of the man Norma finally marries, shows a beautifully furnished drawing room, pictures of which when used with a window display should be of value to the furniture dealer. Try and sign him up for a hook-up in this connection.

AUDIENCE IS ENTHUSIASTIC OVER 'MANSLAUGHTER'

"Manslaughter," starring Thomas Meighan, is still doing a great deal of business in various sections of the country, though it is a rather old picture. This is just another instance of the ability of a good picture to continue to draw crowds when newer films are booking in the same vicinity.

This is a Paramount Tried and Proved picture which is doing very well for those exhibitors who are wise enough to book it and take advantage of the many opportunities it offers to give patrons the sort of picture they want, at a greater profit to the exhibitor.

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STATION E. T. R. broadcasts its INDEPENDENT PROGRAM. When we announced it last week we expected to submit a rather thorough and comprehensive study on all things Independent. Now, as we look over the material, with a last critical glance before it goes to press, we frankly believe we have exceeded even our own expectations.

That's our candid opinion, and nothing gives us more pleasure than to let you decide whether we are guilty of undue self-elected praise, after you have started with the thought-provoking independent slant on film production, distribution, merchandising and exploitation, as given by Arthur N. Smallwood, President of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., on page 3. The manner in which Mr. Smallwood has tempered his cold, incisive logic with the imaginative warmth of a novelist, is something, we dare say, will stick with you.

Fred Elliot, organizer of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, tells you in a chatty way, "How the Independent Association Will Benefit the Exhibitors." Plainly, this is a message that exhibitors should not miss. Turn to page 5.

By the way, if you don't wish to neglect your bank-roll's best friend, get the brand new idea we're offering in connection with Tried and Proved Pictures, on page 39. If it doesn't make your ticket-taker think a hurricane's struck town, we'll try to swallow Mount Blanc at a single gulp.

STAND by for next week's UP AND DOWN MAIN STREET issue. You get an intimate perspective on how the films are doing in the big cities, the small towns, the nooks and crannies of America. There's something more than trade interest to this number. It will incorporate "Utility Personified." A real reference document, giving you a slant on those films which have stood the acid test of public approval. Don't miss it.

JOHNN BARRYMORE'S characterization of the famous "Beau Brummel" ranks among the supreme achievements of the silent art. He is shown in the above in an open quarrel with the Prince of Wales, who perturbs him not the least bit.

AGAIN the old garden. The Beau's sun has set and he snatches one last sweet moment of real love before leaving England forever. (Below) A flirtation leads the Beau into a delicate position with Lady Hester Stanhope, from which he extricates himself by promising to present her to the Prince.

IF John Barrymore had no other great successes to his credit, "Beau Brummel" alone would stamp him as one of the greatest dramatic artists of the time. He portrays the cynical dandy with an art that glows with the divine spark of genius.

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Exhibition Values and Distribution as Bill Hughes Sees Them

By ARTHUR N. SMALLWOOD

WHAT can be more pleasant than a vision of earthly paradise? "But hold!" you hasten to interject, "what has this to do with the lot of independent motion picture producers? Theirs has been a thorny path, yet you dare picture them in a bed of roses!"

Precisely. I picture for you Utopia. Developments of the past few weeks have imbued me with an expansive mood. I am inclined to let fancy run riot. Let us begin:

The time is the present. The scene is the office of Bill Hughes, an exhibitor in a fair-sized town. It is 11:30 p. m. The house manager has just brought in the box-office reports of the day, together with the "receipts."

Bill Hughes has very much of a headache. He asks the house manager to bring him his booking schedule. Wants to know "how many more of these lemons" are included in "the block" he had been coerced into buying.

He scans the list without enthusiasm, and hands it back with the comment that had he been able to pick and choose his pictures according to his ideas of their merit and their suitability for his audiences some of the productions in the block might well have remained in the branch manager's vaults; or that had he purchased them he would have done so only at a price which would enable him to make a profit.

For the so-called exhibition values of the said pictures were not justified by what Bill Hughes could do with them. And Bill Hughes was not the sort to sit on the seat of his trousers and wait for patrons to come in. He did make an effort to advertise his show with what material was afforded him.

"Who-in-ell sets the exhibition values on these pictures, thus automatically fixing a price which under my 'quota' he must pay? And what did they base 'em on, anyway? And why wasn't he free, in this vaunted land o' freedom, to buy what he wanted—and what a knowledge of his business, of the likes and dislikes of his patrons dictated to him to buy—and to let what he did not want alone? Something wrong with a system under which distributors could dictate to him what he had to buy, in turn forcing him to dictate to his patrons what they should see—an unhealthy condition that?"

These are a few of the questions which ran through Bill Hughes' mind as he slammed his desk drawers shut and told his lieutenant to lock up for the night.

As quiet steals over the place, Bill Hughes, fatigued, disappointed, dejected, nods drowsily, then he falls into the arms of Morpheus. Soon he finds himself in Utopia.

A year has passed. Reforms had been advocated, discussed—eyes had been opened. Weaklings, when standing alone, had found themselves a tower of strength when working in harmony toward a common goal. Block booking, the system of advance deposits, the sale of unmade or "paper" pictures—these latter in large measure financed by the advance deposits on them—had been discontinued. And a new Richmond had entered the field—a powerful, nation-wide organization possessing the respect and confidence of every man in the country and every factor in the industry had assumed the functions of a neutral physical distributing agency.

Again we peep into the office of Bill Hughes. A salesman representing Perfection Distributing Guild has just entered in company with the advertising manager of the Clarion and one of the men from its editorial department. In the yesteryear these might have been thought strange bedfellows. Yet here they are, working together. The advertising manager of the Clarion introduces the film salesman as Mr. Parker, of Perfection Distributing Guild. And Mr. Parker tells our exhibitor friend this story:

I AM here, Mr. Hughes, to close a contract with you for the first of our pictures, 'Bagdad-on-the-Subway.' You are going to be judge of the intrinsic entertainment value of this production, for it is not a paper picture. You may have screen examination as soon as you wish it. And you may examine the paper, lobby displays, accessories, etc., all of which you will find of high quality. My reason for calling on you in the company of these gentlemen from the Clarion is that they may confirm what I am about to relate to you.

"Perfection Distributing Guild rose, Phoenix-like, from the ashes of the old system of distributing pictures. We are a merchandising agency. And I wish you to know how we function. Our operation is divided into three major departments: Advertising and Exploitation, Selling, and Co-operation with Physical Distributor. We do not handle physical distribution, but co-operate closely with a neutral, national physical distributor.

"When pictures are offered us for distribution they must first possess high entertainment value. If they pass muster in this regard the box-office elements of the production are carefully analyzed by the most formidable staff of experts ever assembled into one organization within the industry, and box-office elements and advertising and exploitation angles are carefully plotted and charted.

Building Exhibition Value

"From this analysis a campaign of advertising and exploitation is created, and later the operation of this campaign is supervised in the various parts of the country. The advertising department of Perfection Distributing Guild is an advertising agency, functioning as such for the independent producer, and having agency recognition. You will readily see that a carefully planned and executed campaign on each individual production builds up substantial exhibition value—exhibition value in which production costs or mere names play no part—and this is exhibition value in the true sense because it sells seats direct to the consumer—or patron.

"Our advertising department is going to build consumer demand just the same as if it were merchandising Cream of Wheat. Now don't snicker. I might have named Poros-Knit Underwear, or Burroughs Adding Machines. Only difference between the three is restriction of market. The same difference exists between the three and motion pictures.

"There'll never be as many adding machines sold as suits of underwear, or suits of underwear as packages of Cream of Wheat, or packages of Cream of Wheat as seats in motion picture theatres. The methods may be different, but the ends are the same. And advertising will serve those ends.

Building Sales Enthusiasm

"The only real exhibition value, after all, is extent of consumer demand. And extent of consumer demand in the case of Perfection Distributing Guild's pictures will be raised to the nth degree by display advertising, serializations, publicity stories with tie-ups under direct supervision of an exploitation man who will as the producers representative operate in each district.

"Now we come to the second factor in the merchandising operation: Selling. A real salesman loves the selling game. Give him an opportunity to concentrate on selling, and selling alone, and his enthusiasm will carry him on to high efficiency. Under the old system the salesman's enthusiasm was knocked into a cocked hat by home-office wires urging 'collections, collections, more collections.'

"We are handicapped by none of the annoyances of the old system. We make no collections. We are free to put all of our energies into selling. And the big advertising campaigns current in the newspapers in our territories spur us on to topnotch efficiency. We have every incentive to push every picture we handle into every house we feel should play it. We are giving our producers coverage for that reason.

"We do the merchandising—the advertising, exploiting and selling—and do it thoroughly. National Railway Express Company handles physical distribution. Our New York office turns over to them prints for the entire country. They distribute these prints to their thirty or more distributing depots. And except as we may requisition a print for a preview here and there—or have that done in their own projection rooms in their distributing depots—we do not see or come in contact with the physical product. The Express Company inspects and ships the shows.

Values Based on Selling Power

"Our booking clerk is the contact between us, as a merchandising agency, and the express company, as physical distributors. And do you know that this has resulted in a faster service, a greater number of playdates per print per month, a service without miss-outs or delays? The physical distributor knows where each print is, where it is going next, and so on, and there is no waiting for an exhibitor to ship. The follow-up is perfection itself.

"Another thing: We have nothing to do with collection of moneys. The physical distributor does this. You know, of course, that there is no advance deposit on contract. You are running your theatre on a pay-as-you-enter basis; certainly you will not object to doing business with us on a pay-as-you-play basis. When your show is delivered by the physical distributor, you pay him.

"Now, Mr. Hughes, here is a book showing the complete campaign for newspaper exploitation of 'Bagdad-on-the-Subway.' I would like you to look through it at your leisure. Mr. Jones and Mr. Brown, of the Clarion, both of whom you know well, are here to say they will give you the fullest co-operation. I will not ask you to look at 'Bagdad-on-the-Subway' until you have familiarized yourself with this new system."

Hughes has been listening intently. He is using his poker face to hide his glee. Addressing the film salesman he questions: "This indeed sounds a great deal like Utopia for the exhibitor. Tell me, where's the bug under the chip? How is your philanthropic producer going to finance an advertising campaign; I have always understood that an independent producer was on the flat of his back when he had completed a picture? And how much more are you going to tack on to the price of the picture than you would otherwise have asked me, in order to pay for this big advertising?"

The Saving Grace

"Glad you asked the question, Mr. Hughes," replies Parker. "In the first place the segregation of merchandising from physical distribution and the recognition of certain fundamental facts has enabled Perfection Distributing Guild to offer the independent producer of meritorious product a far cheaper and more economical distribution than he has ever dreamed possible. The savings effected here are, in part, dedicated to an appropriation to advertise the picture, to build up real, substantial exhibition value. Public demand is created. Our sales organization, freed from the worries and annoyances of the old system are concentrating on sales. Their enthusiasm is buoyant, they are hitting on all six—man, they're selling! They're giving the producer coverage. Now you don't suppose you pay any more for the Paris Garters you're wearing because their makers advertise them, do you? No, advertising has created volume sales—and, if anything, you're paying a great deal less for them than if they weren't advertised.

"And so with pictures. They will be sold on exhibition values based on their ability to fill your seats. You will pay a fair price for these pictures because they'll be worth a fair price to you. And you'll pay a fair price for pictures that will return a profit, or I'm a poor prophet."

"Parker, I think you're right. It will be Utopia for the exhibitor. And, by the eternal, it will be Utopia for the independent producer. There's the poor devil who has created the best we've shown on our screens, but who hasn't had a chance. No doubt we exhibitors have been to some extent responsible. We've been blinded to our own best interests, I fear. We've been hood-winked, cajoled and bullied.

"But in a certain measure we have brought this condition on ourselves, and we stood for a lot of misuse and abuse thinking thus to save our skins, whereas in fact, in assisting to destroy the independent we have been doing nothing less than killing the goose which laid the golden eggs. I can say right now that I am going to play ball with you."

How the Independent Association Will Benefit the Exhibitors

By FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT

THE theatre owners of the country are enthusiastic over the progress which has been made by the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, since its inception in January, according to reports received by the home offices of the company members in New York.

Although one or two other attempts have been made in recent years to form organizations representative of the independent market, the plans have for various reasons never progressed very far. It was only last December when in association with Charles B. Hoy, the writer approached the leaders in the states rights field in regard to forming a credit bureau.

After two conferences had been held it was proposed by the executives of the companies that they should go still further and form a national association of all the independent interests.

The work of organization proceeded very rapidly with the result that on January 17, 1924, the constitution and by-laws were adopted and the association immediately began to function, the business administration and routine office detail being handled at 1650 Broadway, New York, at which the national headquarters of the association have been established.

Although but three months old, the association has doubled its membership and by the end of another week will have upwards of twenty-five companies officially enrolled and the organization will be truly representative of the independent field.

Service first—service that satisfies, is a motto that the entire membership may well subscribe to. So this new development in the independent branch of the motion picture industry should be lauded by the exhibitors, who have been quick to realize the essentiality of independent pictures and the operation of state rights exchanges in a fair and equitable manner.

The theatre owners have likewise received with evident satisfaction the announced policies as gradually and definitely formulated by the Independent Association. It is the general belief of the cinema showmen that the new national organization can wield a tremendous power throughout the independent market, with such effective results that the abuses heretofore practiced by certain unreliable exchanges will eventually be eliminated.

It is further contended that through a national organization properly functioning the independents can encourage producers to give the market bigger and better pictures, with a wider range of choice for the exhibitors, thereby tending to stabilize the market in every way.

With an increased number of independent productions assured to the distributors the exhibitors will not be compelled to book their pictures so far in advance, for they will be able to depend upon the open market for productions to bridge over any gaps in their play-dates.

Consideration is now being given by the producing and distributing companies members of the Independent Association to a plan whereby their releasing schedules for the forthcoming season will be duly announced, and the theatre owners will benefit by this advance information relative to productions and release dates, making it unnecessary to rush the closing of any contracts until they have had an opportunity to consider the announcements of the independent companies.

ONE of the chief objects in the organization of the Independent Association is to promote better relations between independent producers, distributors, and theatre owners, and to encourage and build up the system of state rights exchanges and owner-managed exchanges in various key cities where such exchanges are now insufficient or inadequate for the purpose of rendering complete and satisfactory service on behalf of independent producers to the exhibitors.

With this in view the association, through its statistical bureau, has just completed a survey of the state rights exchanges throughout the country securing information concerning their management and activities, as well as other pertinent data of general interest to the industry.

It is the purpose to publish a directory containing all of this valuable information, and to include a list of the independent producers and distributors with their officers and addresses, which will be the first authentic official directory ever published devoted exclusively to the independent field.

THIS directory will prove of invaluable service to the theatre owners throughout the country, and it is expected that the releasing schedules of all the companies operating in the independent market also will be available for publication in this directory.

The association will undertake to encourage the development and progress of independent directors, and stars, especially the younger and newer artists, and to assist in every possible way the establishing on a higher plane the business ethics and management of the independent producers, distributors, and state rights exchanges, as well as the other various factors and interests identified with the independent branch of the motion picture industry.

President I. E. Chadwick and his associate officers have been the recipients of assurance of support from many leaders in the independent field and among the state right exchanges the feeling is very general that the new association will be able to render a most valuable and beneficial service to the theatre owners interested in independent productions.

It is Mr. Chadwick's conviction that given equality of opportunity the independent operator, whether exhibitor, distributor or producer, would have a great incentive to reach and attain a higher and more commanding position in the industry and be better fortified in striving for those ideals the realization of which will dignify the industry.

So we find the independent a leader in the movement to institute better business relations and more human contacts between exchangemen and exhibitors.

'Junior Movies' Filling a Great Need in Children's Education

By C. L. GRANT

THAT many an exhibitor is overlooking one of the finest possible opportunities of not only making his position most solid in the community in which he is located, but also doing that which is far more important, in educating the boys and girls of today to a proper appreciation of the better type of pictures and assuring patronage in the years to come, is plainly evident from the marked success which has characterized Junior Movies in the city of Albany, N. Y., for the past three or four years.

The methods pursued in that city by the Mothers' Club, co-operating with Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand theatre, has already attracted widespread attention, and has not only brought many inquiries from other cities, but also in a personal visit being made by Jason Joy, executive secretary of the Committee on Public Relations, of which Will H. Hays is president.

Every third week, from 1,500 to 1,800 children are entertained at the Mark Strand theatre between 10 and 11:40 o'clock Saturday morning, with two kinds of admission prevailing. Rich and poor alike attend the entertainment. Those who are able to pay the fifteen cents admission are allowed to do so, while the newspapers of the city carry a coupon which has a value of five cents, and which accompanied by a dime, entitles the holder to a ticket.

THE whole idea of the Junior Movies as they are conducted in Albany, a city of about 125,000 population, is to couple entertainment with education. The first of these movies was held some three or four years ago, and as the years have progressed greater perfection, not only in handling the crowds, but in furnishing just the right kind of program, has come.

Mr. Hill works in conjunction with the Mothers' Club of the city, an organization which looks after the playgrounds of the city during the summer months, and which has adopted the motion picture as a means of entertainment for the boys and girls when the playgrounds are closed.

By reason of the fact that Mr. Hill never hesitates, when some parent during the week calls up by phone and asks if the picture being shown on the regular program that night is suitable for a child, to reply truthfully, even if it means a lost ticket or two, he has gained the absolute confidence of the parent, and is given the privilege of selecting or choosing the pictures that will be shown at the Junior Movies. Just by way of example, as showing the standard which the Mark Strand theatre enjoys with the churches of Albany, it needs only to be stated that some little time ago the churches really staged what might be termed a benefit show at this theatre.

IN handling the children flocking to the Junior Movies, and there are always anywhere from a thousand to nearly double that number, the Strand management utilizes the regular box office where the fifteen cent admission tickets are sold, as well as a table which is placed in the lobby and at which the coupons are accepted.

Girl Scouts assist members of the Mothers' Club at the theatre, keeping the children in line and helping in other ways. It is a noticeable feature that given proper attention and a like atmosphere, there is absolutely no rough housing or disorder.

It sometimes happens that the feature picture of the week can be used on Saturday morning, for the Junior Movies. Such was the case recently when "Jackie Coogan" was featured.

At other times when the regular week's picture is not applicable or appropriate, the theatre books some picture, generally a second run, which means a comparatively small price, and uses this for the Saturday morning show.

The wealthy women of the city have heartily sponsored the Junior Movie idea with the result that a long list of patronesses provides the tickets for the inmates of the several orphanages in the city.

Mrs. Alfred E. Smith, wife of the Governor of the state, is actively interested in the movies, as was also the wife of former Governor Nathan L. Miller, when he was in office.

Not only do these women look after the orphanages but there are many instances when children of the extremely poor families of the city are located and provided with tickets. The subscription list alone handles about 500 seats on the Saturday mornings when the movies for the children are held.

It is noticeable that there is a distinct difference between the children who use the coupons and the others who come prepared to pay the regular admission of fifteen cents.

It is among the poorest ones using the coupons that the Mothers' Club later finds work for willing hands to do, both in seeing that the children are properly fed and clothed as well as perhaps finding employment or providing food for the fathers and mothers.

THERE is also another angle to the movies, and that is that at the libraries during the story telling hour, often attended by 200 or more children, that the story of "Toby Tyler" or "The Prince and the Pauper" is retold and the theatre benefits.

Uly Hill, under whose direction the Junior Movies in Albany have reached their present stage of perfection, sums up the whole matter in declaring that the purpose is educational and entertaining, educating new people to the proper kind of pictures, now as well as for the years to come; entertaining, in keeping many a child out of the slums and in proper surroundings and in furnishing good wholesome entertainment under ideal conditions.

Financially, the proposition is a good paying one for the theatre. As a general thing, the picture shown cost but a small amount, and yet fully measure up to the purposes for which they are intended. Music is furnished by the organist and he as well as the ushers and help must of course be paid extra for their work.

This sum is comparatively small and at the same time it should be borne in mind that these movies serve to place the theatre in a pre-eminent position among the parents of the entire city, that it also does its full share in furnishing entertainment to the extremely poor and to the orphans, and in return occupies a position today beyond the shafts of criticism.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS and Mary Pickford are to sail for Cherbourg April 12 on a tour of the world. Their itinerary will include Paris, London, Brussels, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Christiania, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Vladivostok, Manila, Tokio, Honolulu and San Francisco. The party will include also Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fairbanks, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, little Mary Rupp, Kenneth Davenport and an entourage of servants. Well, here is a chance for the two stars to collaborate in the writing of a book detailing their impressions of the peoples in the many lands they visit and also an outline of the receptions—ovations will be the better word—that are extended to them.

RUPERT HUGHES gave the diners at the Edison luncheon recently a sample of his wit. Another specimen came out of the West following a showing of his "True as Steel" to Goldwyn officials. When the run was completed the gathering, with professional cold-bloodedness, sat silent for a moment. "I wish you'd tell me what you like about the picture," suggested the producer. "If there's anything in it that any one likes we'll leave it in."

RAY O. WYLAND, head of the church relations department of the National Council of Boy Scouts, charged before a large gathering at the City Club, Kansas City, that the screen is "responsible for a growing cleavage that threatens the stability of society. The movies portray a razzle-dazzle of the idle rich, that is, in reality, a hundred million miles away from the kind of life true Americans live." It hardly is to be expected that all public speakers will display the possession of a judicial temperament, but in the interest of truth there should be an avoidance of mistaking the shadow for the substance. Some movies portray, etc., yes; the movies portray, emphatically no.

MARCUS LOEW on March 27 is slated to appear at the Elsmere Theatre, Crotona Parkway and Elsmere place, officially to add that house to his string. With Mr. Loew will go a party of stage and screen stars. The theatre will adopt a policy of exclusive motion picture presentation.

MESSRS. ZUKOR and Lasky were hosts at an unusual luncheon to reviewers at the Ritz-Carlton last week in celebration of the first anniversary of "The Covered Wagon." A. M. Botsford was toastmaster, and he was at his best and wittiest. Speeches were made by Mr. Lasky, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, and Ernest Torrence. The table was in the form of a hollow square. The entire center was laid out as a desert, with covered wagons, cattle, buffalo and all the accompanying paraphernalia of a caravan as well as patches of vegetation. The remarks were all of marked interest, especially those of Mr. Lasky, who told the inside story of the making of and the addition to the production.

SIDNEY OLCOTT is to be the guest of honor at the fortnightly midnight supper of the Greenroom Club March 22 in its new home, 19 West Forty-eighth street.

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, supervising director of Associated Pictures, has left Hollywood en route for Chicago. In that city he will hold conferences with his partner, Herbert Lubin, following which the two will come to New York to attend the premier showing of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." Director Clarence Badger brought the print East. While in New York Mr. Sawyer will select two stories in which Barbara La Marr will be starred for First National release.

HARRY REICHENBACH, writing March 1 from Monte Carlo, remarks that the weather is like the middle of July. In the course of his travels the exploitation expert has met up with Rex Ingram. Apparently H. R. suffered no irreparable losses on the occasion of his visit to the gay resort, for we note he is continuing his journey away from home, Cairo being his next stop.

ON his way to Los Angeles J. D. Williams stopped off in Kansas City last week. The head of Ritz Pictures enjoyed a social "set-to" with M. A. Tanner, Selznick branch manager.

ON the desk of Robert T. Kane, general production manager of Famous Players, is a framed and formidable looking document. It is a notification that Mr. Kane has been decorated by the Belgian government with the croix de guerre of that country. The citation sets forth that the recipient "particularly distinguished himself by his courage during the victorious offensive in Flanders." The production manager served with the 316th Train Headquarters and the military police.

LET'S revert a moment to Laurette Taylor's interpretation of the heroine of "Happiness." The sequence of the shopgirl in the home of the wealthy woman is one of the most delicate interpretation. Jenny Wreay, as we recall, does no crying, but she has her audience—if you have a word that really is better, let us have it—half laughing and half crying all the way through the scene. It is a succession of alternating chokes and chuckles. And that combination spells real entertainment.

THE president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, R. G. Liggett—a brother of the one time screen favorite, Gene Gauntier—recently told of the days when he owned the old Seventeenth Street Theatre in Kansas City. An opportunity to sell the house found him not quite and finally settled on the disposition of it, but he casually inquired as to what purpose it was designed to devote the place. His visitor confided to him he desired to establish an undertaking parlor. "The only thing left for me to do," added Mr. Liggett, "was to tell him that he had picked an ideal location, as the theatre had been 'dead' for several years."

BACK from a trip including stops at New Orleans, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis and Chicago, J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of Preferred, reached his office at the end of last week. The traveler reported that with the possible exception of the Northwest conditions seemed to be excellent.

DR. W. E. SHALLENBERGER, Arrow chief, has departed for the South on a business trip completely outfitted with golf and Mah Jong paraphernalia. It is said that if business is not represented in his itinerary as much as fifty-fifty it is at least as high as thirty-five sixty-five. Of course he may have occasion to quote figures to you other than these, but they won't be about golf.

JAMES YOUNG has issued an attractive card announcing the titles of some of the productions on which he has officiated as writer and director. On the fourth page are the names of more than two score subjects which have been made under his hand. It is an imposing list.

THE executives over at Pathe offices felt quite hopped up the other morning on taking up the Tribune. In Percy Hammond's department of "Oddments and Reminders" was a full column devoted to laudatory comment on Grantland Rice's "Sportlights." The writer declared the series is a tonic, on the level, picturesque and dramatic.

Griffith Goes to Rome for Production Conference on Great Italian Film

WHEN the Berengaria sails on April 2 David Wark Griffith will be aboard en route to Italy for a six weeks' visit. He will arrive in Rome about the 12th and will immediately enter into a series of conferences with an important politico-financial group regarding the rehabilitation of Italy's motion picture industry.

This definite announcement from the New York Griffith offices answers the questions, speculations and rumors which have abounded regarding the immediate future activities of the great director.

Since the war the Italian industry has been in sad shape. A score of the prominent studios have quit completely, and where Italy once made sufficient pictures to supply its own market, over 50 per cent. are now imported—mostly from America. Premier Mussolini, the Italian government and the financiers of Italy have determined to restore the prestige of Italian films even as they at one time bolstered the tottering industry of motor-car manufacture.

Thus came to be organized a company named the Propaganda Industriale Artistica Cinematografica Europea, with headquarters at Turin. The purpose of the company is to establish cordial relations with the nations of the world through the medium of the silver screen.

Would Rebuild National Prestige

Mr. Griffith has been importuned for many months by various governments and semi-official organizations, but it seems to have taken la bella Italia to put it over. Up to now negotiations have been carried on by a former Cleveland newspaperman appropriately named Amerigo Serrao. Mr. Serrao is a nephew of Commandatore G. Andrea Serrao, a powerful factor in Roman politics and the head of the syndicate seeking Mr. Griffith's services. It is understood that there are enough lire on deposit in a great Italian bank to equal $1,000,000 in real money—American gold. And there is more where this came from.

It has been decided that the surest way to restore the dignity of the Italian trademark and to regain world prestige for Italian films would be to produce an elaborate picture in Italy. If arrangements are made this picture will be directed by an American, Mr. Griffith, filmed by American cameramen and acted by American stars. Mr. Serrao is most optimistic regarding the outcome of the trip on which he will accompany Mr. Griffith, and believes that the return to this country will be speedy, that Mr. Griffith will then gather his technical staff, select his cast and return to Italy to "shoot."

Europe Looks to America

Nothing definite has been decided regarding the subject of the proposed picture, although numerous possibilities have been mentioned in connection with the effort. One of the most alluring is "The Last Days of Pompeii." Then there are "Faust," "L'Aiglon," and several others which would lend themselves satisfactorily to a Latin background. Mr. Griffith has another idea for a picture up his sleeve, but whether or not he will do the hat trick with it remains to be seen.

The people of many countries have from time to time turned toward America for help and advice on various subjects. Our counsel has been sought and valued in matters of finance, industrialism, merchandising, government, but never before has a European nation acknowledged American pre-eminence in an art. It is indeed complimentary that the first to so honor us should be the land of Michael Angelo and Leonardo da Vinci, the country that cradled art and mothered the cinema through a sickly infancy. Moreover the fact is a commentary on Italy's clarity and keenness of perception.

It seems strange that with many European governments—Russia, Norway, Great Britain—"sold" on the certain value of motion pictures in exploiting the glories of their countries and the virtues of their people, that our own government should remain so blind. Incalculable benefit would be derived by telling the world about America through motion pictures, and convincing humanity that with a few oily exceptions we are rather a decent folk after all.

When this Italian matter is disposed of there are other empires, despotisms, constitutional monarchies and republics clamoring for the attention of Mr. Griffith. It would seem a far cry from La Grange, Mr. Griffith's birthplace, to one of the most ancient old world capitals. It would seem strange for old "Roaring Jake" Griffith's little boy Dave to be giving orders to the rulers of age old dynasties. Yet, perhaps, just perhaps, it may not be so very long before David Wark Griffith will direct a picture with a real King and a genuine Queen playing in character. But that is another story.

'The Naked Truth' Dinner Looms as Big Event in Film Fun History

EDITORS leave town as paper goes to press."

So ran the big black headline across the top of the front page of a small town newspaper recently.

And no wonder. They had told the truth about the town's leading citizens.

As the date approaches for The Naked Truth dinner, at which it is promised the naked truths about the motion picture industry and its leading personalities will be exposed, rumors have been running like wildfire through film circles to the effect that prominent cinema executives and stars have been buying one-way tickets by the wholesale for points east of Suez.

But these rumors seem to be quite ill-founded. On the contrary all the indications are that the fourth annual gridiron revel of the Associated Motion Picture

Advertisers, Inc., to take place at the Hotel Astor on Saturday night, March 29, will see the most brilliant, distinguished and representative assemblage of picture folk ever brought together for a function of this kind.

Cartridges containing T. N. T. tickets of admission are, according to A. M. Botsford, chairman of the A. M. P. A. entertainment committee, going fast to leaders of the industry.

The illustrious guests who will tell the Bedtime Stories, the same to be broadcast by radio via station WEAf, are Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Will Hays, D. W. Griffith, Samuel Rothafel, Rupert Hughes, A. M. Botsford and The Big National Personality, whose identity is being withheld as a surprise.

The party, it is announced, will start promptly at 7 p. m. "with palate-pleasing viands," and Chairman Botsford warns that those who come late may miss their oysters. Inasmuch as it is reported that several of the oysters will contain pearls it behooves all who plan to attend The Naked Truth dinner to get there on time.

At 9 p. m. the A. M. P. A. will "give the nation the air" when the Bedtime Stories will be told and wirelessly. Roxy, it is announced, will be master of the waves.

Following this will come the presentation of the winning comedy sketch on the movies to be enacted by a Big Broadway cast. The author will be introduced and awarded the $100 prize.

Next in order on the program will be the unreeling of what is described as a "Sinsational Sinema Production" especially filmed for the occasion. After that there will be what the film press agents call "Our Own Popularity Contest," with "the crowning of the King and Queen of Flim-dumb" as a feature. From then on there will be dancing until dawn.

Paul Whiteman will be there in person to lead his two jazz bands, one playing where the other leaves off, assuring continuous music during the dinner and dancing and between the other numbers.

INCE GETS HOLLYWOOD LABORATORY

Will Prove Valuable Asset to the Noted Producer

THE Hollywood Laboratory Corporation with its entire equipment has been purchased by Thomas H. Ince and will be re-assembled and operated in conjunction with the big laboratory on the Ince lot in Culver City, according to announcement made by H. D. Lyman, builder of the Hollywood Laboratory.

The Hollywood Laboratory was completed one year ago, its assembly including the most modern machinery and paraphernalia used in motion picture making.

The amalgamation of the two laboratory units gives to the Ince plant probably the most complete motion picture manufacturing laboratories in the entire industry. It is understood the deal, including reorganization of the Ince laboratory, involves approximately a quarter of a million dollars.

The Hollywood Laboratory was assembled and operated on a commercial basis to serve all producers of pictures in Southern California. Its holdings included many patents and secret processes for the making of transparency titles, art backgrounds, lifesize still photographs and other photographic art features that have been constantly raising the standard of motion picture productions during the past few years.

During the one year of its operation, the Hollywood Laboratory has made all the titles for many of the outstanding independent productions including Mary Pickford's "Rosita" and "Dorothy Vernon" and Charlie Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris."

One of the most important features of the Ince Culver City plant has been the printing laboratories which the veteran producer has developed until they are known as among the most complete.

One of the feature units of equipment in the Hollywood Laboratory is the patented title printer. This machinery, in itself costing a little more than $50,000, was specially constructed in Waltham, Mass., and installed in Hollywood one year ago. It is the only machinery of its kind and includes several printing patents and equipment for the use of the secret processes in the making of transparency titles and art backgrounds.

OKLAHOMA MAY HAVE CENSORS APPOINTED BY GOVERNOR

Oklahoma City, Okla.—A bill providing a state board for censoring moving pictures was introduced in the Oklahoma State Senate at Oklahoma City March 5, 1924.

The board would be composed of three members to be appointed by the Governor. The chairman would receive $2,100 a year and the other members $1,800. A Secretary would be paid $1,500.

Members would serve three years with terms overlapping. The board would be empowered to censor immoral pictures, and those showing cruelty.

HART AND FAMOUS AGREE

CHARLES RAY NOW UNDER INCE CONTRACT

Signing of Contract Closes Gates of Ray Studio Permanently

CHARLES RAY in his old character of the typical American youth and Thomas H. Ince, the producer, again have joined forces. As the result of contracts closed March 18 the gates of the Charles Ray studios in Los Angeles were permanently closed this week and Ray has returned to his old home, the Thomas H. Ince Studios in Culver City, to work under the guidance of his discoverer and mentor.

Charles Ray entered pictures eleven years ago as one of the mob at Inceville in Santa Monica Canyon while a Los Angeles high school student. He worked under the Ince Banner for eight years.

This announcement will come as a surprise not only to the motion picture industry but to the picture world as well, for Ray latterly has been a star-producer on his own responsibility. His rise in this dual capacity was as meteoric as was his early success as a star. Among his noteworthy productions were "The Girl I Loved," "A Tailor-Made Man" and "The Courtship of Myles Standish."

Long before these his first big success was in "The Coward," an early Ince-Triangle picture. Then came others that are still remembered as a type of entertainment outstanding in humanness and appealing simplicity. Among these were "The Clod Hopper," "The Pinch Hitter," "His Own Home Town," "The Hired Man," and "His Mother's Boy."

BRANDT GETS RESULTS

The visit of Joe Brandt, president of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association on the Coast, has not been in vain. At a meeting held Tuesday Mr. Brandt outlined the aims of the organization. As a result seven West Coast producers and distributors joined the organization and a number of others present at the meeting are expected to become members.

ARROW HAS BIG LINEUP FOR THIS YEAR

Schedule Calls for Serials, Short Comedies and Features

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, President, announces Arrow's line-up of new releases. This will consist of two serials, the first of which "Days of '49" is being made with the co-operation of the California Historical Society and is based upon the most dramatic period of the State famed for gold and motion pictures. This was during 1847-48-49 and includes the discovery of gold at Sutter's Mill, the wresting of this great territory of 160,000 square miles from Mexican domination and its annexation to the United States. All this has been filmed with an accuracy of fact and detail seldom found in motion pictures.

Jacques Jaccard whose fame as a serial director is firmly established is handling the megaphone. Supervising the entire work is Ben Wilson that veteran of every branch of the production end.

Neva Gerber, Ed (Two-Fisted) Cobb, Ruth Royce and Wilbur McCaugh carry the principal roles. The screening of Chapters one, two and three shows that it is a fast action, thrilling picture of feature caliber.

Following this will be another serial of equal strength and pulling power.

Six super-features commencing with "Gambling Wives," a Dell Henderson production, featuring Marjorie Daw, Ward Crane, Hedda Hopper, Edward Earle and Baby Dorothy Brock, which is just being released.

Twenty-six five reel Westerns, one every two weeks are also scheduled. These are four starring Ben Wilson whose return to the screen will be hailed with delight by fandom, four "Pinto Pete's" starring Ashton Dearholt, twelve Dick Hatton's, the first four with Marilyn Mills and her trained horses and six "Ranch-land" pictures featuring every phase of Western Rodeo, thrills and spills.

Twenty-six 2 reel comedies are also included in the line-up.

This gives Arrow distributors an exceptional program for the Independent market.

ELEANOR BOARDMAN FOR LEAD IN 'MARY THE THIRD'

The leading role in King Vidor's third Goldwyn picture, it is announced by executives of that producing corporation, will be portrayed by Eleanor Boardman. She will be the Mary in Vidor's film version of Rachael Crothers' successful stage play, "Mary the Third." The title will be changed, it is announced, in order not to give the impression that the picture is a historical or costume production.

Miss Boardman is under a term contract with Goldwyn who discovered and trained her into one of the most popular young leading women of the screen.

COBE GOES TO FLORIDA

Andrew J. Cobe, Broadway exhibitor-manager, who was operated upon soon after the closing of the run of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Astor Theatre, left Broadway, Wednesday for a three weeks trip to Florida, for rest and recuperation. He sailed for Key West on one of the Mallory line steamers. From Key West he will go to Miami.

It is understood that he will take charge of a Broadway theatre upon his return to New York.

Open Winter Has Lessened Radio Effect, Says Brandt

EXHIBITORS have not felt the full effect of the competition of radio during the present winter, declares William Brandt, president of New York State Exhibitors, who has been closely following the general effect of the newer amusement form on the business of theatre owners.

The reason for this, declares Mr. Brandt, is because of the open winter, which, of course, has been of decided advantage to exhibitors as a body and particularly to those in more sparsely settled communities.

In other words, it is pointed out, if next winter should prove to be a severe one with general business conditions the same, it is unlikely exhibitors would find their business so prosperous as it has been during the present season.

Mr. Brandt said he had read the articles in last week's Exhibitors Trade Review regarding the general effect of radio on the theatres. His only complaint, he said, was that the warning of coming competition was not made sufficiently strong, for he believes the situation contains a real menace.

The exhibitor calls attention to two instances in which public interest was centered on the radio in which the theatres were not half filled. One was the Dempsey-Firpo fight last summer and the other was the recent broadcasting of a message by President Coolidge.

"Any important occasion of this kind," he says, "such as the baseball series, will have the same effect.

"Cole, of Texas, tells me his people down there are getting radio from New York. If this is the case it is well to bear in mind that 90 per cent of the aerales today are of low efficiency, but that the situation in the near future will be vastly different.

"With the phonograph companies preparing to make high-class efficiency sets so cheaply the home-made product is going to be discarded, with the result that more people are going to be kept at home. More and more the programs will be better as the apparatus is better.

"Today there is a lot of static which interferes with the proper working out of the majority of the sets, but very soon we are going to get programs without interference.

"The best illustrations of what the radio of the future will do to theatre owners is right in Brooklyn, where plans for several large apartment houses already contain designs for installing radio in each apartment. A new hotel in that borough also will contain a radio outfit in every room.

"The other night Paul Whiteman's orchestra gave a radio concert and even though the hour was after the close of the theatre my business suffered by reason of it.

"One solution for the situation so far as theatre owners are concerned is for more and more of the bigger and better picture—properly exploited.

"The time is coming, too, when we can make the radio a part of the theatre. Already I am preparing to install a radio store in my Duffield.

"I have an idea, and it may be revolutionary, but it is not nearly so revolutionary as some things that have been done in the picture business. That is that the time is coming when one hundred theatres will join forces and engage an orchestra for the playing of a picture which will be relayed to each house. The music easily can be synchronized to the film by starting on a given minute. In other words, each house for one-hundredth of the expense involved may have the advantage of the symphony orchestra.

"You may think this is a long time ahead, but I do not think it is so far away. Then again, we haven't begun to use the radio yet to tell the people what we have for them in the way of entertainment—more exploitation possibilities."

OPPOSE MURPHY BILL IN ALBANY HEARINGS

Operators Say Measure Would Take Away Needed Precautions

THERE was a hearing at the State Capitol in Albany, March 18, before the Assembly judiciary committee, on the Murphy bill which was introduced some time ago, and which pertains to the manufacture and use of nitro-cellulose or film of a like hazardous base.

The protests were lodged by A. J. McCosker, of New York City, who appeared as the representative of Local 306 of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, and Abraham Horowitz, secretary of the same organization. Unable to be present, F. H. Richardson, of New York, filed a brief opposition to the bill. In addressing members of the committee, Mr. McCosker spoke along the following lines:

"I am firmly convinced that section 216 of the bill, which is worded as follows: 'Any and all provisions of law restricting the purchase, lease, use, sale or similar disposition of motion picture film, an acetate of cellulose or similarly non-hazardous base, are repealed,' is especially iniquitous, as it removes the safeguards now existing on so-called slow-burning film, making it unnecessary for a person to be licensed before he can operate a machine to project such films

ORGANIZE EXCHANGE FOR WASHINGTON DISTRICT

Trio Productions Exchanges to Handle Independent Pictures

AT a meeting held in Washington, D. C., last week, a new distributing company was organized to cover Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia. The new company is known as the Trio Distributing Exchange and is one of the largest and most complete independent exchanges in the country.

The founders of the new organization are Ben Amsterdam, Eugene Marcus and Tony Luchese, of Philadelphia. They are well known in the motion picture industry and know the needs of the exhibitor.

At the Washington meeting, to celebrate the opening of the new exchange, practically every independent producer in New York attended. The leading exhibitors in the Washington territory were present and welcomed the new company into the field as they feel there is a need for such an organization.

The Trio Exchange will handle productions of all the independent producers and will cover their territory thoroughly.

Max Milder, formerly with Selznick in Philadelphia, has been named manager of the new company, with offices in New Jersey Avenue and K Street, Washington, D. C.

ASSOCIATED WILL ISSUE FIRST PICTURE OF ALASKA

Announcement was made late Tuesday by J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, of the purchase of all rights to "The Chechakos," the first motion picture ever made in Alaska. More than two years were required for the work and it really is a history of the great northwestern country.

Captain Austin E. Lathrop and Lewis E. Moomaw have been in New York for two months negotiating with several prominent companies. The deal is said to involve approximately a half million dollars. Associated plans a national advertising campaign before the first showing of the production.

President Harding was a guest on "location" with the company filming the picture during his Alaskan trip and the production was indorsed by him. The few persons permitted to see the negative claim that "The Chechakos" is a production that will take the country by storm.

GLORIA SWANSON BEGINS WORK ON PICTURE FOR FAMOUS

After several week's preparation and close-up study of how the shop girls in New York live, Gloria Swanson is back at the Paramount Long Island studio making a new picture, "Manhandled," under the direction of Allan Dwan. In the story, which is by Arthur Stringer and adapted by Frank Tuttle, Miss Swanson has the role of a clerk in a department store who climbs the social ladder, getting furs, expensive jewelry, and everything, only to find after reaching dangerous heights that honest love is the best in the long run.

Tom Moore heads the supporting cast for Miss Swanson, having the role of John Hogan, taxi-cab driver and garage mechanic. Others in the cast are Frank Morgan, Lilyan Tashman, Paul McAllister, Ian Keith, Frank Allworth and Carrie Scott. The locale of the story is New York.

Lynch Interests Take Over Howard Theatre of Atlanta

THE Howard theatre, one of a group of theatres operated by Southern Enterprises, which passed into the hands of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation when S. A. Lynch disposed of his big chain of houses in the southeast two years ago, has been sold to a corporation headed by several men closely associated with the theatrical activities of S. A. Lynch. The sum of $1,000,000 was involved in the deal, which also included the purchase of a valuable plot of ground on which a small hotel is located.

Officers of the purchasing company, which is styled the Enterprise Realty and Investment Corporation, are Y. F. Freeman, president; W. R. Lynch, brother of S. A. Lynch, vice president; C. E. Holcomb, brother-in-law of S. A. Lynch, treasurer; and D. R. Millard, secretary.

While officers of the corporation did not announce definite plans for the hotel property, it is rumored that the erection of a theatre on this site is contemplated. It is located in the heart of Atlanta's growing hotel and theatre district, within one block of the Howard Theatre. Directly across the street from the hotel site there is now in the process of construction a $1,250,000 hotel, plans for which also include a theatre to play pictures or big-time vaudeville.

The status of the Howard theatre, as concerns operation and management, is not to be changed by the purchase. Under the terms, the Howard theatre lease also passes from the control of the Adair Realty and Trust Company, which owned the property on which the theatre is situated. The lease, which was made for a term of twenty-five years, calls for an aggregate rental of nearly $750,000, on a sliding scale. It has twenty years yet to run.

The original lease for the Howard Theatre site was so framed that at the expiration of twenty-five years from the signing thereof the property would have reverted to the Adair Realty & Trust Company. With the purchase of the realty by the Enterprise Realty and Investment Company this theatre, fully equipped, will at the expiration of the lease that has a little less than twenty years to run, pass into the hands of what is recognized as the "close corporation" of the varied S. A. Lynch interests.

Not only is the sale one of the most important that has been announced in local theatre activities for several years, but it intimates that S. A. Lynch, once the most powerful individual factor in motion pictures circles in the south, might again enter the field. While his name does not appear as an officer of the corporation, the Enterprise Realty and Investment Corporation is known as one of the many enterprises controlled and financed by him.

Since he surrendered to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation his managerial contract covering the operation of Southern Enterprises a little more than a year ago S. A. Lynch has taken no active part in theatre operation, but he is known to have acquired several valuable theatre properties. In addition to these properties he has invested heavily in big real estate in the south. A few months ago he acquired the Cecil Hotel in Atlanta, and more recently he bought the Bisbee Building in Jacksonville.

BADGER COMPLETES 'DAN M'GREW' PICTURE

Production Is Said to Be One of the Best of Producer's Career

COMING on top of a series of unbroken successes which Clarence Badger has directed during the past year he has just completed direction of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" for Associated Pictures Corporation, to be released as a Sawyer-Lubin special by Metro.

The picture has been finally cut and titled and, following a private view of the production by the officials of Metro and Associated Pictures, it is a consensus of opinion that Badger has reached the heights of his directorial career in making this film.

This is said with due consideration of the fact that he has been responsible for such big pictures as "Potash and Perlmutter," "Red Lights," "Quincy Adams Sawyer," and "Painted People" during the past fourteen months.

In handling the treatment of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" Badger has emphasized the strong melodramatic qualities of the famous poem by Robert W. Service so that that portion of the picture dealing with the poem visualizes perfectly the drama and tragedy of the Yukon which Service has made famous through his powerful lines. Coupled with this, the director has interpolated many delightful comedy touches which afford excellent relief to the melodramatic story. He has introduced character bits here and there throughout the entire picture which will stand out in the memory of audiences long after they have seen the production on the screen.

Badger's forte in handling crowds and punch scenes is ably demonstrated in his direction of that part of the film showing the destruction by flames of a gorgeous New York cabaret.

The picture will be released on March 31.

INGRAM WELCOMED HOME FROM EUROPE

Director Brings Young Arabian Boy and Print of New Picture

BRINGING with him a completed print of his new production for Metro, "The Arab" and accompanied by his wife, Alice Terry, and an Arab boy whom he had brought back with him as his ward, Rex Ingram returned to this country from Africa last Tuesday on the Acquitania. His technical staff led by John F. Seitz, his chief cameraman, returned with him.

A large delegation of Metro officials and persons prominent in the motion picture industry met Mr. Ingram and Miss Terry at the pier. They were given a rousing welcome.

Considerable interest is being displayed in Mr. Ingram's new picture. The director left this country last September accompanied by Miss Terry, a group of technical assistants and laboratory equipment. Ramon Novarro followed several weeks later and joined Mr. Ingram in Paris, from which point they took the overland route through Italy and then across the Mediterranean to Algiers in northern Africa. The entire picture was made in the neighborhood of Tunis in Algiers, Ingram having selected this place because tribesmen from the Sahara congregate there in large numbers for trade and for contact with civilization.

Miss Terry and Mr. Novarro are the only Americans in a large cast. All the remaining principals are European actors whom Ingram drafted during his sojourn on the Continent before Novarro's arrival. In addition there are great mobs of tribesmen, dervishes, Arabians, magnificent horsemen from the Sahara and lusty darkies from Tripoli and Morocco.

Mr. Ingram is now busy with his staff editing the picture. It is not unlikely that Metro may give "The Arab" a Broadway presentation.

JACK PICKFORD'S 'HILL BILLY' PLEASES CRITICS

"One of the most beautiful performances of recent times in the films is Jack Pickford's 'The Hill Billy,'" said Quinn Martin, picture critic for the New York World when this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release had its premiere showing at Moss's Broadway theatre New York, Monday, March 10.

Present at the evening performances were Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, who snatched time enough from preparations for New York openings of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" and "The Thief of Bagdad" to see Jack's second independent production in which he appears as both star and producer. Jack Pickford and his wife, Marilyn Miller, had returned to Los Angeles, the former to start work on a new picture, and were not present. His mother and others of the Mary Pickford-Douglas Fairbanks organizations attended the opening.

HODKINSON EMPLOYEES TO HOLD SUPPER-DANCE

That the social side of life is not being overlooked in the whirl of business expansion is indicated by the announcement that the Hodkinson employees will hold a supper-dance on the evening of March 22, at the Seventy-Seventh Division Club House, New York.

The committee in charge have promised the jazziest of jazz bands and an abundance of epicurean delights commingled with amateur, pro and semi-pro entertainment and it is expected that the Hodkinson force will be present in totum.

'BEAU BRUMMEL' TO HAVE ROAD PRESENTATION

Warner Brothers to Send Out Complete Touring Companies

DESPITE the fact that the Warner Brothers were unable to go through with their original plan of presenting John Barrymore in "Beau Brummel" for an extended run at one of New York's legitimate theatres, owing to legal obstacles in the way of a prior contract with the Mark Strand, the announcement is made this week from the Warner home office that extensive plans are under way for sending out several touring companies with the picture in territories where local conditions will warrant.

That these plans have progressed far beyond the mere paper and pencil stage is shown in the fact that the initial company opens at the Lyceum Theatre, Baltimore, on March 24. This unit which is complete in every detail and carries an advance man, company manager, scenic equipment, performers for an atmospheric prologue and orchestral score for twenty-two musicians is being handled by L. Berman of the Independent Film Company of Philadelphia, and a second company will be sent by Mr. Berman to open simultaneously at the Lyric Theatre, Allentown, Pa.

Mr. Sam Morris, general sales manager of the Warner Brothers enterprises has already started on a transcontinental tour which will take him to all the various exchange centers as far as Seattle and back by way of Denver and Kansas City. Mr. Morris will make arrangements for other "Beau Brummel" companies to radiate out from various points and it is probable that thirty or more companies may be presenting "Beau Brummel" within the next few weeks.

PATHE TO RELEASE 'GIRL SHY' APRIL 20

Harold Lloyd's Latest Comedy Said to Surpass Former Productions

THE new Harold Lloyd comedy production, titled "Girl Shy," is unanimously proclaimed by Pathe officials as indisputably the supreme achievement of the comedian's career. In response to the veritable avalanche of inquiries addressed to the Pathe home office during the past few weeks with reference to the release date of the new Lloyd special, announcement has just been made that "Girl Shy" will be released on Easter Sunday, April 20.

"Girl Shy" marks Harold Lloyd's debut as an independent producer, and it is safe to say that nothing that the comedian has done heretofore has aroused such universal interest as his present effort. The unusually heavy volume of advance bookings mounting steadily as release date approaches is one factor that attests glowingly to the tremendous interest that the production has excited. In view of the rapidity with which first-run engagements are being closed by prominent exhibitors all over the country, Pathe officials are confident that "Girl Shy" will open simultaneously in every important key center of the nation on Easter Sunday.

PROTEST FORMATION OF TRUE ENTERPRISE

Cohen and Davis Join in Statement Expressing Amazement

A STATEMENT has been issued by Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, R. F. Woodhull of New Jersey, Glenn Harper of California and Sydney S. Cohen of New York, all stockholders of Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, as follows:

"We were amazed to learn that W. A. True and Carl Anderson had formed the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation organized under the laws of State of New York in view of the fact that the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, has been in existence for over fifteen months.

"The action is the more surprising when we learn that Mr. True and Mr. Anderson formed this new company unbeknown to the remaining stockholders and directors and officers of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, and while Mr. True and Mr. Anderson were both officers and directors of the company.

"It is our purpose to use every means to protect the interests of the stockholders of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation (of Delaware) and to see that the monies due this company from the Anderson Pictures Corporation on account of distribution of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation picture "After the Ball" will be paid to the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation (of Delaware), which has a contract with the Anderson Pictures Corporation regarding it.

"We have been advised by some of the theatre owners who were mentioned as members of the Advisory Board of the new company that Mr. True and Mr. Anderson have formed that their names were used without a full knowledge of the facts.

"Irreconcilable differences arose in the management of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, one of which was the desire of Mr. True and Mr. Anderson to amalgamate and consolidate the Anderson Pictures Corporation with Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation (of Delaware) on a basis that we felt was unfair to the stockholders of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation and one that would give the virtual control of the company to Mr. Anderson.

"We feel it is manifestly unfair and an injustice to the present stockholders of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation (of Delaware) to permit the use of the name of this company by Mr. True and Mr. Anderson."

Martin Smith, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, denies he has become a member of the advisory board of the new organization. A wire from Mr. Smith states that he has not authorized the use of his name and is in no way connected with the company.

INDEPENDENT OUTLOOK IS ENCOURAGING

Jesse Goldberg Sees Bright Future Within Short Time

THE independent field is making great strides ahead and is steadily coming into its own. Within the next few months the industry will see big things happening, and will find that independent productions have made a new place for themselves.

This is the opinion of Jesse Goldberg of Independent Pictures, who has just returned from a five months trip to the coast, during which period he gave a great deal of time and attention to studying conditions in the independent field. He finds that the status of the independent producer has been infinitely elevated because of the fact that the unreliable men have been run out of the business and in their places have come producers who are morally and financially responsible.

When questioned further as to what he attributed these changes he said:

"Merely this—the independent producers have come to realize that their productions have a certain niche to fill and they are working ahead to fill it. For the producer of independent pictures to try to compete with the big corporation in his own field is a futile bucking against a stone wall, and we are coming now to realize that.

"The market has a full berth for the independent man and for the large corporation, and each is entirely apart from the other. It is ridiculous to try to compete with the man who has inexhaustible resources at his command, and there is no reason for trying to do it. He is equipped to make big productions—let him do it. In the meantime there is a gaping need for small productions—the kind that will suit the small exhibitor and the small town.

"The independent producer virtually controls the program feature—not the first run feature in the large city—but the 65 per cent of the motion picture patronage is not in the large cities, and it is satisfying this 65 per cent that the independent producers must direct their energies.

"When the big corporation makes a big picture it involves fabulous sums. The cost must be met by the exhibitor. The small exhibitor is not in a position to do this. He must have pictures that appeal to his patrons and do not run up into big money. The independent producer is the man to supply him with these features.

"Moreover, aside from the consideration of the cast, there is also the story to be considered. It is my opinion from what I have observed on this trip and others, that just like the big city audience, the small town man wants a picture that is familiar to him. He wants something that is within his own experience, that will make him feel he is seeing things as they really are, not witnessing pure fiction. It is for this reason that he is not keen on the big productions. They are outside of his sphere. He would rather see something which concerns people and situations which are familiar to him.

"It is to satisfy this demand that the independent man must direct his work. In time the small exhibitor will go direct to this source for his pictures and he will be sure of getting the sort of product he wants.

"Let the big man take care of the big productions and the big cities; let the independent man supply the small town demand for modest pictures, and everybody will make money."

STOREY SALES CONTEST READY TO START

Pathe Sales Force Expects Big Results in Concentrated Drive

PATHE will launch on March 23 a $10,000 sales contest, which will involve the sales personnel of the company's thirty-five exchanges in what promises to be the most spirited competition of its kind ever conducted under Pathe auspices. This year Pathe's most important sales event on the annual calendar will be dedicated to J. E. Storey, the universally esteemed General Sales Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and will accordingly be known as the "Storey Pennant Race—1924."

The Storey Pennant Race will be divided into two parts, each consisting of eight weeks periods. During the first eight weeks the competing branches will qualify for positions in the five Leagues into which they will be divided. This qualifying period will begin on March 23 and will close at midnight of May 17. The five Leagues and the qualifications required for admission to each group are as follows:

The Champion League, which will contain the seven branches showing the greatest increase in billings on all Pathe subjects during the qualifying period;

The National League, which will include the seven branches showing the next greatest increase during the preliminary period.

The American League, which will have the seven branches recording the third highest increase;

The Capitol League, which will contain the seven branches showing the fourth highest increase during the qualifying period;

The Minor League, which will include those branches not placed in any of the preceding divisions.

In the event that more than the designated number of branches qualify for places in any division or league, all branches so qualifying will be assigned places in such division or league and will be eligible for the division prize.

With the assignment of all thirty-five branches to their positions in the various leagues, the major term of the contest will begin at midnight of May 18 and end at midnight of July 12.

In case of ties, each branch so tied will be awarded the full prize provided for the position tied for.

General Sales Manager J. E. Storey, for whom the annual Pathe Sales Contest has been named this year, has been associated with the Pathe organization over a period of many years. Prior to his entry into the film field, Mr. Storey served as private secretary to the General Manager of the Union Pacific Railroad. He first became identified with film sales work as a salesman for Vitagraph and later joined the George Kleine system, serving as Kansas City branch manager for that company for about a year.

SENNETT BUSY ON COMEDIES FOR PATHE RELEASE

Rapid progress continues to be made on Mack Sennett's schedule of two-reel comedies for release by Pathe. One company working under the direction of Del Lord is putting the finishing touches on a new screen parody suggested by the big special, "Turn to the Right." The Mack Sennett comedy, which is titled "Turn to the Left," presents Natalie Kingston and Marceline Day in featured roles. These young ladies have just been graduated from the group of 1924 Mack Sennett Bathing Girls.

The Harry Langdon company has been busy at Santa Monica, Cal., under the direction of Roy Del Ruth. This is described as an action comedy with a seaside resort as the background. The 1924 group of Sennett Bathing Girls are a feature of this production, advantage being taken of the seaside atmosphere and setting of the subject to put the girls through some fancy diving and swimming action.

The 26th Infantry is reinforced by four hundred soldiers from Fort Ethan Allen and they will be outfitted and equipped with uniforms and arms of the period of 1776.

Miss Davies and the "Janice Meredith" company, including Holbrook Blinn, Harrison Ford, Maclyn Arbuckle, May Vokes and others are now at Plattsburg.

PROSECUTION CONFRONTS FILM PIRATES

Independent Producers and Distributors Ready to Make Clean-Up

SOME of the irresponsible operatives in various sections of the country, who, under the guise of being exchangemen or exporters, are engaged in the pirating of film, will soon be in the clutches of the law, as legal actions have been instituted to recover prints of subjects, the unauthorized exhibition of which has been thoroughly established.

Many complaints have been filed by members of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association with the Hoy Reporting Service, regarding stolen prints, as well as the unlawful showing of pictures in outside territory and a concerted and persistent effort will be made to expose those engaged in this illegitimate business.

President I. E. Chadwick, in a statement referring to the situation, directs attention to the fact that the administration of the association is pledged to wage an unceasing warfare against all piratical practices and urges the earnest co-operation of all independent exchangemen in eliminating this evil of unauthorized use and bartering in prints.

Investigations thus far made disclose the fact that these pirates do not purchase or lease the prints from the producer or distributor, but secure them from other sources. The exchanges have accordingly been called upon to make an accurate account and check up on all prints, and to secure the physical return of every print delivered to the exchange under the terms of the lease.

The aid of the federal authorities has been solicited with the view to breaking up the illicit traffic in motion picture films, which is not alone very injurious to the domestic business, but is in many instances ruining the trade in foreign countries.

C. B. C. ANNOUNCES SCHEDULE FOR NEXT SEASON

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation have announced their plans for presenting eighth Columbia Pictures, their own feature productions, during the coming season. A wire to this effect was received from Joe Brandt, president of the organization. Mr. Brandt has been in Hollywood for some time consulting with Harry Cohn for the expansion of the C. B. C. activities. His letter states that nothing will be spared to make these pictures the very best in every respect.

They are negotiating with the finest talent and best known directors on the coast, and Mr. Brandt claims that there will be nothing on the market to beat them. Most of the scenarios have already been selected and some of the stories have been adopted from the books of famous authors. While C. B. C. has had great success with their past productions, nothing will be left undone to make their new presentations the last word from the standpoint of quality.

TRADE SHOWING FOR 'GIRL SHY'

A special trade showing of Harold Lloyd's latest comedy production for Pathe, titled "Girl Shy," will be given at Loew's New York Roof, Friday, March 28, at 2 P. M. A special program has been arranged for the occasion, including musical numbers by Ernest Luz's orchestra. The Pathe office advises there will be no other trade showings of the Lloyd comedy in the New York territory.

Another Big Picture

THE latest contender for honors in the field of greater pictures is "The Thief of Bagdad," the magnificent production shown for the first time in New York, March 18. Douglas Fairbanks has given the screen something new, something that in its own realm will thrive for many a day, its leadership unchallenged.

Mr. Fairbanks has displayed marked courage and high sincerity. He has spared nothing, apparently, in the way of time or effort or expense that the screen may have a high ideal of what constitutes staging and lighting and general magnificence.

As to the verdict of the public regarding its drawing power only the public can give it—and its final decision will not be known for some time. It is the opinion of the man from the street sitting out front, not the critic—and of the woman and particularly of the child—that will count ultimately.

No children saw "The Thief of Bagdad" on its premiere. When they do see it no other child who gets the message of what is in it will yield any peace to its parent until the great date has been set. And the children are very close to the hand that rules the world.

By the way, how many children are there in the United States alone? Forty million, perhaps. Just think that over.

What the Public Wants

IN the New York Times of March 16 is printed the varying views of eight experts in the art of entertaining the public. They were asked to give their versions as to what the public wants.

On the jury in the order named by George MacAdam, the writer of the story, are David Belasco, David W. Griffith, George M. Cohan, John Golden, Morris Gest, Sir Harry Lauder, Fannie Hurst and Irving Berlin.

With the exception of possibly Sir Harry and Mr. Berlin all these have had experience in the motion picture field in one way or another.

Mr. Belasco declares that before a play is submitted to the public the best producer can only make a guess and that success is only a matter of conjecture.

That briefly summarizes practically the views of the others. Mr. Griffith says no one knows what the public likes, that the desire of the public for entertainment is like a man's desire for food, for fish at one time and meat at another—that it's a question of mood.

The producer admits that he leans heavily on what to him is the "feel" of a story, but that he has no hard and fast formula. It is of interest to note that he says "Old Bill" in his view is "one of the best movies ever made."

It is true, he concedes, that it has no love interest, no suspense, nothing of what is ordinarily called plot—three elements which as a rule are believed vital to success.

Mr. Cohan diverges from the majority in that he believes the public expects certain things of certain producers and actors. This, of course, if true on the stage would be true in pictures, and we are inclined in a measure to agree with Mr. Cohan.

Mr. Golden, who has had a string of some of the most remarkable successes the stage has known—"Lightnin'," to name just one—declared first of all that the public wants to forget its troubles. When men and women go to the theatre, he says, they want to be diverted.

Standing out through the messages from the eight jurymen is one thing—wholesomeness.

For genuine success it will be agreed that that quality must be present in any entertainment.

Tried and Proved

THE campaign of Exhibitors Trade Review to keep before exhibitors the merits of productions that have not lived out their allotted span is progressing with increasing interest on the part of the two factors most vitally concerned.

These factors are, of course, on one hand exhibitors who for one reason or another have not yet played subjects which by general consent of those theatre owners who have showed them have proved to be entertainment of average or even above that quality. Real entertainment is too rare to permit its untimely relegation to the film cemetery.

On the other hand there are the producers who depend for their profit, and consequently their assurance of remaining in business, upon obtaining for their picture such circulation as may be justified by the quality that may be in them.

The passing of poor pictures or bad pictures is a blessing to all concerned, the exhibitor and the public especially. The early demise of good or fine productions is an injustice as clearly defined as it is unnecessary—to producers, exhibitors and the public.

Save them from an untimely death—the pictures of yesterday!

LEADERS ALL

I. E. Chadwick, Leader of Independents

FOURTEEN years' active experience and ten of these active in one independent exchange is an unusual record. It is but one of the "qualifying rounds" in the career of I. E. Chadwick for the leadership of the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, the new organization which gives promise of so much usefulness to the industry as a whole.

But let's begin at the beginning in this story of the independent chieftain, which was in London, England, in 1884. Three years later the Chadwick family removed to Brooklyn.

Young Chadwick was graduated from Boys' High School in that borough in 1901 and from Cornell in 1905, with the degrees of A. B. and LL.B.

In order that he might have a better background for a business career he had studied both arts and law. He was admitted to practice in 1906. He is in full standing in the State and Federal courts and the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. Chadwick was at one time associated in the practice of law with Reuben L. Haskell, now county judge in Brooklyn and leader of the Liberal Republicans in that borough, and General Horatio C. King.

One of his first experiences as an attorney was on the opposite side of a case in which the chief party in interest was a man he later was to know very well—William A. Brady.

MR. BRADY was suing the New York Transportation Company for damages resulting from an accident and Mr. Chadwick was attorney for the defendant. The stage and picture producer recovered a verdict of several thousand dollars.

Mr. Chadwick's first contact with the motion picture business was as legal representative for Kurt W. Linn, managing director of the Eclectic Film Company, an American branch of Pathe.

The lawyer at that time became intimately acquainted with some of the phases of a crusade in which the new independent organization just now is actively engaged.

LEADERS ALL—I. E. CHADWICK

BECAUSE he entered upon his business career finely equipped from an educational viewpoint; because in his fourteen years' membership in the film industry his services always have been at the command of his competitors in any movement looking to the betterment of the business of which he is so important a part; because not only is he a clear thinker but also is a forceful public speaker

Much trouble was caused by the material expenditure of time, efforts and money necessary to recover prints which had been leased in Paris or London ostensibly for some remote Far Eastern country or South America and then brought to this country and exhibited under the same title or a spurious title in competition with those who had purchased territory in good faith.

Through this work of prosecuting pirates Mr. Chadwick became interested in the pleasanter side of motion pictures. In 1910 he made an investment in Exclusive Pictures, Inc., an independent or state rights exchange.

IN 1914 he formed the Merit Film Corporation, of which he is today still the head. Offices were opened in New York, Buffalo and Albany, covering the territory of New York State and Northern New Jersey.

That means for ten years Mr. Chadwick has been continuously in independent distribution in which his organization has undergone no change in identity. In November, 1914, he made his first investment in a producing company. The outbreak of the Great War had stopped the importations of foreign films on which many of the independent exchanges leaned for their new releases.

Mr. Chadwick purchased a controlling interest in the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., the forerunner of the present Chadwick Pictures Corporation. In 1917 the exchange-man purchased the remaining stock interest from Mr. Abramson, who formed another company.

Mr. Chadwick's present activities include the Merit Film Corporation, which distributes in the New York territory all of the Arrow product and also open market material generally.

On the production side there are three units contributing features to Chadwick Pictures during the coming year.

Hunt Stromberg is making four specials. The John Gorman unit will produce a series, first of which is "The Painted Flapper." Another production unit on which Mr. Chadwick is banking heavily is one starring Lionel Barrymore and being made under the supervision of Mr. Abramson.

THE Jimmy Aubrey comedies are being distributed through the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Nine years ago Mr. Chadwick was one of the founders of the F. I. L. M. Club, and for the first five years served as its president.

He instituted and put in work in that body the arbitration system upon which is based the present workings of the organization. He wrote the first arbitration agreement of the Theatre Owners of New York State and of the Chamber of Commerce.

In the course of his film career Mr. Chadwick has been called upon by his fellows to draft many rules seeking the betterment of the distributing side of the industry. Where these have had to do with the independent division their contents plainly have shown that their author's aim has been to demand and receive not preference or favor but equality—equality of opportunity.

SPLENDID TITLE APPEAL IN 'THE AVERAGE WOMAN'

C. C. Burr's Picture Offers Many Fertile Opportunities for Tie-Ups

THE Average Woman. A thought provoking title, and one that has immeasurable possibilities as a catch line in teaser ads, heralds, and feature stories for newspaper supplements. What this catch line might be may be determined by such models as the following: "Was Eve the Average Woman?" "Your Wife!—Is She Like the Average Woman?" "Would History Have Been Changed Had Cleopatra Been the Average Woman?" And so on, so far as catching the public eye through the appeal of printers' ink plus the cupidity of human nature.

Inviting Material for Editors

SINCE it so happens that the plot of this unquestionably interesting film hinges on a young reporter's assignment to write a series of articles for the Sunday Editor of his paper, it is logical to assume that your local newspaper will lend a willing ear to a proper proposal for a news tie-up. A human interest story on the theme, to which the nature of the film lends itself readily, in conjunction with a plan whereby the newspaper can capitalize far-reaching interest by giving certain prizes for the best articles submitted to them on the subject of the average woman, suggests itself as a vehicle of exploitation which will assume a high rate of speed, following a slight push.

If there ever was an opportunity to work with your local editor this picture affords it in no uncertain terms. The "Average Woman" is a real honest to goodness newspaper story and one that should involve little trouble in receiving the hearty co-operation of live-wire editors.

Merchandising Tie-Ups Galore

THE title of "The Average Woman" gives free play for any number of excellent merchandising tie-ups. Each merchant undoubtedly arranges his wares to attract the average woman, for she is in the majority, so far as purchases are concerned. Thus, hook-ups with waist shops, perfumeries, department stores, stores which sell apparel, and so forth, are right in the line of march for the exhibitor's exploitation broadsides.

In tie-ups with store-keepers, window displays suggest themselves as the most fertile method of attracting attention. Placards using a catchline connecting both the merchandise and the name of the picture and where it is playing should bring results which will impell the merchant to play ball with the exhibitor on further attractions as well as the present one.

GREAT WHITE WAY' PLAYS COAST TO COAST

Picture Crowds New York Capitol at Every Performance

SUBSTANTIATING the prophecy of New York newspaper reviewers who declared Cosmopolitan's spectacular photoplay of Broadway life, "The Great White Way" was certain to appeal to movie audiences throughout the United States, the film, in addition to playing to capacity houses at the Capitol Theatre, New York, this week is currently attracting large throngs to picture houses located in cities from Boston to San Francisco.

In Boston, "The Great White Way," is showing to capacity crowds at the Park Theatre. At the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, it has settled down for an indefinite run, while at the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, and the California Theatre, Los Angeles, the picture is likewise duplicating its New York success. The coast to coast popularity which "The Great White Way" is enjoying emphasizes the fact that the entire nation is attracted by events on New York's main street as visualized in the film.

This picture which had an extended run at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York, some weeks ago has been accorded a very special and beautiful presentation by S. L. Rothafel which precedes each showing at the Capitol Theatre. "The Great White Way" was adapted by Luther Reed from H. C. Witwer's story "Cain and Mabel" and was directed by E. Mason Hopper.

KENNETH HARLAN TO TOUR THEATRES IN PERSON

Kenneth Harlan has again donned the cowboy outfit which he wore in "The Virginian." This time the purpose is not to make a new picture, but to make a series of personal appearances in connection with the showing of "The Virginian" in the large cities where the picture is being shown for the first time.

This picture has been booked by an astonishingly large number of houses in various parts of the country, and in each place reports from exhibitors show that it is doing phenomenal business.

Since making "The Virginian" Kenneth Harlan has appeared in another Preferred

BETTER FILMS ASSOCIATION LAUDS 'WHITE SISTER'

That Metro's "The White Sister" is the most artistic and entertaining picture they have ever viewed is the opinion of the Better Films Committee of Jacksonville, Florida, according to a letter received at the Metro offices last week from Joseph F. Marron, chairman of the committee.

This is but one of many letters and telegrams that exhibitors and prominent people in the country have sent to the Metro offices since "The White Sister" was released last month.

"The White Sister" is a Henry King production for Inspiration Pictures, Inc., of which Charles H. Duell, Jr., is president. It is taken from F. Marion Crawford's famous novel of the same name.

The film has been the subject of much favorable comment from various sources and is proving its worth by the large audiences it is attracting in the key cities in which it is showing

'WHY MEN LEAVE HOME' BIG IN CHICAGO

To Be Released Throughout Country Latter Part of April

ALTHOUGH First National's "Why Men Leave Home" will not be released for general distribution until the latter part of April, it will in the meantime be given a series of test runs in selected cities and from these, it is hoped, there will be gleaned advertising and exploitation campaigns which may be profitably passed on to the other exhibitors.

The film had its premiere at Balaban and Katz's Chicago Theatre last week and did very good business despite the advent of Lent which usually cuts into business.

The picture is an adaptation of the satirical matrimonial drama by Avery Hopwood and this, in combination with the title, director's name, and a cast including Lewis Stone, Helene Chadwick and Mary Carr, should make the film very popular.

To aid the exhibitor in getting the results on the picture which the producers think it can get, First National has planned a very extensive exploitation campaign and from now until the date of general release they will concentrate on planning campaigns for the various theatres.

LEE AND KIRKWOOD SCORE IN 'LOVE'S WHIRLPOOL'

When Hodkinson's "Love's Whirlpool" had its premiere in New York at the Camero Theatre, it received a very warm welcome from the New York critics all of whom were more or less impressed with the picture.

The story is a crook melodrama and features Lila Lee and James Kirkwood. In words of praise for these two stars nothing was lacking. Both are accumulating a great following and since their marriage the public seems even more interested in them. This is their first picture together since their adventure into matrimony, and a portion of the fan population is much interested in the picture on that account.

Besides the work of the stars, critics also noted the adequacy of the story and the splendid photography and direction. If the film is as well received in other cities there can be no doubt that it will meet with real success.

PUTTING IT OVER WITH SMILES AND SOBS

Scenes like these give punch and interest to C. B. C.'s "Barefoot Boy," a picturization of Whittier's poem of the same name. John Bowers, Sylvia Breamer, Marjorie Daw and Tully Marshall all number among the list of featured players who interpret the more important roles. The picture successfully runs the scale of emotions

PATRONS ENTHUSIASTIC OVER CHRONICLES

Auditorium Not Large Enough to Accommodate Audiences

A STRIKING instance of the unusual co-operation being extended Pathe's "Chronicles of America" pictures by the press is found in the recent preview showing of "Columbus" and "Vincennes" in Cincinnati. Arrangements had been made originally for the presentation of these subjects in the auditorium of the University of Cincinnati, but the response was so great that it was found necessary to transfer the showing to Hughes High School which has a much larger seating capacity.

Following the preview, the leading Cincinnati newspapers devoted unusually liberal portions of space to an account of the showing and were enthusiastic in their comments on the pictures. Lewis Hillhouse, writing for the Cincinnati Post, referred to the screening as follows:

"Last night I saw two episodes from the Yale University Press' historical film, based on its 'Chronicles of America.' There are to be eventually, 30 more.

"If these are as fascinating and thrilling as the two exhibited to an invitation audience at Hughes High School, I'm done with all other kinds of movies while the series lasts. And then we will pay for more.

"Imagine a thousand or more people breaking into terrific applause about 10:30 p. m., when the film came to a conclusion and the last scene—not of fiction, but of history, mind you—had been shown. It happens rarely in a picture performance. It happened sometimes during the war when emotions were abnormal. But this is the first time I remember such an experience in normal and placid days. The reason lies in the fact that history is not 'bunk' as a great, but cynical man has said, but that it is a living drama of actual events, stranger and more wonderful than fiction."

Impressed by the enthusiastic reception accorded the productions by both public and press, Ike Libson, prominent exhibitor of the Middle West, has booked the "Chronicle" pictures and is preparing to launch the first of the series in the near future in his theatres located in Cincinnati, Louisville, Dayton and Columbus.

'THREE WEEKS' HELD OVER FOR SECOND WEEK

Because of the tremendous business done by Goldwyn's Elinor Glyn picture, "Three Weeks," at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre where it had its Washington premiere, the film was held over for a second week.

It received the highest praise from reviewers in Washington newspapers, proved a veritable magnet for attracting the public to the Rialto and generally far exceeded the expectations which the producers held out for it.

"Three Weeks" is Elinor Glyn's widely read love story which, according to the critics, has lost nothing in transposition to the screen and still has the power to thrill. It was directed by Alan Crosland.

Fathers, mothers and college students in the Southwest and school children in the East recently have attended special celebrations at which Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish" has been the central feature, and demonstrated that a high class motion picture provides sufficient entertainment for any gathering.

The more unique use to which this photoplay was put was that adopted by the College of Industrial Arts, at Denton, Tex. The parents of the 1,600 students maintain a Father's

CRITICS AGREE ON MERIT OF 'THY NAME IS WOMAN'

An interesting incident comes to light in the matter of the reviews of "Thy Name Is Woman," the Fred Niblo-Louis Mayer production for Metro. For what is recorded to be the first time, all seven reviewers on the San Francisco dailies agree on the merits of a picture.

They are unanimous in the opinion that this is a real worthwhile picture with every requisite for becoming a universal box office attraction. Every feature of the production from the work of the stars to Niblo's treatment of the subject was favorably discussed and declared as satisfactory as anything that could be hoped for.

'LONE WOLF' HAS SEVERAL EARLY BOOKINGS

To Have Run at Rialto in New York and McVicker's in Chicago

THE LONE WOLF," starring Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt, which is to have its official release March 23, has already been booked by many of the leading theatres of the country, an announcement by Associated Exhibitors states. The picture is to have an early run at the Rialto Theatre, New York, while March 22 has been set as the tentative date for its start at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, and March 29 at the Metropolitan, Los Angeles.

Other bookings call for early runs also at the Fenway Theatre, Boston, the Stanley, Philadelphia, and first run houses throughout the entire Southern Enterprises circuit, including theatres in Dallas, Houston, Fort Worth, Atlanta, Memphis, Birmingham and several other cities.

Despite the prominence given Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt in this S. E. V. Taylor production, the cast may fairly be described as all-star, with such well known players in the company as Wilton Lackaye, Tyrone Power, Charlotte Walker, Lucy Fox, Edouard Durant, Robert T. Haines, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Alphonse Ethier, William Tooker and Paul McAllister.

Adapted from Louis Joseph Vance's best seller of the same name, "The Lone Wolf" is chockful of entertainment appeal, according to persons who have had previews. Glimpses are afforded of studio life in the gay Bohemia of Paris, visits paid to the haunts of the notorious Paris Apaches, and the curtain is raised on some of the mysteries of international diplomacy. The grand climax comes in an airplane fight which is said to be the most thrilling thing of the kind ever screened.

'LET NOT MAN PUT ASUNDER' HAS CITY BOOKINGS

The reports received at the Vitagraph office following the first week of release of "Let Not Man Put Asunder" were very satisfactory to the producers. The bookings include big houses all over the country, and in Newark, N. J., it scored a "standing room only" success when it played at the Bradford Theatre. Leslie Austin, who appears in the cast in a prominent role, appeared at the theatre in person, thereby adding to the attraction.

The picture also played very successfully at the Isis Theatre in Grand Rapids, Mich. The manager, Billy Wehle, took advantage of the paper distributed on this picture and dressed his lobby according to suggestions contained in the campaign book. In a letter to Vitagraph he remarked especially on the effectiveness of this material and added also that he thought the picture a one hundred per cent fan attraction which elicited much favorable comment from his audiences—especially the women who seem particularly pleased.

'THE THIEF' MAKES HISTORY FOR SCREEN

Fairbanks' Remarkable Achievement Is a Triumph of Camera Magic and Regal Staging

THE THIEF OF BAGDAD. Produced by Douglas Fairbanks for United Artists Release. Author, Elton Thomas. Scenario Editor, Lotta Woods. Research Director, Dr. Arthur Woods. Art Director, William Cameron Menzies. Director of Mechanical Effects, Hampton Del Ruth. Photographer, Arthur Edson. Director, Raoul Walsh. Length, Approximately 12,000 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

The Thief of Bagdad Douglas Fairbanks
His Evil Associate Snitz Edwards
The Holy Man Charles Belcher
The Princess Julianne Johnston
The Caliph Brandon Hurst

In Bagdad lives Ahmed the Thief. Stealing a magic rope he climbs to many strange places. He visits the chamber of the sleeping Princess and narrowly escapes destruction. Stealing an outfit he joins three other princes who sue for the hand of the Princess. When he finds the latter in love with him he is contrite, suffers capture and is flogged. Going to the Holy Man he previously had mocked he is given a dangerous mission which if accomplished will restore him to standing. By subterfuge the princess induces the Caliph to delay the betrothal for seven moons, the choice to go to the prince bringing back the rarest present. The Thief undergoes many hardships, returning on his flying horse to find the city captured by the mongols. With his casket he creates an army which retakes the city and with his cloak of invisibility he rescues the princess. With the blessing of the Caliph the two lovers depart on the flying carpet.

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

A SUPERLATIVE spectacle is "The Thief of Bagdad." In all truth Douglas Fairbanks and his score and a half of technicians have builded a great city and peopled it to provide the multitude with a three hours' holiday.

As a spectacle "The Thief of Bagdad" is magnificently and thrillingly impressive. Almost it may be said it is pure magic. In setting and in grandeur it is regal. Its appeal is almost wholly to the eye. It rarely reaches the heart, and then not deeply.

The production is one which cannot be measured with a yardstick. It defies adequate description. It is the Arabian Nights, with its magic rope, its magic crystal, its golden apple and its magic carpet of Bagdad. And it has its magic chest of Nazir, with which the repentant and transformed Thief creates an army literally of thousands and recaptures the city.

It has its towering structures, with its massive gates—and really they are massive—its interminable rooms, its descending and curving run-ways, its battlements and its many streets.

The theme of the story, its moral if you will, possesses real nobility: That true happiness can come only through work. It is the realization of the truth of this after he has been touched by love which sends the Thief to the Holy Man, and provides, near the ending of the first half of the tale, the initial reaction of a deeper sort.

The journey of the Thief in his dangerous search for the magic chest is beset by high adventure; over and through turbulent seas and in caverns of fire; and into combats with strange beasts, dragons and sea monsters.

Then there is the flight of the winged white horse over the clouds and through the air and the stirring ride over the sands on the magnificent black. And the trip of the three Princes on the magic carpet is a sight to linger in the imagination.

Perhaps the best description of the production is that it is fascinating entertainment. It leaves the spectator, even he of the hard-boiled variety, amazed, wondering how it was achieved.

Snitz Edwards most notably shines for a few minutes, and so, too, does Miss Johnston as the princess and Charles Belcher as the Holy Man. But from beginning to end the center of interest is the catlike and agile Thief of Bagdad—and there is rarely a second.

It would be a major omission in this necessarily hurried review of a production that will rank in magnitude as the peer of the most ambitious to fail to point out the feature of the closing scenes.

This was where the lone horseman returning from his pilgrimage of rehabilitation finds the city overthrown. From his magic chest, like a sower in the fields, he throws about him small particles which as they strike the ground are turned to smoke, the smoke to soldiers.

It develops into a remarkable spectacle, and one that will arouse enthusiasm in any house.

Chief Joseph Girard

The Eel, elusive crook, puzzles the police completely. John Norton, mayor, determines to clean up the town, but is foiled. His daughter Cordelia enlists the Eel's help to obtain some incriminating documents from a big political boss. Cordelia and her confederate are caught in the boss' house. The tables are turned when the supposed crook turns out to be Miles Manning, a celebrated criminologist. He wins Cordelia and the guilty politicians are punished.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE'S always a demand in certain sections for crook melodramas with a dark mystery angle, and wherever this type of picture is popular "Stolen Secrets" will fill the bill satisfactorily. It is by far the best of any films in which Herbert Rawlinson has been starred recently.

Not that the plot differs greatly from many of its predecessors dealing with life in the underworld, the central idea; that of a crafty night operator who plays hob with police morale by pulling off successful jobs, but later turns out to be an amateur detective, has frequently been utilized in scenario form.

But Director Irving Cummings imparts a spice of originality to the story by his cleverness in handling his material, there are many odd and surprising situations outlined which dovetail neatly the one into the other with unexpected results, the continuity holds without a break, and considerable ingenuity is displayed in the way the actual identity of the principal characters is kept under cover until the climax develops.

Exploit this as an underworld feature in which there is unlimited action, thrills galore and a mystery twist warranted to keep all the spectators guessing. Herbert Rawlinson possesses a strong fan following and his name should be prominently displayed in your advertising. The work of Kathleen Myers, William Conklin and Joseph Girard is also worthy of mention.

Fogarty George Cooper
Marie Bessie Love
Carstock Morgan Wallace
Boris Jean Hersholt

Count Boris escapes from Russia during the Revolution, with the crown jewels, which he intends to use in aid of his starving countrymen. Carstock, an international crook, with the help of Hansen and Fogarty, plans to steal the jewels. En route for Yokohama, Hansen falls in love with Marie, a maid and resolves to go straight. They are all engulfed, along with Boris, by the earthquake in a bank vault. Boris is slain. Hansen gets the jewels, which he promises to devote to the service of the poor. Rescue comes and Hansen wins Marie.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

GOOD box office value for theatres where patrons want the stuff that thrills, encompassed by sizzling action! You can always depend upon a William Dudley Pelley yarn for peppy sensations and a knowledge of human nature that counts heavily in the preparation of material for screen entertainment. And "Torment"—is no exception to this rule.

It's melodrama of the most varied and exciting kind, "swinging all round the circle," for the action begins in Russia, is transferred to America and winds up at Yokohama, Japan, where the recent earthquake furnishes a tremendously effective background for a climax jammed to the guards with startling incident.

This final situation, with the philanthropic Count Boris, the crooks seeking possession of the crown jewels and hero and heroine, all trapped in a bank vault, while the earth overhead shakes and trembles in nature's mighty convulsion, is a sure-fire humdinger of realism.

Maurice Tourneur, whose direction throughout the entire production is excellent, scores particularly in the earthquake scene, providing some wonderful studio sets with large buildings shattered and falling to ruin. He also introduces some news reel shots of the actual disaster which heightens the interest immensely.

Owen Moore is at his best in the portrayal of Hansen, a part he plays with plenty of reserve power, avoiding the temptation to overact which a role of this kind usually presents, and giving a convincing, well-balanced performance. Praise is due Bessie Love for her clever impersonation of the dainty Marie, Morgan Wallace scores a hit as the arch-villain and conspirator, Carstock, while Jean Hersholt never appeared to better advantage than as the human, self-sacrificing Boris. The camera offers a profusion of beautiful scenic shots by sea and land, besides the realistic quake views, and perfect lighting prevails.

Make your patrons understand that this is something altogether unique in the melodramatic line. The love interest never falters; thrill, romance, wonderful scenery and swift action combine to make it a picture young and old will enjoy. Stress the intense, terrific realism of the big earthquake scene, you can't go wrong on that point. Every member of the cast is well known to the trade and fans, play them up, and don't omit the author's name in your exploitation, for William Dudley Pelley's stories have stirred up movie patrons considerably in the past.

A FIRST-CLASS attraction, with enviable box office possibilities! No exhibitor, whatever kind of patronage he caters to, need be afraid of booking "The Hoosier Schoolmaster."

A picture appealing to highbrows and lowbrows alike comes very close to being the ideal type of screen entertainment, and we venture to assert that both the so-called "intellectuals" and everyday average folks will find pleasure in watching this story unfold. Well directed, presented by a capable cast of players, radiating sympathy and human interest, there is just enough melodramatic coloring infused into the narrative to spice up the action and awaken suspense.

Nor is the comedy element neglected. In such scenes as the spelling bee, for instance, there are some delightful flashes of rustic humor, as natural and unrestrained as life itself. In fact, one of the film's outstanding bids for popularity is the fact that all these people impress you as real flesh-and-blood creation, with nothing mechanical about them.

As regards the preservation of law and order the State of Indiana had a lot to contend with in the period prior to the coming of Civil War hostilities. There were outlaws in plenty, the authorities had their hands more than full and lynching of suspects by more or less irresponsible bands of self-named vigilants frequently occurred.

The mob spirit is rife in this picture and there are several stormy sessions depicted where the blood-lust of his enemies is nearly the cause of the hero-schoolmaster's untimely demise. These situations are veritable explosions of human dynamite, extremely well handled by Director Oliver Sellers, the grouping is remarkably effective and the tension tightens almost to the breaking point.

Henry Hull plays the hero, giving a very fine and artistic impersonation of Ralph Hartsook, he wisely refrains from overdoing the "heroics," with the result that Ralph figures as a "regular chap," pleasingly honest and sincere. Jane Thomas, in the role of Hannah Thompson, attracts fully as much attention for her dramatic ability as does Mr. Hull. She is never camer-conscious, and her work is absolutely free from posing.

Other sterling performances are the rough-and-ready portrayal of Bud Means, Ralph's faithful pal, by Nat Pendleton, the amateur wrestler, who proves that he can act as skillfully as he can grapple an opponent on the mat; and the clever interpretation of those disagreeable roles, Mis' Means and Pete Jones, by Mary Foy and Arthur Ludwig. The support as a whole is excellent, and good photography distinguishes the entire production.

"The Hoosier Schoolmaster" was first published in 1872 and has attained literary fame as a faithful representation of American life in the era where the action takes place.

It was, and is today, immensely popular, and tie-ups with school boards and educational societies should follow as a matter of course in exploiting the picture. You may safely promise your patrons a treat in the line of appealing romance, vibrant thrills, fun and excellent acting by a large and talented cast.

The names of Henry Hull, Jane Thomas and Mary Foy possess advertising value, and the sporting contingent will rally to the call of Nat Pendleton, erstwhile king of America's amateur heavyweight wrestlers.

'Leave It to Gerry' May Pass Where Bill Is Often Changed

LEAVE IT TO GERRY. Grand-Asher Photoplay. Author, Adam Hull Shirk. Director, Arvid Gillstrom. Length, 5,748 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Geraldine Brent	Billie Rhodes
Dan Forbes	William Collier, Jr.
Mrs. Brent	Claire McDowell
Mrs. Masters	Kate Lester
Mrs. Turner-Prescott	Kathleen Kirkham
Colonel Pettijohn	Joseph Girard
Mr. Burton	Allan Cavan

Geraldine Brent, known as Gerry, goes to Chicago to be educated at her rich aunt's expense. The land on which her mother's home stands is mortgaged. There is oil on it, and Colonel Pettijohn conspires to gain possession. The mortgage is foreclosed and Mrs. Brent taken to the workhouse. Gerry meets a former boy acquaintance, Dan Forbes, and becomes his sweetheart. They ride to the workhouse and rescue Mrs. Brent. Pettijohn's schemes are defeated and Mrs. Brent regains her property.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

JUVENILE fans and adults of a not too critical turn of mind may find this comedy drama pleasing entertainment. So far as its dramatic values are concerned it leans altogether too much to the slushy sentimental side of things, nor is the story on the whole at all convincing. Neither exactly bad or good, a sort of lukewarm concoction, "Leave It to Gerry" is best suited to the needs of theatres whose bills are frequently changed.

The picture's best scenes and situations are those dealing with the youthful heroine's escapades at boarding school. These incidents are depicted with praiseworthy vim and sparkle, some good animal stuff is introduced and the gambols of the youngsters are life-like and amusing.

In the attempt to impart variety to the proceedings Director Gillstrom has permitted himself to wander too far afield from the main line of his plot. The result is a bewildering mass of utterly superfluous detail and sadly shattered continuity. By the time the onlooker wanders back over the winding trail to mother in the workhouse, after following the harum-scarum adventures of the girlish heroine, his or her mind is so entangled that it is by no means an easy task to pick out the narrative's original thread.

Some sympathetic folks will probably find the mother's woes provocative of tears, but others of a more practical turn will wonder what logical excuse the author had for landing her in a pauper institution, when she had a wealthy sister who was generous enough to provide for her child. Intercepted letters are utilized to account for the aunt's ignorance of this distressing fact, as well as the irrepressible Gerry, but this threadbare device is a bit too thin and unconvincing.

Play up the boarding school scenes in exploiting this feature, stress the boy and girl romance, the mother love lure, and mention the names of the leading players. The title has a catchy sound and can be utilized.

GOWNS AND SETS DE LUXE

'Lilies of the Field' Offers Familiar Theme With Elaborate Trimmings

LILIES OF THE FIELD. First National Photoplay. Adapted from William Hurlburt's Stage Play. Director, John Francis Dillon. Length, 8,510 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mildred Harker	Corinne Griffith
Louis Willing	Conway Tearle
Doris	Alma Bennett
Vera	Sylvia Breamer
Mazie	Myrtle Stedman
Walter Harker	Craufurd Kent
Charles Lee	Charlie Murray
Gertrude	Phyllis Haver
Florette	Cissy Fitzgerald
Ted Conroy	Charles Gerrard

Neglected by her pleasure-loving husband, Mildred Harker is compromised by an admirer. Walter Harker divorces her and obtains custody of their baby. Mildred, employed as a model, refuses an offer to become Louis Willing's mistress. Willing, who is really in love with her, is convinced of Mildred's worthiness. He weds her and she regains her child.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

LAVISH settings, exceedingly fine photography, the gorgeous array of gowns adorning the person of the star, whose physical charms are undeniable, constitute the principal box office assets of this picture. A familiar theme is developed—that of the neglected wife, wrongfully divorced by an unappreciative husband, who suffers bravely, refuses to yield to temptation, with the result that she finally finds a lover worth while and regains custody of the child which the law has taken away from her.

Of course, the idea is to work up sympathy for the heroine, and this purpose is attained to a certain extent, but it is none the less a clear case of sacrificing logic to sentimental urge. In the stage play from which the film is adapted the risque element predominated and there was much humorous appeal.

The "legitimate" attraction registered as an expose of fast society, the "lilies of the field" being represented by a number of ladies who went in boldly for a good time and "gold-digging," regardless of moral ethics. The heroine of the play consents to become a mistress, she of the picture scornfully turns down the base tempter's offer, thereby warding off censorship interference.

It was evidently this fear of the censors that led Director John Francis Dillon to cut out much of the story's amusing moments the result being a distinctly "weepy" feature destitute of effective comedy's saving grace. Just why he thought it necessary to string out to a painful degree the funeral service of one of the fair, frail creatures remains an unsolved problem to which Mr. Dillon alone has the key. This particular episode is horribly gloomy, hampers the action and could be eliminated altogether.

Also, many trivial scenes are elaborated to a tiresome length, burdening and breaking up the continuity with a superfluity of dragging detail which detracts from the interest of the main theme.

The most dramatic moment is emphasized when Mildred Harker revolts against the proposal of Willing to occupy an apartment at his expense. Corinne Griffith is emotionally persuasive in this scene and again, when she gives way to grief in the presence of her missing baby's high chair, a very effective bit of pathos. Conway Tearle gives a well-balanced performance as Louis Willing, and Craufurd Kent scores as the caddish husband.

The fashion display in this picture must not be overlooked in exploiting it and will appeal strongly to women folks. Corinne Griffith's beauty and her handsome gowns are good selling points. The dazzling society atmosphere settings and the battle of an unjustly accused wife against the world's opinion should be widely advertised. Tie-ups with modiste establishments are in order.

Betrayed by chauffeur Henry Watson, a British girl of good family, Dorothy Forbes, is taken care of by her aunt. A baby is born and given in charge of Watson and his wife. Dorothy weds Sir Richard Hawke, K. C. Watson while drunk, kills the baby. He is tried for murder. Dorothy goes on the witness stand and tells the truth. Watson is sentenced to death. Dorothy's husband forgives her.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

JUDGED strictly from a dramatic standpoint there is much to be said in praise of "A Woman's Secret." It is well directed, and Mae Marsh, ably supported by a British cast of uniform excellence, invests the leading role with the lure of irresistible personal magnetism and sweeping emotional urge, qualities which have won for her recognition as one of the screen's most talented artistes.

Considered as a commercial asset the picture's future in the American market appears rather dubious. The story's strength is undeniable. It runs along the entire scale of earthly passions, mistaken romance, betrayal, genuine love, murder, revenge and self-sacrifice, with kindly forgiveness crowning the climax. But even though the tragic chorus ends on a note of harmonious happiness, it must be admitted that the pervading atmosphere of gloom which envelops the major portion of the feature weighs heavily on the mind of the average spectator, leaving a disagreeable impression behind.

And that sort of thing usually spells failure for a feature on this side of the water. It may be true that "the English take their pleasures sadly"—at any rate, this production, manufactured under British skies, would seem to confirm the adage. But that is, most emphatically, not the case with the American public. Our discerning screen fans welcome a certain amount of tragedy and stark realism, but they object strenuously when the agony is piled on too thickly.

Look at it any way you want to, still you can't get over the unvarnished fact that the betrayal of an innocent girl and subsequent slaughter of her illegitimate infant isn't a pleasant or particularly moral topic to serve as the principal theme for an evening's amusement. One thing is sure: "A Woman's Secret" cannot be listed as carrying a universal appeal, for any exhibitor catering largely to the family or juvenile trade would naturally hesitate about booking it.

The scenes outlining Dorothy's school career are prettily handled, providing the only comedy touches in the feature. A really tremendous emotional situation is that in which the heroine, when the honored wife of a distinguished man, is called upon to face the consequences of her fatal slip in early life. Her appearance on the witness stand, when Watson is tried for murder, and the solemn formality of the legal proceedings at the famous Old Bailey criminal court, are episodes fraught with suspense and melodramatic thrills, kept well within reasonable bounds.

The versatile Mae Marsh's portrayal of the heroine, Dorothy, is a superb bit of acting. First as the gay, lighthearted schoolgirl, then as the sorrowing wife burdened with a sense of guilt and fear of the darkling future, she actually lives and suffers in the role, winning sympathy and admiration. Her associates give splendid support. Only one of the players, Aubrey Smith, is known to American stage and screen patrons. He appears as Sir Richard Hawke, K. C., Dorothy's magnanimous husband, and fills the part with fine dignity and dramatic effect. The work of the remaining members of the company is all that could be desired.

The photography includes a number of exceedingly attractive exteriors, the interiors are remarkably well filmed and the genuine English atmosphere adds considerably to the picture's artistic finish.

Play up Mae Marsh in exploiting the feature. Her name is a sure magnet for drawing power, and you can confidently go on record as stating that her impersonation of Dorothy Forbes is well up to the standard of her usual high-class work. Make it plain that the story embodies tragedy and pathos of exceedingly realistic order, so that your patrons may know in advance exactly what to expect.

AN AVERAGE WESTERN FILM

Combats, Romance and Hard Riding Provide Many Thrills

THE PHANTOM HORSEMAN. Universal Photoplay. Author, Isadore Bernstein, Director Robert North Bradbury. Length, 4,399 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bob Winton	Jack Hoxie
Dorothy Mason	Lillian Rich
Fred Mason	Neil McKinnon
Jefferson Williams	Wade Boteler

Sheriff Bob Winton promises to capture "The Hawk," a night-riding bandit. The stage is robbed of gold owned by loan-shark Markey. The latter has a mortgage on the ranch run by Dorothy Mason, and her young scape-grace brother, Fred. Markey's safe is robbed and Fred Mason arrested. In order to save the brother of the girl he loves, Bob asserts that he is "The Hawk." But Fred commits suicide, leaving a note admitting that he is the outlaw and clearing Bob, who thrashes Markey and wins Dorothy.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

AN average Westerner, which offers fair box office possibilities as a program attraction, especially in localities where the star has a strong following. So far as regards originality of theme or construction, the plot hasn't much to boast of, but the good work of the players and the swiftly revolving action keeps the melodramatic interest alive through five reels of shooting, lovemaking and galloping steeds.

From a purely artistic standpoint "The Phantom Horseman" scores at high-water mark. Better photography could not be desired, the rolling plains of the West, the mountain backgrounds, with snow capped peaks, canyons and valleys are filmed with exquisite skill and the lights and shadow effects register as a treat to the appreciative eye. Also some rarely beautiful long shots.

While the hero gains a certain measure of sympathy by his willingness to assume the burden of guilt rightfully belonging to the brother of the girl he loves, this proceeding on his part doesn't add weight to the story's logic, for it seems altogether too theatrical. Neither does it appear exactly clear why it was necessary to show his mother's death in the early stages as the old lady's demise has no bearing whatsoever on what follows later on in the plot.

But consistency of detail or true-to-life incidents are seldom expected or missed by lovers of this type of film, which is made to amuse, and fulfills its destiny in that direction by putting over a variety of thrills and jamming one exciting situation close on the heels of the next.

The star is right at home in the role of sheriff Bob Winton, and Lillian Rich a particularly fetching damsel who looks bewitching and acts admirably as Dorothy Mason.

Play up Jack Hoxie in your exploitation, the fans who favor this star, and there are plenty of 'em, can rest assured that he won't disappoint his faithful admirers on this occasion. It's good Western stuff of the conventional brand.

'THE FIGHTING COWARD'

Latest James Cruze Production Registers as Fine Drawing Card for Any Theatre

THE FIGHTING COWARD. Paramount Photoplay. Adapted from Booth Tarkington's Stage Play, "Magnolia." Director, James Cruze. Length, 6,501 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

General Orlando Jackson	Ernest Torrence
Lucy	Mary Astor
Blackie	Noah Beery
Tom Rumford	Cullen Landis
Elvira	Phyllis Haver
Major Patterson	G. Raymond Nye
Joe Patterson	Richard Neal
Mexico	Carmen Phillips

Tom Rumford, Southern-born, but reared by Philadelphia relatives, returns to Mississippi when twenty-one and becomes engaged to his cousin, Elvira. Unused to the stern traditions of the Southern code, he is driven from home in disgrace when he refuses a challenge to fight a duel. Later he meets General Orlando Jackson, famous gun-fighter. Jackson develops the lad into a dangerous shot and fighting man, under the name of Colonel Blake. With his honor cleared, he revisits his folks, who all bow down before him, and weds Elvira's young sister, Lucy.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A BULLY comedy drama which reflects unlimited credit upon director James Cruze and all concerned in the making of "The Fighting Coward!" The exhibitor who books this feature may rest assured that his patrons will go away fully satisfied that they have received their money's worth and something over. It is the sort of picture which should prove a big drawing card wherever it is shown.

The story is a good-natured burlesque of those old-time melodramas which dealt with the fire-eaters of the South before the Civil War and their rigid code of honor, by which a man refusing a challenge to a duel incurred the stigma of cowardice and the contempt of all his associates.

This is what befalls the mildly-disposed Tom Rumford, whose Eastern training has quite unfitted him for participation in social life below the Mason-Dixon line. How he suddenly decides to stop "being afraid," whips the notorious Captain Blackie, and thereafter advertises himself successfully as—"a man-eating gorilla and toughest crocodile in the Great Dismal Swamp"—is developed in as amusing a travesty of mock-heroic action as has ever stirred a screen audience into gales of incessant laughter.

It is a masterpiece of ironical fun, cleverly directed, beautifully photographed and brilliantly acted by a cast fully deserving of the all-star brand. Romance, comedy, satire, fast action, are woven deftly together, the scenario-writer has done a perfect job, and deliciously pertinent and witty sub-titles add materially to the humorous drift of the tale.

Among the big scenes are the scrap between Tom Rumford and Blackie, which terminates with the later defeated and disgraced; and that in which Blackie deprived of his bank roll, garments, and compelled to don female attire for the shielding of his nakedness is seen sneaking homeward. And with all the mirthful trend of things, there's a note of pathos sounded in the film's early stages, when the bewildered young Rumford loses his sweetheart's love and family's respect, just because he fails to comprehend the wide gulf existing between Northern and Southern honor standards.

Cullen Landis does the best work of his career in the hero role, Ernest Torrence is a scream as the notorious General Orlando Jackson, Noah Beery "pulls the rough stuff" as only he can, in the part of Captain Blackie. You can truthfully promise your patrons "something entirely different from the usual run of feature films" when exploiting this one. Every member of the company deserves recognition. Play up the beautiful scenery, the comedy values, the fighting thrills and love romance. Make it clear that the picture is worthy of the man who directed "The Covered Wagon," and don't overlook the fact that Booth Tarkington is responsible for the story.

MELODRAMA WELL PRESENTED

'Arizona Express' Establishes Very Valuable Speed Record

THE ARIZONA EXPRESS. Fox Film Story by Lincoln J. Carter. Directed by Thomas Buckingham. Length, 6,313 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Katherine Keith	Pauline Starke
Lola Nicols	Evelyn Brent
Florence Brown	Anne Cornwall
David Keith	Harold Goodwin
Steve Butler	David Butler
Victor Johnson	Francis MacDonald
Judge Ashton	Frank Beal

David Keith, though engaged to a young girl of the town, loves a cabaret dancer who pretends to love him in order to secure information on the layout of the bank which she and her gang intend to rob. When the boy's uncle suddenly discovers the plan he is killed by one of the woman's confederates. David is accused of the murder and sent to prison. Just a few minutes before the time set for his execution, he is pardoned by the governor through the efforts of his sister who has secured evidence which establishes his innocence.

By HENRIETTE SLOANE

A LARGE slice of romance, a double portion of thrills, plenty of suspense, and a generous dash of fast and fierce action, were all put into the scenario stew pot by Lincoln Carter. Thomas Buckingham stirred and watched the mixture and the net result is a delectable melodrama—"The Arizona Express." There is no doubt that it has all the elements which should make it a snug fitting neighborhood house attraction, and if given the proper exploitation should certainly come out on top.

The picture flows along with smooth continuity, the story is sustaining, and the scenes of daring and the physical encounter are real enough to keep an audience on the edge of its seats.

You might arrange, also, to get out an imitation railroad ticket which you can send to your mailing list. The special campaign book which Fox has prepared for this picture carries a sample ticket which you will find easy to imitate and which should admirably suit your purposes.

Another stunt that will interest the kids, and will therefore come to the attention of a great number of others, is this: Get a quantity of very inexpensive whistles and tie each to a small card bearing the message: "Sound your whistle for 'The Arizona Express.' All aboard for the — Theatre."

'WOMEN WHO GIVE'

Reginald Barker Feature Has Box Office Lure of Scenic and Story Values

WOMEN WHO GIVE. Metro Photoplay Presented by Louis B. Mayer. Author, Sarah P. McLean Greene. Director, Reginald Barker. Length, 7,500 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jonathan Swift	Frank Keenan
Becky Keeler	Renee Adoree
Captain Joe Cradlebow	Robert Frazier
Emily Swift	Barbara Bedford
Captain Bijonah Keeler	Joseph Dowling
Noah Swift	Eddie Phillips
Ephraim Doolittle	Victor Potel
Sophronia Higginbottom	Joan Standing
Ma Keeler	Margaret Seddon

Jonathan Swift, stern Cape Cod business man, has high ambitions for his two children. To prevent a match between his son Noah and Becky, daughter of Captain Keeler, Jonathan sends him aboard ship. Becky, fearing approaching motherhood, runs away on Captain Cradlebow's vessel. Cradlebow is an unsuccessful suitor for Emily Swift's hand. The fishing fleet returns to port in a terrible storm, guided by the beacon light of Captain Keeler's blazing home which he has set on fire. Noah weds Becky and Emily becomes Cradlebow's wife.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

T HIS picture carries an universal appeal and can be listed as a likely box office asset for all classes of theatres. It possesses a double lure in its scenic and story values. Director Reginald Barker had mighty good subject matter to exercise his ability upon and made the most of the opportunity.

In point of straight sympathetic interest "Women Who Give" scores heavily, they are intensely human folk, these inhabitants of the little Cape Cod village whose menfolks earn a perilous livelihood by daring storm and wave; as depicted on the silver sheet they win at once one's admiration and respect, in fact the film's most striking quality is its natural charm, without the slightest artificiality.

Here we have two separate romances in which four young persons are concerned, molded into a single narrative with such skill that the continuity never wavers, nor does the eye weary in following the course of their varying fortunes. As events progress, the emotional tide increases in strength and volume, a sense of bitter tragedy impends as poor Becky Keeler faces the consequences of her sweetheart's enforced desertion and old Jonathan Swift, the man who holds the destinies of his unhappy boy and girl in a relentless grip, weaves the skein of circumstances in which the lovers are entangled.

Strikingly picturesque and natural are the episodes showing the fisherman at their daily labors, the struggles with the nets, the capture of huge finny monsters of the deep, the threatening fog, the boats close-hauled to the wind or tacking in the endeavor to make port, rising and falling on the foaming crests.

Great as the feature is, however, when considered as a spectacle of nautical grandeur, its chief merits lie in the story's simple pathos, relieved here and there by a touch of homely comedy, and the effective character sketching. Frank Keenan plays Jonathan Swift as none save a genuine artist could do, a selfish, practical man of affairs, willing to sacrifice every tender feeling to his ambition, but yielding in the end to the power of kindly sentiment.

You can play this up as a picture rarely equaled in scenic beauty, with a plot which fairly palpitates with spectacular thrills, and offers a double love romance of unusual power and appeal and cast of undeniable talent.

Dwell on the big marine scenes, especially the lifeboat rescue, and mention the names of Frank Keenan, Joseph Dowling, Renee Adoree, Robert Frazier, Barbara Bedford, Margaret Seddon, Joan Standing and Victor Potel, all of which are well known to the screen public and have a strong following.

Song Novelty Pictures Proving Popular With Patrons

That Educational's "Sing Them Again" series of song novelty pictures are proving popular with theatre patrons is evidenced by the letters that are being voluntarily sent to theatre managers throughout the country commenting on the real pleasure enjoyed through the opportunity of singing again the old favorite songs.

Somewhat out of the ordinary run of letters of this nature is the communication received by Mr. F. S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, O., written by Mrs. S. Thirise, a weekly patron at the theatre. Mrs. Thirise, after describing her modern home, relates the pleasure enjoyed while hearing the audiences sing these songs, as they carry her back to her younger days, when she and her husband started house-keeping in more humble surroundings.

Will Rogers 2 reels

Will Rogers undertakes to mimic Rudolph Valentino in "Blood and Sand." He does the bull fight scene with great gusto. His next is an imitation of Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood." His third is a take off on Ford Sterling and the famous Keystone Cops. Rogers is funny in his imitations and he gets laughs in his "big scenes." His imitation of Fairbanks in a scene from "Robin Hood" is especially funny.

'The Dirty Little Halfbreed'—Pathe

Indian Frontier Series 1 reel

A story of life in the West during the frontier days. A half-breed befriended by a woman finally gives up his life avenging a wrong done her by a white man. The story is told by an old Indian woman. The story moves swiftly and makes a very interesting picture. It gives a vivid portrayal of life on the frontier before law and order were established and should prove of interest to everyone.

'Family Life'—Educational

Slapstick 2 reel

This new Jack White comedy has to do with a family first living in a California duplex bungalow and after wrecking that completely turning to Mother Nature for shelter. The cast includes Mark Jones, Ruth Hiatt, Otto Fries, Tommy Hicks, and Sunshine Hart—and the trained Ford should be mentioned. It does everything but talk.

Pathe Review No. 12

Pathe Review No. 12 includes the following subjects: "Out Where the West Begins," showing some things Easterners never see; "The Friction Fighters," a pictorial study of ball-bearings—what they are and how they are made; "Meet Mr. Pelican," and views filmed on the cliffs of California.

Vaudevillian, Gene Laymon, Star of New Comedies

George E. Kann, former head of the foreign department of Goldwyn Pictures, and now president of the corporation that bears his name contracted with Verity Films for twelve two reel comedies to be made and released during the coming year. Incidentally, Mr. Kann considers that the short subject field has been neglected in this country.

These comedies, are being made at the Plympton Studio in Yonkers. Gene Laymon, long well known in vaudeville, stars.

Intrepid Airman Grinds Camera Inside Crater

For the first time in history an airplane has actually descended into the crater of a great volcano and actually flown about inside!

This remarkable feat has been accomplished by Umberto Romagnoli, daring motion picture cameraman, at the risk of his life. And to make the feat even more thrilling, Romagnoli used a seaplane. The pictures he took are now part of the International News Reel No. 22 and will enable the public to see, for the first time, just what the crater of Vesuvius looks like—inside!

'Barnum Junior'—Educational

Good juvenile 2 reels

Johnnie Fox, Jr., is the ring leader of the boy scout clan in his town. It is at his house the gang meet, despite father's objections and when they decide to give a circus for a milk fund Johnnie is right on the job. He puts half a dozen dogs through their paces, making them play dead, jump through hoops and whatnot. Some of the captions are very funny, the action is fast and the comedy as a whole should appeal to the kids tremendously.

Kettler Opens New Theatre

Carl Kettler's magnificent new Kettler theatre, West Palm Beach, Florida, was formally opened last week. Hundreds of theatre and exchange men from the South-eastern territory attended or sent good wishes and floral offerings. It is one of the most magnificent and imposing theatrical edifices in the South, rivalling in beauty and splendor many of the more costly theatres in the larger cities. While the cost of building and equipping was around half a million dollars, many have declared that it has the appearance of costing at least a million. The seating capacity is 1400. The number and size of exits and seating arrangements allow the theatre to be emptied of a capacity crowd within less than one minute.

Super-Ballyhoo

An interesting coincidence occurred at Toronto, Ontario, on March 6 when the Variety Theatre, was visited by a threatening fire during an afternoon performance when the feature attraction was "Hook and Ladder," various posters of which were displayed on the theatre front while the blaze was in progress. There was much comment in the newspapers regarding this fact.

The fire started on an upper floor of the building but the fire-fighting film was not burned. The total damage was $3,000. A fireman and one policeman were hurt. The lessee of the theatre is Stanley Hamer.

SHOWMANSHIP

The Young Manager Grew Older and Learned—

Even as a Showmanship Editor—Successful Theatre Management Embodies the Oldest Principles Applied to the Newest Ideas

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

WHAT extraordinary changes short flights of time do bring. And how extraordinarily old are the principles which guide the newest changes to success.

This preamble is no attempt to spar for an opening into the realm of philosophy, but is rather intended as an approach to a point of time which marked the advent of the Showmanship Editor in the motion picture business.

Thus, going back a stretch of ten years, picture, if you will, a young man, who, at the very threshold of a new career gazes proudly at the completion of his first piece of handiwork in that career—in fact, is so much impressed with the masterfulness of his initial start that he ventures a few self-elected deft parts on the anatomical region near the shoulder blades, and so on and so on, if you know what I mean.

The young man is noting the effects of his first piece of work as house manager of a two hundred and ninety-nine seat picture house, situated on a crosstown street in the upper Bronx, New York. His face registers pleasure of the most superlative sort, as he eyes the neat one sheet interlaced with a hanging pennant at the left side of the entrance to the theatre; a three sheet poster rather smartly arranged on a board frame at the right side of the entrance—and last, but not least a sign, over the center arch of the front of the theatre. Not an ordinary sign, mind you, but a triumphant, eye-pulling sign, done by the young manager's own fair hand and suggesting very plainly that "The Stupendous Three-reeler, 'Bleeding Hearts,'" was ready to entertain that portion of the public fortunate enough to squeeze inside the theatre's doors before the S. R. O. was hung out.

Oh, it was a proud young man, indeed, who gazed at his craftsmanship with frank admiration. One who thrilled to the roots of his dark brown hair at the thought of the manly responsibilities and confidence resposed in him by an employer too busy with other interests to give his time to the two hundred and ninety-nine seat theatre on the crosstown street in the upper Bronx, New York.

AND, oh, how pride did go before the inevitable fall, as, with the passing of the days, the conscientious, hard-working fellow noticed that despite his clever hand-painted signs, despite a smartly arranged lobby dressed up in alluring posters, despite little excursions into exploitation in a day when exploitation as it is known now was as venturesome as a flight to the pole, and despite the good quality of his pictures, the S. R. O. sign never left its little rack under the cashier's drawer. Worse than that it became unmistakably noticeable that other two hundred and ninety-nine seat theatres in the neighborhood were doing business which dwarfed the receipts of this particular house into insignificance.

What was the trouble?

The young house manager learned pretty soon. First, a consistent check-up revealed that his shows were playing to "one time" audiences. That is, folks came to his house just once. They rarely returned to see of a one-dose pill, after the model offered in certain booklets purporting to teach French in ten days, or grow a luxuriant crop of hair over night on a head as unfertile as the Sahara Desert, are doomed to disappointment.

Suffice to say that the lessons the young man learned and which brought him the ability to cope successfully with the problem of an anaemic cash drawer, are similar to those he continued to learn as he went along on the stepping stones of experience from the management of the two hundred and ninety-nine seat house to a bigger job, and later to a still bigger one.

Lobbyology

Successful House Management

What are the ingredients of successful house management?

Theatre management, like administrative work in any other industry, presupposes certain marked characteristics on the part of the man who is essentially adapted for the position. Given these essentials, the potential theatre executive is off to a good start; but one which is entirely neutralized unless he finds a ready solution to problems that conditions, local and general, bring from day to day.

What are these day-to-day problems and how meet them successfully?

That is your cue for starting to read at the beginning of this page and deciding for yourself.

another show. The shows were good, the music as good as that in the other houses. But to little avail. Transients occasionally patronized the house, but the steady patronage went elsewhere.

This happened ten years ago. The denouement of the situation so far described had, despite its gloomy details, a happy ending. Not one that was miraculously achieved over night. But one which came through the conscientious application of a few well-worn principles; principles which were revealed to the house manager, after a comprehensive study of conditions of his house, his employees, of his neighborhood, his patrons, and of human nature in general.

THOSE of my readers who are expecting me to reveal the open sesame to the solution of the problems which beset the young manager ten years ago, in the form

TEN years have passed since the young house manager reached the present Showmanship Editor's desk, from which strategic point he merges his experiences and ideas with those of showmen all over the country. The accumulated experiences of hundreds of theatre managers—failures by which to profit; successes to emulate—are filtered through the faculties which see these things not only from a desk, but visualize them in the experiences which started with the young house manager of the story and continue in the showmanship mill of the Exhibitors Trade Review and are offered in weekly allotments in the pages of the Showmanship Department.

As inferred in the opening paragraph of this article, the chaff which flies from this constant exchange and flux of ideas reveals that the oldest principles are applicable to the newest order of things. On the subject of house management these principles sum up thusly:

The house manager and his workers are judged by the theatre they keep. Where a shoddy theatre and a dust-laden atmosphere exist you'll find a shoddy manager, whose employees reflect the influence of their surroundings and become indifferent, and sometimes, insolent.

The successful manager must be a gentleman. To be recognized as a gentleman he must demand cleanliness and politeness on the part of everyone connected with his theatre. He will tolerate nothing but a scrupulously clean theatre.

The discerning manager will recognize ventilation as a subject of urgent importance and one that will receive his special attention. His auditorium will always be comfortable. Warm when necessary, but never laden with bad air. Cool when necessary, with precaution against draughts. Poor ventilation has been the ruin of high-calibre film entertainment more times than one likes to recall.

The astute manager soon learns that giving orders from a desk will not insure the proper execution of those orders. He

BLACK OXEN WINDOW

Nationally Known Dealers in Metro's Exploitation Campaigns

FOUR more companies, manufacturers and distributors of nationally known products have been enlisted by the Metro exploitation department in the national exploitation campaign on the three latest Metro releases, "The Uninvited Guest," the J. E. Williamson-Ralph Ince production, "Woman Who Gave," Reginald Barker's latest production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces; and Fred Niblo's new picture now at the Lyric in New York, "Thy Name Is Woman," also a Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction.

These companies are: Royal Distributing Company, which handles Royal Baking Powder; the California Packing Company which distributes the famous Del Monte brand of canned fruits; Pond's Extract Company, manufacturers of Pond's Creams and the Western Company, distributors of Gainsborough's Powder Puffs.

Those announced last week include Swift and Company, nationally known packers, National Biscuit Company, Beech-Nut Packing Company, Reid, Murdoch and Company, distributors of the famous Monarch coffee, the Campbell Soup Company of New Jersey, and

ORIGINAL PRESS SHEET

Warner Brothers have gone out their way to make an original sheet for "The Marriage Circle," the Ernst Lubitsch production which is still going strong on its fifth week in Los Angeles.

The press sheet of newspaper size, contains a wealth of publicity and exploitation material. Reproductions are strikingly displayed, and the stories have the news quality that will get them over the city editor's blue pencil. Especially deserving of comment are the posters, distinct departures from the average assortment of lithographs.

The herald is a good piece of work, in its attractive layout and copy display; one of the achievements in herald work, it is bound to go far in arousing interest in the productions, when distributed. The same may be said of the two half-sheets, two points in whose favor are inexpensiveness and the fact that the twin pair come together as a one sheet, so that they can be separated or used together. They make dramatic pieces of lithography.

'LONG LIVE THE KING' GETS SENDOFF

Jackie Coogan Contest Proves Popular With Bangor Youngsters

ONE of the most successful "Jackie Coogan Contests" ever put over was that carried out by Arthur W. Pinkham, manager of the Park Theatre, Bangor, Maine, when he played Metro's "Long Live the King."

Over 500 contestants took part and the winner received a suit of Jackie Coogan clothes with excitement running high and the whole city vastly amused over the contest.

In putting the stunt over Mr. Pinkham held nightly parades of the contestants in make-up, this being an entirely new angle to the "Jackie Coogan Contest" idea, and a plan that gained a vast amount of extra publicity for the theatre and picture, the results being perfectly apparent at the box office.

Other stunts that Mr. Pinkham put over in connection with "Long Live the King" were window displays in the most prominent clothing concerns of Bangor and a street ballyhoo consisting of a pony cart with three sheet cut-outs which was driven about town during the run.

In addition, and as part of the contest, two dozen pails of Jackie Coogan Peanuts were given out as prizes to those who were not quite entitled to the first prize but presented remarkable likenesses of the well known Jackie.

STEERS SPELL WORDS IN 'BLACK OXEN' EXPLOITATION

When George Schade of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, O., came to play First National's "Black Oxen" he had a great idea. He would get ten steers or oxen and parade them in single file down the main streets. Each one would have one of the letters of the title painted on his sides. There were only nine letters but an extra steer would be necessary for the spacing between the two words.

The slip in the stunt was the fact that ten steers were not obtainable.

Schade finally managed, to get two steers from a neighboring packing house. They were appropriately bannered and had a boy announcer with them. With his public trained to expect something new from the enterprising manager of the Schade Theatre, it was a simple matter to connect the phenomenal street sight with a coming picture.

'BEAU BRUMMEL' CONTEST FOR SAN FRANCISCO

Warner Brothers Plan Unique Stunt For New Production

EXPLOITATION embracing all prominent city officials, clubs, business associations and department stores of San Francisco is being carried through in connection with the forthcoming showing of "Beau Brummel," the Warner Brothers' Classic of the Screen, at the Imperial Theatre.

Last week, George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., fired the opening shots of the campaign by showing the picture to the president, general manager, chief publicist and chief window trimmer of the Emporium, City of Paris, the White House, Liebes and Company, Livingston's and O'Conner-Moffatt, who are the biggest and finest stores in San Francisco. The picture is also to be shown to the President of the Chamber of Commerce, the President and Secretary of each of the following clubs: Downtown Association, Retail Men's Association, Lions, Retail Clothing Men's Association, Chief of Police and the Mayor.

The purpose of the above is to institute a voting contest in each one of the clubs so that they may elect one of their members as the Beau Brummel of their club. Then prizes will be given to the champion Beau Brummel of the various clubs. All the big department stores and retail clothiers have agreed to co-operate by window displays and special advertising for the Beau Brummel week.

The mayor is expected to declare a Dress-Up Week or Beau Brummel Week during the opening week of the picture. The Police Department will also hold a contest for the Beau Brummel of the San Francisco Police Department.

Further, arrangements have been entered with one newspaper to carry a series of sketches of several prominent men in San Francisco, showing them as they are today and as they would have looked during the period of George the Third, when the famed Beau Brummel reigned supreme.

Warner Brothers are confident that all exhibitors will find they can duplicate the tie-ups inaugurated in San Francisco, thus insuring certain interest in the production during its showings.

BROOKLYN STRAND GETS GOOD WINDOW DISPLAYS

Downtown, or the business part of, Brooklyn has for the past few weeks been the center of an extensive window tie-up campaign by the Brooklyn Mark Strand, which took in a territory covering all of the shopping district, extending over a radius of five miles. This campaign took in windows of the two leading department stores on Fulton Street (the two chief stores in the city), windows of drug stores, book shops and confectioneries.

The pictures included in the drive were "Under the Red Robe," "The Eternal City," "Painted People" and "The Marriage Circle," with activities under way on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." For these the shops were induced to dress special windows, for which the Brooklyn Mark Strand supplied the art cards. These cards were of course made up to name the picture and the theatre as well as the play date. The two pictures first named were easy tie-ups with the book shops and book departments of the big stores, and the third offered an idea for the cosmetic departments, while "The Marriage Circle" enabled the jewelers to make choice displays of wedding rings.

BUICK TIE-UP

A hitherto unrecorded chapter in the history of Strongheart and his mate, Lady Jule, was put into print recently when the photographs arrived showing the canine star and his leading lady outside the Garde Hotel, New Haven,

Universal's "Hunchback of Notre Dame" was given a drug store window display by using the name of Patsy Ruth Miller in connection with cosmetics comfortably ensconced on the running board of a Buick automobile.

A tie-up was effected with the local agent that furnished additional publicity and advertising space, the agency taking advertising to announce the event. Strongheart and Lady Jule were motored around town to keep their various publicity appointments at no cost at all. It not only furnished good publicity but saved transportation expenses.

The tie-up was worked in connection with the canine star's personal appearance in behalf of First National's "The Love Master," to be shown at Gordon's Olympia Theatre.

CRAYON FOR POSTER WORK BY SWEDISH ARTISTS

Crayon, rather than water colors and oils, as in this country, are used in Sweden for poster work. A batch of posters on Rex Ingram's "Where the Pavement Ends" arrived at the Metro offices last week from Raoul Le Mat, distributor of Metro pictures in Sweden and owner of a big chain of theatres. The posters were of brilliant coloring and the warm effects produced by the crayon arresting.

Mr. Le Mat was in New York several weeks ago visiting Arthur Loew, general sales manager of Metro's foreign department. Differences in Swedish and American methods of exploitation was one of the topics which were discussed and Mr. Le Mat promised to send some of his posters here.

The soft effect procured by crayons does not lose any of its color by the lithographic process.

A clever tie-up was arranged with a San Francisco furniture store to exploit Cosmopolitan's "Under The Red Robe." The store made a display of period furniture of the time the theme of the picture is set

SMALL TOWN MANAGER OFFERS GOOD IDEA

Shows Patrons They Get Same Pictures as City Theatres

HOW a super-picture can be made to draw to capacity in a small town, was demonstrated by Manager F. N. Harris of the Amuse Theatre, Hart, Michigan. Mr. Harris recently presented "Merry Go Round" and "A Lady of Quality," and instead of being handicapped by the fact that both pictures had been shown a few weeks in Detroit, this enterprising showman took advantage of the situation and obtained a banner box-office in consequence.

Simultaneously with the Detroit run on these Universal Jewels, Mr. Harris displayed in his lobby advertisements on the two productions as they appeared in the Detroit dailies. Slides describing the character of the productions and their previous successful runs in other communities were projected three weeks before the pictures came to Hart.

One-sheets, photos, press-matter, window cards and heralds were distributed and posted four days before play date, not only locally, but also in two adjacent towns. Heralds were placed in all parks, automobiles, and distributed among all the Hart business houses.

An advertisement of considerable size was run in the local newspaper a week in advance, and a large banner, painted by Mr. Harris' artist, was displayed two days before the showing. The stunts were effective, according to Mr. Harris, as the people virtually poured in, and were enthusiastic about the quality of the two Universal-Jewels.

"In a small town you have to make your patrons feel they are getting their money's worth," writes Mr. Harris, "which they certainly do in Universal pictures."

CLAUSE IN PENAL CODE LIKELY TO SUPERCEDE CENSORSHIP

Present indication point to the repeal in Albany, of the existing Censorship law before the present Assembly is dismissed for this session.

In place of censorship a clause will be inserted in the Penal Code making it criminal offense to show pictures that are considered immoral and will cause the arrest of any exhibitor who fractures the law.

It is expected the bill will be presented this week and it is not likely any serious difficulty will be experienced in its passage.

GOOD EXPLOITATIONS FOR 'PURITAN PASSIONS'

*Special Musical Program and Street
Ballyhoo Get Results*

EFFECTIVE exploitation in connection with the showing of "Puritan Passions" at the Beacon and Modern Theatres, Boston, Mass., the week of March 2, resulted in unusual publicity for this Hodkinson release and brought crowded houses to these twin downtown theatres.

In co-operation with Manager Lourie, Joseph O'Sullivan the special Hodkinson exploitation man who covered the showing worked out a campaign based on the extraordinary dramatic appeal of the picture and the unusual possibilities for appealing to the lovers of good music afforded by wonderful music score specially composed for "Puritan Passions" by Frederick S. Converse, the famous operatic composer.

In the New England Conservatory of Music cards announcing that the first original photoplay-symphony ever written would be played in conjunction with the showing. These cards were also placed in five music stores handling the music of Oliver Ditson Company, who published excerpts from the score. Announcement cards were placed in the lobby, to the same effect. The result of this play on the unusual musical score played with "Puritan Passions" was the attracting of the music lovers of Boston to the showing.

The day before the opening, Mr. Converse talked over the radio, Station WNAC broadcasting, his subject being "Music and the Photoplay," with special reference to the score for "Puritan Passions."

The ushers at both the Beacon and Modern were costumed in Puritan dress, lending a quaint atmosphere in keeping with the presentation.

During the week of the showing a man and woman, dressed as Puritans, covered the business section of Boston, the man carrying a hand bag on which was lettered: "Puritan Passions' Now Playing at the Beacon and Modern Theatres. See Us There."

On the day following the opening the Hodkinson exploitation representative assembled the ushers and the ballyhoo people in front of the Beacon Theatre and had photographs taken. The stunt attracted a large crowd which became so dense that traffic was stopped for the time being, the crowd being under the impression that some movie scene was being "shot." The result was an immediate rush on the box office, and the second day's receipts exceeded the opening day's, which had done virtually capacity business.

Comments of the audience coming out of the theatres indicated that the picture had made a hit with them, and the word-of-mouth advertising combined with the unusual exploitation was reflected in splendid box office results.

UNIQUE LOBBY DISPLAY PAYS BOX OFFICE DIVIDENDS

During the short intermission between shows, E. D. Turner announced his coming attraction, "Tiger Rose" by mounting a twenty-four sheet cut-out behind a gauze scrim and exhibiting it from the stage illuminated by flashes of lightning.

Turner's big stunt, was his lobby display. Together with his Art Director, Fred Tipton, Turner built a real cataract in the lobby. He used a small tank and pump which required only one filling of water. The sides of the water-fall which was made of canvas were masked off with spruce boughs and leaves. Over the top of the falls a stuffed cougar was perched in a realistic attitude.

The display was balanced by exhibits on the sides of the lobby consisting of three-sheet cut-outs framed in front of foliage and flowers. It was a one hundred per cent display, and while inexpensive it required no little work.

ORAL D. CLOAKEY

Showmanship Record Wins Manager Good Berth

WIDE interest has been aroused in the moving picture business in Canada in the announcement that Universal Pictures Corporation has appointed Oral D. Cloakey, manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, general supervisor of exploitation and theatres, with headquarters at Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Cloakey to assume his new duties at the end of March. In securing Mr. Cloakey, Universal gets the services of an exceptional exploitation expert.

Incidentally, he is one of several prominent men of the Canadian moving picture business who have been acquired by large moving picture enterprises in the United States in recent months. For ten years Mr. Cloakey has demonstrated magnificent effectiveness in the promotion of picture presentations in many cities of Canada, the Ottawa Regent being the thirty-seventh theatre over which he has had charge in that time. He made his start with theatres when he joined the first Allen Theatre at Calgary, Alberta, in 1913, and one of his particular accomplishments was the opening of the big Allen Theatre at Cleveland, Ohio, of which he was the first manager.

First with the Allens and then with Famous Players Canadian Corporation, after the latter had acquired the theatre assets of Allen Theatres, Limited, Mr. Cloakey was given extensive scope as a theatre doctor where special attention was required in order to build up house prestige. In addition to his outstanding ability as an exploitation man, he is also an individual of fine musical attainments, and it was often the case that he made personal appearances as an instrumental soloist in his own theatres, his specialty being the xylophone. He has been a prominent member of the Ottawa Elks and also of the Rotary Club of Ottawa. His standing can be estimated by the fact that he was a member of the local Rotary Club in no less than eight different Canadian cities.

Seven years ago Mr. Cloakey met a young woman who was on tour with the Juvenile Bostonians in Western Canada, and she left the show to become Mrs. Cloakey.

NATIONAL CANDY TIE-UP FOR 'HAPPINESS'

Special Candy Boxes Will Be Used In National Tie-Up

THE Metro exploitation department has just completed another national tie-up—this time with the manufacturers of the famous "Happiness" candy to go with Laurette Taylor's screen version of her great stage play "Happiness," which Metro is releasing currently.

The candy people have had made up special boxes for their candy in honor of Miss Taylor's picture. Each box has a photograph of Miss Taylor on the cover with the name of the picture and her autograph under it. In addition the manufacturers have designed a special window display card which has mounted on it a still from the production and Miss Taylor's autographed endorsement. Room has been left on it for the theatre imprint.

These window cards are being supplied by United who make "Happiness" candy to all its stores throughout the country with instruction for their managers to get in touch with the local exhibitors when "Happiness" is set to play. Where a city does not have a special United candy store, the United Cigar Store in that city will be supplied with a full order of "Happiness" candy and the special window display so that the tie-up may be effective there when "Happiness" plays.

The Metro exploitation department has sent out a special bulletin to all its exchanges and to exhibitors, instructing them to get in touch with the United Stores in their territory.

'THE ETERNAL CITY' HAS GOOD EXPLOITATION ANGLES

H. M. (Tod) Browning scored a bullseye in his handling of First National's "The Eternal City" at the Olympia, New Haven, Conn. He evolved a new angle by taking advantage of the location of the story and picture by appealing to the Italian element in the city. Philip Troup, former postmaster and editor of the New Haven Union, was allowed to sponsor a special showing to the officers and members of the Italian societies of the city.

Pasquale De Cicco, Italian consular agent, headed the foreign delegation which gave the picture considerable word of mouth advertising. The fact that the story has been modernized to bring in the Fascisti crisis made it of timely interest. Browning's audience was divided in its opinions on the political development and argued long and vociferously on the story action as propounded in the picture. It all meant good publicity for "The Eternal City."

SCHOOLS WILL HELP EXPLOIT BURR PRODUCTION

Both in title and theme, C. C. Burr's special "The New School Teacher" offers exceptional opportunities for popular forms of exploitation and tie-ups. Many plans for a campaign are suggested in the press on this Charles "Chic" Sale starring vehicle issued by Burr Pictures, Inc.

The tie-ups with local schools are unlimited. The giving of passes to the teachers is one plan of starting talk. Another, which is sure to get newspaper space is to give a special theatre party to the "New" school teacher in the town, giving the affair in honor of the most recent addition to the teaching staff. Then also the prize essay idea applied to "Our New School Teacher" may be used with success.

The Burr press sheet devotes considerable space to a series of letters which will incite interest in the press and it also develops direct mail suggestions.

YANKEE METHODS INVADE ENGLISH CITIES

Police Take Action Against Displays That Attracts Crowds

AMERICAN publicity methods in the exploiting of feature films are generally being accorded a real welcome in England. Horace Judge, Publicity Director of the Associated First National Pictures, Ltd., has demonstrated that in pushing "Potash and Perlmutter." His experience with this picture is of special interest in that it was distinctly an experiment which worked out successfully.

In the various large cities of Great Britain where the film was released, Mr. Judge tried methods which were decidedly new to the British movie fans. He arranged for the distribution of pamphlets by persons made up to resemble the familiar Abe and Mawruss, he planned and executed window display tie-ups, and directed special features in the theatres where the picture was shown. The effect on the box-office figures has been extremely gratifying.

In several places it was found that the authorities were unwilling to permit stunts that caused big crowds to gather, and in a few cities it was necessary to discontinue such exploitation methods after the first day. In London, for instance, Judge arranged for the use of a department store window, dressed to resemble the office of "Potash and Perlmutter," with a chic stenographer carrying on what was patently a heated argument with her employers. The co-operation of the store was obtained by having them provide different dresses for the girl. So great was the crowd before this window that traffic was obstructed and the police requested the discontinuance of the feature.

Similar settings were arranged in several other cities and in some they were permitted to continue the full week preceding the showing of the picture. In addition several outdoor stunts were arranged. In character, "Abe and Mawruss" drove around the streets in a dilapidated "flivver," dropping from battered suitcases, leaflets regarding the film. In Manchester, arrangement was made for a comic dialogue between the characters representing Abe and Mawruss in the theatres, between performances. This was another scheme that found favor with the British audiences.

There was considerable question regarding the advisability of putting such purely American ideas of publicity into effect in England, owing to the resentment shown in many cases against what is considered an invasion of "Yankee Smartness." In the case of the film in question, however, the results proved that not only has there been no offense to British taste, but that the results were exceptionally gratifying. A testimonial from George Black of Newcastle, who is considered as one of the liveliest and best exhibitors in England, said in part that, "everything possible had been done to put Potash over in his town."

OKLAHOMA CITY STAGES NEVER FAILING ATTRACTION

S. S. Wallace, Jr., manager of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, pulled a good one in his advance exploitation of "The Humming Bird." By arrangement with the Davenport Hosiery Mills, of Chattanooga, manufacturers of Humming Bird Hosiery, he staged a real leg show for a week—and got away with it.

At each performance he announced that a box of Humming Bird hose would be awarded

BALLYHOO OF REALISM

Howard Waugh, of Loew's Palace, showed his penchant for tickling the curiosity of Memphis pedestrians when he installed this very effective ballyhoo of Paramount's "West of the Water Tower."

the girl who, in the opinion of the audience, had the best looking legs. The contesting girls, visible from their knees down, walked behind the drop curtain which was raised at knee height from the stage and the audience by its applause decided the winner. Needless to say, there were capacity crowds at each performance and everybody knew about the coming picture.

Oklahoma City may now expect a challenge any day from the girls of Tulsa.

NEW APPROPRIATE MUSICAL NUMBERS ANNOUNCED

Edward Schuberth and Company of New York City, announce the publication of several musical numbers of particular merit in conjunction with the showing of motion pictures.

Among these are, "Dawn," "Petals," "For You Alone," "Dream Chimes," and "What's the Whole World to Me Without You."

Our exhibitor friends in other "climes" show a keen disposition to follow the domestic urge in dressing up theatre lobbies. This picture represents the Leicester Bioscope Theatre of Johannesburg, South Africa, in which Arrow's "The Little Red Schoolhouse" received the benefits of the lively lobby dress

'THE WOMAN OF PARIS' LEAVES SOUVENIR

Visiting Cards Distributed Before Coming Production

ATLANTA awoke one morning last week and found that "A Woman of Paris" had called during the night and left her visiting card without waiting to ring the doorbell.

Kingsmore had five thousand cards printed with "A Woman of Paris" across the center where the name usually goes, while in the upper corner was the line "Introduced by Charles Chaplin." In the lower corner of the card it read, "Called, Meet me at the Howard."

There must have been some amusing results. We remember the time we used the stunt for a Norma Talmadge picture in Boston and two "sheiks" came running into the theatre demanding to meet Norma personally.

In line with her recent instructions covering the exploitation of this picture, this stunt is good, as it gets over the picture without mentioning the name of anyone in the cast.

CIRCULATING NOVELS PROVE GOOD PUBLICITY STUNT

Manager Berry of the Gem Theatre at Laverne, Okla., used the special photoplay, "The Way of a Man," in a rather novel way for the exploitation of Pathe's new adaptation of Emerson Hough's novel.

Mr. Berry purchased ten copies of the Grosset and Dunlap photoplay edition of "The Way of a Man" and selected ten residents of Laverne to whom he lent the book for three days. After having been read, the books are passed to ten other people for their perusal.

ESSAY WINS RESPONSE

W. H. Golding, manager of the Imperial Theatre, St. John, N. B., recently concluded a meritorious competition among the patrons of this house by presenting appropriate prizes for the best stories which were made out of the names of the featured productions which had been playing and were to play at the Imperial Theatre. Many novel essays were received.

Nerve and a Tractor

It takes more than a tractor to pull the stunt, E. D. Turner got away with it in Asheville.

You have to know the mayor by his first name, and be able to borrow a dress coat from any member of the city council.

Turner hitched a Fordson tractor to a flat truck on which was perched the complete and total wreck of what had once been an automobile. The sign on the flat truck read: "The Driver of this car took a six-cylinder joy ride. He was PLEASURE MAD."

This display was so long, and took so much time to pass a given point, not to mention the fact that the open exhaust of the tractor wasn't at all like a steam calliope, leaves a little room for explanation. How did he do it? Turner frankly admits that it was "pull" which doesn't apply to the tractor, but to his standing with some of the big boys in Asheville.

"Pleasure Mad" did a good three-day turn at the Imperial; they had to find out what the noise was all about.

Knee Pants at Premium

Knee pants were at a premium when First National's PENROD played the Grand Theatre, Paris, Tex. Manager Fred Caddell of the boys' department of the Burton-Peel store persuaded the store to give a free showing and then had the school superintendents both of Paris and Lamar County announce it at all the schools. Boys in knee pants were admitted free as the store's guests and there were 756 who lined up the morning of the showing.

The stunt was another outgrowth of the Penrod Clothes tie-up arranged with Wiener Brothers, the manufacturers by First National's New York office.

In addition to the newspaper and word of mouth advertising that the picture got for the store it also furnished the boys' department with a mailing list of invaluable benefit.

'Dangerous Maid' Warning

They put flames around THE DANGEROUS MAID to warn patrons that she was dangerous at the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark. Arthur Swanke, who directs the destinies of the house states that the First National attraction got good business by playing up the star and emphasizing the fact that the story showed her in a new role—that of an aggressive, dominating he-female.

The lobby panel consisted of a hand painted drawing of Miss Talmadge with two urns on each side, a smaller set of candles being underneath. The "candles" consisted of electric light bulbs wired into the top of the decoration.

Establish Big Brother Week

Claud Saunders says that the most thorough campaign for Paramount's BIG BROTHER that has come to his attention is that of Manager O. D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa.

The backbone of Cloakey's exploitation naturally was the organization of a local Big Brother Week, in which the co-operation of every possible club and lodge was secured. These included the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, Elks, Y. M. C. A. and Boy Scouts. All these, in addition to every Service club in Ottawa, were enlisted in the cause as the result of fifteen addresses which the enterprising showman personally made at regular or special meetings of the respective organizations.

Ten thousand circular letters sent out by the Ottawa Boys' Association, and a special children's showing on the Saturday morning preceding the engagement contributed toward sending the week off to a flying start, and thousands of windshield stickers announcing Big Brother Week kept the show constantly in the public mind. In fact, no stunt, either old or new, was overlooked.

INEXPENSIVE ADVERTISING

One of the most inexpensive forms of advertising is to utilize the automobile. The picture above shows an announcement of Pathe's comedy, "Two Wagons—Both Covered." The old family flivver will do

Zane Grey Week

Zane Grey is a popular author in Birmingham, so T. G. Coleman took advantage of his popularity and made a "Zane Grey Week" during the engagement of Paramount's HERITAGE OF THE DESERT at the Galax, Birmingham.

The biggest department store in town took large space for several days to "plug" the novel, and every ad was headed "Zane Grey Week." The store also devoted a large window to the book in which there were cards and posters from the Galax. In addition to the window the store featured the book with a well arranged table in the book department.

Shoe Store Tie-Up

Walk-Over, one of the biggest stores in Jacksonville, had its window working for Guy Kenimer when he was playing TIGER ROSE at the Arcade.

Warner Brothers have some publicity pictures of Theodore Von Eltz in a pair of "Walk-Overs." Kenimer used this picture on a big sign which read that Von Eltz wore the shoes, and that the picture was playing at the Arcade.

Music for Exploitation

The most extensive advertising yet used by Gordon's News, Bedford, Olympia Theatre, under the management of Earle D. Wilson is being used for Gertrude Atherton's BLACK OXEN, with a lavish use of cut-out heads of black oxen predominating. A wagon with big signs on either side, bearing a piano player and song plugger went through the streets, while a huge banner was hung on each side of the theatre and from the top at intervals a cornetist played.

In the entrance, was a barrel, placed the week before with the admonition "Do Not Look In." While at the bottom was a round sign "All Next Week 'Black Oxen.'" Card-board cut-outs were sprinkled about the entrance and lobby, with orange and black streamers displayed, the colors being those used on the cover of the book. A shadow box, and flashing sign were also in operation the week before.

Choir Aids Picture

Louis R. Brager, special exploitation representative for THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME, put over a real campaign run at the Rialto Theatre in Charlestown, W. Va. Among many patrons pulling stunts the most notable were the securing of the mixed choir of St. Ferdinand's Church for the rendering of the prologue, and the hearty endorsement of the chief executive of West Virginia.

St. Ferdinand's Choir is a group of singers well known throughout the South and their presence proved a strong drawing card. Brager arranged a special showing for Governor McCorkle and his staff. His excellency was so favorably impressed with the production that he wrote an open letter advising the entire community to see it. So too, did Father Ferdinand—and the result of these letters, in conjunction with the other efforts exerted in the picture's behalf, was a record breaking engagement.

'Ponjola' Haircuts Popular

Barber Shops aren't usually good exploitation ground to work on. But G. L. Shields devised a smart little card for PONJOLA, which you can see on the wall of any shearing shop in Augusta, Ga.

"Anna Q. Nilsson got $10,000 for cutting her hair," reads the sign, "but we give you a $10,000 haircut for fifty cents."

Pictures of the star being separated from her goldi-locks illustrated the card, with an additional box of straight billing copy giving the name of the theatre—the Modjeska—and the play dates.

Shields tells us the cards are still up in every barber shop in town.

Peggy Resemblance Contest

Another exhibitor who got results from the BABY PEGGY Resemblance contest was T. G. Coleman of the Galax, Birmingham.

His front page stories for a week before the picture opened made the success of the engagement positive. One of the big department stores voluntarily tied up with the contest and devoted a window for the purpose of offering free passes to the first twenty children in the Children's Department on a certain day.

Paris Gown Attracts

A Paris Gown, Poiret's latest creation, displayed under glass, drew an admiring crowd of women in the lobby of the Rex Theatre, Sumter.

A WOMAN OF PARIS was the occasion. Oscar White borrowed the gown from Sumter's smart shop, Schwartz Brothers. He built around the gown a subordinate display which was very effective at night. It accented the gown, which was the high note in the lobby.

HOW to make tea with a kick was the angle W. T. Murray hit on to put the picture across at the Rialto, Atlanta.

Four thousand envelopes with inserts were distributed. The envelopes bore the line "How to Make Tea With a Kick," but upon opening the envelopes you were referred to a certain telephone number for further particulars. The number happened to be the theatre, although no mention was made of the Rialto.

The biggest kick in the stunt came from the police department, where several of the envelopes had been mailed. The police phoned.

MANAGER Jack Kennedy of the Capitol Theatre, Peterborough, Ont., has found a new way of tying up with a newspaper serialization. The Peterborough Examiner had been running the serialization of First National's "Black Oxen" for several weeks when the Capitol's play day approached.

Through the columns of the Examiner Manager Kennedy offering passes to the first twenty who could calculate the day on which the final installment would appear in the paper. The newspaper in its announcement of the offer, stated that it was a straight mathematical problem and called for experts at figures.

The advertising done by the theatre featured a further tie-up with the emphasized line: "See the story you have been reading in the Examiner."

THE amphibious telephone came into its own again as George Schade advertised First National's "Slippy McGee" at the Sandusky Theatre bearing his name. He did it with a new slant, however.

He called up Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Black and Mrs. Jones without revealing his identity.

"O, Mrs. Brown, we saw a wonderful picture last night. 'Slippy McGee' at the Schade Theatre."

For minutes afterward Mrs. Brown wondered who her friend could have been, what the picture must be like and how the inefficiency of the telephone company could be improved.

For central had "cut off" at this exciting moment.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED letters, which will be good for admission to the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, to see "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," were mailed school teachers of Kansas City, to be distributed among children, by Lee Balsley, manager of the theatre, this week. Also, school children can witness the picture for 25 cents by presenting a coupon which appeared in the Kansas City Star. Thus far the plan is bringing splendid results, according to Mr. Balsley.

ALBERT KAUFMAN who handles Metro exploitation out of Cincinnati, went out to Chillicothe, Ohio, to exploit Fred Niblo's new production "Strangers of the Night," which Metro released earlier in the season with great success. Whatever else Kaufman pulled off in Chillicothe he topped it all by getting the leading Chillicothe paper, The Scioto Gazette, to imprint across the front page of its entire first edition this legend in big red caps from top to bottom:

"Extra, Beware 'Strangers of the Night' Will Arrive Monday, January 14 at Majestic Theatre."

The edition ran into 25,000 copies and Kaufman had the newsboys distribute them all over the city. It was the greatest tie-up Chillicothe ever witnessed and easily ranks among the best executed anywhere. It put "Strangers of the Night" over with a smash.

W. J. MURRAY adopted "It has a Soul" as the slogan keyed through his campaign for "Big Brother" at the Rialto theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

Murray used the slogan inside out. That is he began with a banner in front of the theatre carrying the billing, and featuring his slogan, and then he got out four thousand envelopes with circulars. On the outside of the envelope the line was printed in purple, inside the envelope the circular carried the information that "fifteen thousand men called 'Big Brother' the greatest picture they had ever seen, fifteen thousand women called 'Big Brother' the greatest picture they had ever seen. Why? Because it has what only one picture in a thousand has . . . a soul."

PICTURE postcards with advertising copy printed in the left half and signed by Richard Barthelmess announced the star's coming appearance in First National's "Twenty-One" at the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, Minn. Under the exploitation management of H. W. Laurance, the campaign was inaugurated to reach several thousand homes along the north shore and Woodland sections of the Lake Superior city.

Barthelmess' message got over the predominating thought that his latest picture was a modern story that showed him in modern clothes. Laurance played on the fact that people wanted Dick in this type of story and increased his patronage about 50 percent. by doing it.

GEORGE E. BROWN made the most of the fact that many of the scenes in Paramount's "Pied Piper Malone" were made in Georgetown. Brown manages the Imperial, Charlotte, but Georgetown contributes patronage to the Imperial so Brown went after the business.

The owner of one of the houses which was used in the picture was introduced to the reporters by Brown, and her interview made great material for a couple of stories.

SMALL envelopes advertised to contain the Wonder Cure, described as the Discovery of the Age, were distributed by Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, in conjunction with the showing of First National's "Her Temporary Husband." The cure was guaranteed to prevent Depression, That Tired Feeling, Blues, and Kindred Ills. The directions given consisted of mixing the advice on the slip inside the package with an ounce of consideration.

The inside slip was headed by the line: "Prolong your life." It added that laughter cured all ills and that this medicine could be found during the showing of "Her Temporary Husband" at the State Theatre. The postscript stated that consultations began the following Saturday.

DALLAS papers were quick to make a comment about the music at the Palace Theatre when John J. Friedl put on a group of the latest production hits from the Broadway music shows.

SAID the Gov'nor of South Carolina to the people in Spartanburg, "Better buy yourself a ticket to see Scaramouche" or words to that effect.

OVER one hundred children were entered in the Baby Peggy resemblance contest which I. L. Shields promoted for the engagement of "The Darling of New York" at the Modjeska, Ga.

By tying up with the newspaper, Shields got front page stories ten days in advance of the picture, and additional force was carried in the contest by getting the merchants to come in. Nine of them offered valuable prizes in addition to getting together on a double truck advertisement on the Sunday before opening.

The day that the winners were announced special traffic officers had to be called to manage the crowds in front of the theatre.

1. "ZAZA"

Gloria Swanson's great portrayal of the French comedy-romance.

Consider this Gloria's best effort. Good business. Eight reels.—Geo. P. Weirick, Paramount-Orpheum theatre, Greenwood Springs, Colo.—Small town patronage.

2. "RUGGLES OF RED GAP"

James Cruze at his comedy best, with Ernest Torrence and big cast.

This is a good and refreshing story of combined English-Western life. Ernest Torrence and Eddie Horton are fine. Pleased all.—E. W. Swarthout, Palace theatre, Aurora, Ind.—General patronage.

3. "WOMAN-PROOF"

Thomas Meighan great as usual. By George Ade. Lila Lee too.

A very entertaining and pleasing story with Meighan in one of his typical parts. It got by very nicely for three days.—Ben L. Morris, Temple theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.—General patronage.

4. "THE LIGHT THAT FAILED"

Kipling's immortal love story produced by George Melford.

Will please any intelligent audience. A picture for high class houses. Moral tone best and you bet it is suitable for Sunday. Had big attendance. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 10-17 matinee, 17-28 evening. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

5. "THE SPANISH DANCER"

Pola Negri's best ever, many say. Antonio Moreno, Adolphe Menjou.

A dandy good picture. Would class it with "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Play the "Spanish Dancer." Your patrons will be pleased and you will make more money.—Deitz & Kincaid, Arcade theatre, Hyattsville, Md.—Neighborhood patronage.

6. "HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN"

The sensational novel produced with a marvelous all-star cast.

It's well acted, it's well produced and I can see no reason why this can't be put over in any man's town. Used everything for advertising and had good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

7. "STEPHEN STEPS OUT"

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., with Theodore Roberts.

A nice clean picture and most everyone seemed to enjoy it. Made good money. Stood up well for two nights. Seven reels.—Deitz & Kincaid, Arcade Theatre. Hyattsville, Md.—Suburban patronage.

8. "WILD BILL HICKOK"

Bill Hart back with both guns a-speakin'. Best picture in Hart's career. Had it for two day run. The price was right and we are pleased. Had a big crowd and everyone sure gave Bill the glad hand. Photography excellent. Don't pass it up.—Deitz & Kincaid, Arcade theatre, Hyattsville, Md.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ready-Made Patrons for Tried and Proved Nights

A New Means of Giving Your Audience What It Wants and Making New Friends and More Money for Yourself

EVERY time you show a picture approximately only half of a possible one hundred percent sees it. What of the other fifty percent? Perhaps every one of them wanted to see the film, yet for one reason or another found the time you had chosen not suited to their convenience. They are still lively prospects. Are you going to let them go unsold?

Consider for a moment the logic of the situation.

You have a picture that was well attended, that was thoroughly enjoyed by your audience. They went out pleased with your selection and delighted with their evening's entertainment. They carry the good word wherever they go. They talk of the picture and recommend it to their friends.

Yet by the time these people who have heard from others how good the picture is, get a chance to see it—the film is gone forever. There is fifty percent of the community still to be sold and no one prepared to sell them. Here is an opportunity for an enterprising showman to step in and make real money and permanent patrons.

Here is an audience, a Ready-Made Audience, waiting for an opportunity to see the picture—a Tried and Proved picture—tried by you, proven by the support of your audience. Here is a picture that you know is good, that your patrons know is good. What is the logical conclusion? GIVE THEM THAT PICTURE.

Here is the idea.

You run your theatre on a two a week policy, let us suppose, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, you have one film; Thursday, Friday, Saturday, you have another. If Bill and Mary saw your picture on Sunday, and they want to go to your theatre again on Wednesday, they will see the same picture. What is the result? They either go elsewhere, or they stay at home.

Then why not Wednesday night a special night? Why not Wednesday night for that night on which you will give the other half the chance to see the films they missed.

Make Wednesday night TRIED

AND PROVED NIGHT. Advertise it as such. Make it known to your patrons that on this night they will be enabled to see the picture they had wanted to see and missed—the picture they want to see again.

Let them know that you have selected the film because you felt your patrons wanted it; that out of hundreds of possibilities you have selected this one because you believe it is one of the super-fine productions; it is a picture that you

There are great possibilities in the plan, and it is an unbelievably simple one to put across. You will be surprised at the readiness of your patrons to accept the project. With some well-aimed, carefully considered advertising you can reach everyone you want to approach and you can have them all talking about the theatre. Your house will be identified as the "progressive house"—in time, as the Tried and Proved House. Now comes the consideration of the selection of films.

ON THE THRESHOLD OF TRAGEDY

Tense situations like this are responsible for the sustaining heart interest in Universal's "The Flirt," a Booth Tarkington picture

THIS picture is only one of the hundreds of Tried and Proved Pictures with ready made audiences waiting for it. As one of the most talked of pictures in the industry, it has rolled up a booking record that is astounding yet it has by no means exhausted itself. With the word of mouth advertising this picture has received it could be made a go anywhere.

can vouch for; you have seen it and liked it, your patrons have seen it and liked it; they've told their friends about it; their friends were sorry they missed it. Get the idea?

WHY there's a gold mine in the idea. Here is an opportunity to build up a real policy; a chance to make your theatre a personal center of entertainment; an occasion to make more money for yourself.

And the plan holds good no matter what the booking policy of the theatre. If you run a three-a-week show, Wednesday is still open as TRIED AND PROVED NIGHT for your READY-MADE AUDIENCE. If you change your program daily, there is still the opening for this one special night.

WHEN you want to get straight from the shoulder dope on a new picture, you look to the authorities for advice. The same advice is available to you for Tried and Proved Pictures for Tried and Proved Night. The EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW is the only magazine which devotes itself to a consideration of old pictures. To it falls credit for having initiated the policy of reviving bookings at a great saving to the exhibitor, and as a means to securing permanent audiences. Having planned and worked out the idea diligently and carefully, having devoted much time and energy to research and study of the situation, the editors of the Tried and Proved Pictures department have become authorities on the subject.

It is to this department, then, that the exhibitor may look for advice in booking. And it is here that he will find what he is looking for.

TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES

'OUT OF LUCK' DRAWING GIBSON AUDIENCES*Star Working Up Big Following With Comedy Features*

WITH what might be designated as leaps, Hoot Gibson seems to be rising to the place of a real film favorite. Within the past few months many more audiences have begun to notice and applaud his work and there is starting to be felt a demand for his pictures. And as his popularity increases, the demand is being satisfied, in the first run towns by new pictures and in the smaller towns by Tried and Proved Pictures.

That he has a decided following is evidenced by the report of an exhibitor who was himself not tremendously impressed by "Out of Luck," but who confessed that his audience did enjoy it. He said in part: "I did not think much of this, but it pleased Hoot followers."

Other reports also remark that the audiences like Hoot Gibson and that his films go big with them. There is, for instance, a letter from George Kosatka of the Grove Theatre in Fox River Grove, Ill. He said: "'Out of Luck' is a good clean comedy feature that had everyone laughing. People like Hoot Gibson here, and we did very nice business on this film."

Other exhibitors found that the navy element made the picture enjoyable to them and their patrons and advised that in advertising the picture, the appeal should be made to "ex-gobs." W. T. Biggs of the Unique Theatre, Anita, Iowa, said for instance; "This is not a Western but a good comedy. If you have any ex-gobs invite them to see this show. They will like it. I was a gob myself and the hammock bed seemed natural."

Much the same was the comment of another exhibitor who said both he and his patrons were glad to see this star emerge from Westerns and assume comedy roles such as this one for which he is very obviously well suited.

'Happiness a la Mode'Matrimonial Romance Released by Selznick

BRIEF: A young husband finds he is tiring of his wife and is infatuated with another woman. She consents to give him a divorce and then determines to win him back within the three months which must elapse before procuring the final decree. By some clever ruses she manages to accomplish her purpose and the conclusion of the story finds them happily reunited.

HERE is another film that numbers among the Selznick revivals that have made money for a great number of exhibitors. It is a story which gives Constance Talmadge untold opportunities to be winsome, one of the many things she does to perfection. Her charm has gained many friends for her among the fans, and her name on the billboard is always a drawing card.

That is why it is wise, in exploiting this picture, to give her name as much prominence as possible. Plenty of posters should be used all around the vicinity of the theatre, and the lobby should be attractively decorated, stills of the star being the central motive in the display.

There is surely some drug store or refreshment store in the vicinity of the theatre. Here is a suggestion that should find immediate favor. Get these stores to advertise a fountain special—Happiness a la Mode—for several days before the showing and during the run of the picture. It might be worked in this way: "Something new. Try our 'Happiness a la Mode'—$.20. You'll like it."

The same idea might be used in restaurants. Get them to name a new dessert, "Happiness a la Mode" and feature it as a very special dish. It is by little stunts like this that you will get the title of the picture across to the public, and when you announce your showing, a great deal of comment will arise which will surely react favorably.

The lovely clothes which are worn by the star in this picture, also suggests store tie-ups on women's garments. The window should be made as attractive as possible and supplemented with stills and posters that will add to its attractiveness. There should also be a neatly lettered sign on display reading: "Clothes according to the latest mode, bring 'Happiness a la Mode.' Our clothes will bring happiness to any woman. See how clothes brought happiness to Constance Talmadge at the.....Theatre on (dates)."

If your audience takes well to street ballys you might try this one. Get a pretty girl and see that she is fashionably dressed. Then secure a goodlooking man who looks well in his clothes. Have the two of them go along together, having him follow close behind her pleading with her. She must assume the position of rebuking him. They will very soon attract attention. When a crowd gathers have a few small boys, whom you have hired for the purpose, hand out cards announcing that the finish of the argument may be seen at the Theatre on (dates).

'The Woman With Four Faces'Crook Drama Recased by Paramount

BRIEF: A young woman allied with a gang of crooks is freed by the jury of the larceny charge and determines to aid the district attorney to round up a gang of narcotic traffickers. Disguised as an old woman she secures the privilege of having an old confederate who is serving in solitary confinement, temporarily released to aid in the plan. He turns against her, however, and she is forced to work alone with the district attorney. They succeed in their plan and conclude the story by confessing their love to each other.

BECAUSE there is a live element of romance intermingled with mystery and thrills, this picture has found a very welcome place for itself with average audiences. The story runs on at a rapid pace, and provides plenty of thrills, not the least of which is the escape of a life sentenced prisoner by means of a rope ladder dropped from an airplane.

Richard Dix as the young district attorney is very personable and it is not difficult to understand why he has achieved the popularity that is his. It is wise, therefore, to lay much stress on the two featured players, and display plenty of stills of each, and scenes in which they appear together.

To attract attention to the theatre it would be a good idea to take stills of Miss Compson as she appears in the four different parts, and use them as cutouts. By placing them side by side, a four sided lantern effect can be achieved resembling the Japanese lantern. These should be hung from the top of the lobby to the outside of the entrance, with an electric bulb in each to give a real lantern effect. You will be surprised at the pleasing effect this will create, and the comment these illuminated faces will create.

Another good way to call attention to the title—and that is what you should strive for since it is interest arousing—is to arrange this rather different street bally.

Have a woman wearing a mask parade up and down in front of the theatre. Let her wear a placard reading: "This is one of my four faces. Which one is it? Send the answer to the manager of the — Theatre before next — when 'The Woman With Four Faces' will be shown."

The next she should wear a different mask, the third day another and the fourth day still another. You will soon find that the stunt has attracted considerable attention and that you are getting a great deal of word of mouth publicity and you will find further that it is this publicity which means most.

'Temporary Husband' Enjoyable Farce

Sidney Chaplin's Efforts Are Given Highest Praise

THE only critic who does not enthuse over this First National production is Fend of the Cleveland Plain Dealer. He thinks you might easily mistake the feature for the comedy if you do not get in at the beginning. But most of the other critics are unanimous in their praise of Chaplin's work and the entertaining qualities of the picture as a whole. The New York Times reviewer says:

This week the Strand is a hall of mirth, for Sidney Chaplin's efforts in "Her Temporary Husband" filled the theatre yesterday with gales of laughter and constant chuckles. It is just the feature to see after the New Year. Sidney is a brother of the illustrious Charlie, and in this picture he acts as Sidney and does not strive to emulate his brother.

The Pittsburgh Press terms it "a picture play with a laugh in every foot of film" and further says: "This comedy is something more than a hodge podge of gags. It is a plausible, convincing story, ludicrous in the extreme, yet not overdrawn. . . . The story is interpreted by a brilliant all-star cast including Owen Moore, Sidney Chaplin, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Chuck Reisner, George Cooper and others. . . . a guaranteed sure cure for the blues." The Chicago Post's reviewer gives the story credit for being:

A farce with no intention of being serious at any time. . . . It is the sort of picture which dares you to try to keep your face straight. But between the fun in the picture and the thorough enjoyment of the audience you haven't a chance in the world to do anything but join heartily in the laughter.

He goes on to say: "To Sidney Chaplin as the always-fired-because-he-is-drunk valet, is given the order to make the people laugh and keep laughing—and he does it with zest. The scene where in pantomime he tries to signal his master that there is a crook outside who is after him to kill him, is one of the funniest incidents you have ever seen." Of the others of the cast he says:

Owen Moore as the hero helps along the fun in good shape and Tully Marshall is well cast as the old man whom everyone is helping to die. Sylvia Breamer is called upon to do little but look pretty in this production and she manages this very easily.

Tully Marshall's work is also praised by the New York Times critic who says of it: "As usual he is very competent, and his serious demeanor only makes his antics all the funnier. In praising Sidney Chaplin's efforts, we do not mean that he is in a class with his brother, but we must admit that we have not heard as many laughs in a theatre for a long time."

'Extra Girl' Best Thing Star Has Done

Mabel Normand Makes Audiences Shout With Laughter

AS Mae Tinee on the Chicago Tribune says, "If you ever liked Mabel Normand you'll be strong for 'The Extra Girl.'" It makes her the Keystone comedy Mabel again—funny hats; funny smile; funny walk; old, slapstick comedy stuff in crisis and the Normand come hither eye on the job ALL the time." While the Chicago Post critic reminds his readers that:

Mabel Normand's pictures are few and far between these days, but her audiences never seem to forget her and are there in throngs to greet her again every time she makes her appearance. Mabel is always good for a laugh and a good time—and that is what people like. There are times when she has them shouting with laughter.

In San Francisco the reception accorded her picture was equally as enthusiastic as in Chicago and in the opinion of the San Francisco Journal's critic, no one can equal Miss Normand in that type of comedy that just borders on the slapstick. The critic on the San Francisco Bulletin gives the story credit for being, "A real homespun tale with an intensely human appeal." He goes on to say:

Miss Normand, it is quite apparent, is much in sympathy with the part she portrays, and not a little of the credit for the success of "The Extra Girl" is due director Jones for his splendid handling in an artistic way of the story and the cast. . . . and credit is due Ralph Graves, her leading man, for his splendid work.

"It has some delicious old fashioned comedy moments," says the Indianapolis Times reviewer. According to the New York Times reviewer:

In the beginning one or two scenes are mildly amusing, but for quite a long spell one sits and thinks that Mabel Normand is a little too old to play the part of a screen-struck daughter.

However, he concedes there was plenty to laugh at and points out that a lion that is in the picture is particularly amusing. The reviewer on the Los Angeles Express says Mabel is at her comedic best, with here and there a tear shining in her roguish eyes and the Los Angeles Times critic assures its readers "There are lots of laughs, no end of chuckles and giggles, and a warm handclapping for the principals in 'The Extra Girl.'"

From Pittsburgh, Tom Schraeder wired that the picture was doing an extraordinary business in spite of inclement weather and the Pittsburgh Press reviewer said: "Laughter prevailed at the Olympic Theatre when it made its first local appearance. There isn't the slightest doubt that this clever comedy-drama full of thrills and laughter, is the best thing the popular Mabel Normand has ever appeared in."

THE MODERN THEATRE

THE OPERATOR'S 'TIPS' TO HIS YOUNG ASSISTANT

The consensus of opinion among projectionists, motion picture operators, theatre managers and owners concerning the teaching of operating to a learner involves the following serious considerations.

To allow an assistant to assume control of the machine for no better reasons than that he knows how to thread a film and start the motor is a grave error that is too often committed.

That the student does not receive the right sort of instruction is not always the fault of the operator. For his own sake as well as the learner's he is usually only too anxious to impart all the knowledge necessary before taking any risks. But very often he has to obey instructions from the manager so that jobs outside of the box may be completed.

To compel an operator to leave the booth during a show and to leave a mere learner in charge is obviously pregnant with serious hazards. Before the learner can be left alone with any degree of safety he should know perfectly every part of the machine, and what it is for. He should be cautioned about fire, shown every switch, and told exactly what each one controls. The lighting and adjusting of carbons is also an important matter that is too often treated too lightly.

The student should be introduced to the repair bench very early and have explained to him the value of correct cutting. It should be impressed upon him from the very start the fact that the film he handles has afterwards to be projected by someone else, and be told the trouble occasioned by carelessness in effecting joints.

When the operator is satisfied that the learner has grasped the details, let him stand by while he (the learner) tries his hand for himself.

The learner will naturally be anxious to try his hand at actual projection, but first let him work the controls and carbons until he becomes familiar with them. Then throw the parts out of adjustment and then let him try to effect the corrections.

The operator should have the assistant watch him thread the machine, light and adjust the carbons, and start the machine running. Remembering always that an ounce of practice is worth a ton of theory, let him show rather than tell the beginner.

Powers' Vest Pocket Hints

For the novice and for the old-timer, Power's "Hints to Projectionists" is well worth getting and keeping. It contains a brief article on the principles of optical projection and a table for film and stereopticon projection. Its instructions for the care and adjustment of the Cameragraph mechanism is replete with information that may well serve any projectionist. There is a table of Electrical Units and things to remember. Also an extract from Statute concerning laws governing licenses and regulations for examination and supervision.

Illumination and Screen

The Eastman Kodak Company of Rochester, N. Y., comes to the fore with a booklet on "The Motion Picture Theatre. Its Interior Illumination and the Selection of the Screen" which is as incisive and edifying a document as one could conceive on the subject. The book has been written for Motion Picture Theatre Owners and Managers, and it were a pity for any executive in the trade not to avail himself of the opportunity to obtain this little pamphlet.

Gold Fibre a Work of Art

Mirusa Cine Screen Co., of St. Louis, Mo., make what they call, "The Screen for the Purpose," which is built to specifications, specializing the color and color tones in accord with the internal and operating conditions of the theatre. Their aim is to produce the screen best suited to the individual requirements of every single theatre.

KASSEL STUDIOS ADVOCATE PORTRAITS FOR LOBBY

"Make an art gallery out of your lobby," says Morris Kassel of the Kassel Studios, New York, as he proceeds to state how many exhibitors already have taken advantage of the service his concern renders to clients.

The Kassel Studios specialize in making high grade oil paintings of film stars, and assert that the appearance of any lobby adorned with such paintings is certainly improved and made more inviting to theatre patrons.

IS THEATRE DRESS IMPROVING?

This question suggests itself quite naturally when one notes the richness of the dress and hangings of the boxes at the Pantages Theatre of St. Louis as it appeared in the Fall of 1922.

Coming up from Greenwich Village as a portrait painter several years ago, Mr. Kassel has made an enviable reputation for himself through his artistic achievements in lobby display paintings in all the big special features for Fox, Universal, F. B. O., United Artists and other producers.

Carbon Saver Worth While

There's a device on the market designed to save your carbons, made of a metal that will stand a great amount of heat, will not corrode and sells for a very nominal sum. The Miller adapter holds all sizes of Silver-Tips and Hold-Arcs and is also sold for a nominal sum on a money-back guarantee.

Effective Film Splicer

An inexpensive, but very useful film splicer that has caught the attention of professional and amateur projectionists is that called Model Number 3, handled by the General Machine Company of New York City.

PERTINENT SUGGESTIONS ON BUYING AN ORGAN

In buying a pipe organ, there is one thing to be kept in mind. That is the fact that the purpose of the organ is to produce music. Some buy for bulk, or for show, or for mere noise. Others buy for quantity of pipes, rather than quality of tone.

A forty-foot stretch of dummy pipes is dear to the hearts of many. Back of these highly radiator-bronzed, speechless tubes is a dinky little 7x9 organ, a janitor's room, and storage place for step-ladders, wrecked folding chairs, Christmas-tree fixings and what nots.

In buying an organ, refinement of tone and voicing ought to be the test. There are commercialized fellows who advertise their machine-made, piece-work products in the trade papers. They offer sixteen speaking stops for $6,000, blower, mirror, electric fan, twenty feet of extra tubing, a ladder, a screwdriver, and Judefind's "Twenty Easy Lessons in Pedal Work and Swell Box Pumping" included.

The organ arrives within but three months. The pipe-work is of inferior metal. Each stop has twelve zinc pipes at the C end. The pipes are all cut off at the tuning slot. The voicing is very crude. Stops are rough-tuned, rough-voiced and rough-regulated at the shop, and a scant two days is spent after the organ is in place, in "finishing."

It is unbusinesslike to buy an organ because its builder offers three or four sets of pipes more than his competitor. One might as well judge the literary value of a book by the number of its pages. And dummy display-pipes? We might as well have a private library made up largely of dummy books!

will personally make a continuous circuit of supervision and check up to make certain that he is getting what he asked for. Since incompetence in any department reflects upon the manager, he must stand responsible for everything that happens under the roof of his theatre whether he be on the premises when it happens or not.

The studious manager learns that his house is only as strong as its weakest member. The selection of employees is the most important thing in building up a staff. It is better to leave an important position vacant than to fill it with an applicant who doesn't measure up to a high quality standard in every essential.

Team work is important in the theatre, as it is on the athletic field. Thus, the good manager is a good team coach, and team work will be reflected among his workers only when he gives explicit and detailed instructions to each member of the organization.

Just as with teams on the baseball diamond, every man should be selected because he excels at the position he is originally slated to fill. However, by giving each man ample opportunity to study and become familiar with almost every other job in the house, the management is encouraging each member to become a potential aid in time of emergency, as well as a whole-souled, smooth-working part of a very human institution.

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

CECIL B. DeMILLE

announces that in his latest production released direct to exhibitors April 28, he returns to the type of ultra-modern society love story of which “Manslaughter” and “Male and Female” are such successful examples.

“TRIUMPH”

“Triumph,” which features Leatrice Joy, Rod La Rocque, and an all-star cast, was adapted by Jeanie Macpherson from May Edginton’s Saturday Evening Post serial and novel.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

Announces New Selling Plan Highest Quality Theatre Music

NEW "FEATURE MUSIC" SELLING PLAN! When "the world's largest music house" makes an announcement of this kind, it surely merits your careful investigation. Never before in the history of the Motion Picture Industry has such an offer been made to an exhibitor. Here at last is a real opportunity to secure the best in theatre music without the usual strain on your pocket-book. Ask yourself the following questions—

FIRST—"I buy the best of Pictures for my patrons, why don't they go over on a bigger scale?"

SECOND—"How much am I losing because my music is not right? What is the real value of good music from the box office standpoint?"

THIRD—"How can I improve my music, to put it on the highest plane and increase the patronage of my house, possibly by 100%?"

FOURTH—"Would the house of 'WURLITZER' finance a deal for me so that I can have the Theatre Organ that I need and so make my investment a real asset?"

After asking yourself the above questions, fill in, clip and mail the coupon. The sooner you do, the much sooner will you be reaping the rich rewards of better music after you learn how easy it is to acquire it. There is Wurlitzer Music for every style and size of theatre, and Wurlitzer prices and terms are within the reach of every Exhibitor.

in "THE HILL BILLY"

Suggested by a John Fox Jr. Story ~ ~ Adaptation by Marion Jackson Direction by George Hill

"Very Good Entertainment"

"'The Hill Billy' is very good entertainment and, we might add, better than some of these pictures which are heralded as 'super-extra-specials.' It is about the best thing young Mr. Pickford has done."—N. Y. American.

Trade REVIEW

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Screen and Radio Won't Mix, Declares Small Town Exhibitor

CHARLES F. KEAR, manager of the Minersville Opera House of the town of that name in Pennsylvania, installed a radio set in his amusement house three years ago this present month.

Mr. Kear's experience is that screen and radio mix just about as well as oil and water.

He doesn't employ exactly that expression in the letter he writes to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, because being a Pennsylvanian he knows oil as well as any one else and like every one else avoids what is commonly conceded to be not exactly a pleasant subject.

In fact, Mr. Kear says that up to this time so far as his wide experience has taught him radio is a howling failure from a co-entertainment standpoint.

Stating that he read with considerable interest the comment on radio in this journal in its issue of March 22 the Pennsylvania showman says he is a small-town exhibitor and as such many years ago realized that every effort was needed on his part to draw patrons to the "Operey House," as he styles it.

This was particularly true, he says, if you have church entertainments, and many other counter attractions for which every small town is famous every night in the winter, with block parties, picnics, carnivals, campfires, and family automobile parties in the summer.

It was with the sole object of entertaining his patrons that he installed a radio, the idea being to provide amusement before the show, during the show and at intermission.

THAT the result from his viewpoint was a failure was not due to any slip-up on receiving the regular programs from all the stations.

"If I am receiving an exceptionally fine concert from Boston, Schenectady, Cleveland, Havana, Montreal or any other station," Mr. Kear writes by way of illustrating how his plan has worked out, "Some other radio fan with his set is 'feeling in' for the same concert, with the result that it breaks up my concert to such an extent that I get the ha-ha from some one in the house, who will bawl out 'Take it off,' 'Take it off!'

"In my humble opinion radio at the present time is not stabilized, nor is it of such a certain quality that it can be used as part of your entertainment, and I have had three years' experience in trying it out.

"Business here has taken a drop, but it is not radio that is the cause here. Rather is it the automobile which has been purchased on time by almost every miner in this community.

"As a consequence any spare funds that usually went for pleasure and other amusements now go to the automobile salesman to help pay off the automobile."

Mr. Kear adds a serious word of warning to any who may plan installing a radio outfit as a part of his program:

"You cannot use a radio outfit in the same building where you use a motor to run your electric sign. They won't mix."

THE Pennsylvania exhibitor writes as one who knows his town and its people. His house has been an amusement standby in its community for fifty years and in the possession of the present owner for thirty-three years. And it was owned by his family before it came to him.

Since 1911 it has been showing pictures.

As Mr. Kear is reliably credited with being the first theatre owner to install a radio outfit in his house it may be conceded he knows something of the subject which he discusses.

It will be noted that the Minersville exhibitor does not blame radio for the drop which he has noted in business.

That impression is shared by Colonel H. A. Cole of the Grand Theatre, of Marshall, Texas, president of the Lone Star State's Theatre Owners, now in New York.

Mr. Cole says that while his January business was remarkably good, "crackerjack," as he expresses it, and that in spite of bad weather, the following weeks brought a sharp reversal.

Even the accustomed let-down in the Lenten season failed to account for the sharpness of the slump.

But as to the possibility that the radio may be in any way responsible Mr. Cole has no fear.

"In the old days we feared we would have to compete with the phonograph, but we found out to the contrary," says Mr. Cole.

"I think we will have the same experience with the radio. Human beings want to go where the crowd is. If a night or two a week the family wants to sit around the radio there also will come a feeling on one or two nights each week that there must be a trip down town.

WE may as well set it down there always will be amusements to bring people out of the house. Whether the person bringing out the crowd is us or some one else is up to us.

"So far as the slump in business is concerned I can't place it on anything but the general feeling of uncertainty complicated by the usual letting-up on account of the Lenten season.

"My guess is that what is behind it is the general situation in Washington and also the coming campaign. We try to think we are civilized and stabilized to the point where a presidential election does not bother us, but we probably are wrong. Business men never trust politicians. I am speaking generally, not specifically. We read they sometimes do take a chance.

"I don't find radio interfering to any extent in the picture business. There are, of course, a great many sets, but my observation is to the effect that they are owned by persons who don't go to picture shows much anyway.

"It is a shame, though, as I figure, that pictures play to not over 30 per cent of the people. I am going to institute a campaign in my town, and by spending a few hundred dollars and employing girls to make house to house calls discover why the figure cannot be raised to 50 per cent. in my section."

Selling Seats on Main Street

By CHARLES J. GIEGERICH
With Hodkinson Film Corporation

THE difference between producers, distributors and exhibitors as seen by the exploitation experts in the industry is that the producers and distributors are in the motion picture business while the exhibitors are not.

Exhibitors are in the business of selling seats and the difference between the big theatre men on Main Street and the little fellows in the sticks is that the former has better seats in more elaborate surroundings and gets better prices for them than his small town contemporary. Obviously there is no difference in the entertainment quality of the picture as seen in the different classes of theatres, but because of clever showmanship, which is another name for intensive merchandising, a goodly percentage of the public prefers to buy the higher priced seats sold on Main Street and take its entertainment de luxe.

But seats are seats wherever and at whatever price they are sold and the problem of every exhibitor is to sell all of his seats at all of his shows, and this calls for the employment of merchandising methods similar to those used by department stores but more intensive, more spectacular and more extravagant because the seller of seats is marketing a luxury that may be dispensed with unless the appeal creates an indulgence gratifying impulse.

The public is ever seeking amusement and is ever willing to pay for it and it would seem simple enough to capitalize this desire, but doing capacity business in any theatre depends upon the trick of mass psychology. To sell all of the seats the allurements must be made general in its appeal. The highbrow and the lowbrow and those in between must be attracted by the employment of a happy medium in exploiting the attraction.

For instance if the picture is an adaptation of a famous literary work, the title alone will attract the cultured class and the sale of this percentage of seats can be reasonably depended upon. To sell the rest of the seats the dramatic points of the picture must be advertised to interest those desiring suspense. The thrills will attract the sensation seekers, the romance in the action will appeal to the emotional and the human interest points if exploited will sell seats to the sentimental. The morbidly inclined and the salacious minded may easily be dispensed with because their number is as small as their mentality, and if all the others are brought to the box office there will be no seats left to sell to the undesirables.

There are many clever methods of bringing out the seat selling points enumerated above, and one of these methods is the proper arrangement of the lobby. For instance instead of massing the lobby photos in one frame like an assortment of joblot merchandise that is confusing by its bulk and variety, select one or more stills illustrating the big points of the production and display them in separate frames with forceful headlines and captions.

Each frame should be devoted exclusively to a specific phase of the picture and the headlines and captions should elaborate on that particular point of the production. This is a style of exploitation based upon the tried tactics of the salesman that first finds out what a customers wants and then concentrates his selling argument along that line.

The exhibitor knows the diversified wants of the public and by devising separate selling arguments to appeal to the various demands maximum seat sales can be made.

There is really a great similarity between the department store selling merchandise and the theatre selling seats. The department store has its bargain days while the theatre has a bargain day every day in its reduced matinee prices for the same show that can be seen at night at top prices. The department store has its periodical announcements of new styles and novelties while the theatre has a constant supply of new styles in dramatic entertainment.

THE department stores have their windows and the theatres have their lobbies for displays and as many people pass the one as the other. If the theatre displays its attractions with as much versatility as the merchant shows off his wares, seats can be sold as easily as merchandise.

To sell merchandise the department store employs clerks and to sell seats the exhibitor employs pictures, and like the salary of a clerk the value of a picture is in proportion to its seat-selling qualities. It is with the fullest realization of this fact that the Hodkinson Corporation has set out to distribute nothing but first run attractions which means pictures that have the qualities necessary to sell seats on Main Street at Main Street prices.

And these seat selling qualities will be found in the pulling power of the stars, the directors, the authors, the supporting casts and the quality of the stories especially selected for their wide general appeal.

TWO of the scenes, the lower one of which unmistakably conveys the atmosphere of "Miami," Hodkinson's release; featuring Betty Compson and directed by Alan Crosland. A Tilford Studios Product.

The Showman on Main Street

What Can Be Done to Help the Smaller Exhibitor

By S. EDWIN GRUMAN

Selznick's Assistant Director of Sales and Distribution

MAIN STREET runs from Coast to Coast, and on it are all the motion-picture houses of the country. This statement may be objected to by the statistician, but it is true nevertheless that practically every theatre is located on an artery of traffic, whether it is Broadway or another "main stem," or a smaller but just as vital neighborhood thoroughfare.

It is an obvious fact that the smaller exhibitor is in the vast majority on this avenue of amusement. He may be overshadowed by the more brilliant lights and the more sumptuous fronts and greater size of his big brothers, but when it comes to numbers, and the aggregate number of people to whom he furnishes entertainment, his real importance may be realized.

No picture may be said to be a real success unless it strikes a pretty uniform average of success up and down Main Street. A production may "go" in the larger centers of population, and may be a "flop" when it gets out over the country. While the success of a feature depends on the way it goes over at the big first-runs throughout the country, it is the smaller theatre that rolls up the gross.

And that is why every large distributing company gives the most careful consideration to the needs of the smaller exhibitor. That is why the service it offers—through its sales, distributing, exploitation, publicity and advertising departments—is so largely planned from the angle of the average showman, with his necessarily limited resources and special problems.

Salesmen furnish the closest points of contact a large organization can have with the showman, and the advice and help of a real salesman serves both to let the company know what the exhibitor will use, and to aid the exhibitor in displaying his wares to the best advantage.

Smaller theatres cannot afford the service of special exploitation men, and the salesmen, while not taking his place in any way, insists on the greatest and the most efficient advertising, if only for the selfish reason that the picture he is selling will do better business and hold a satisfied customer. The salesman gets around to many theatres, he talks with numerous showmen, large and small, he learns of the exploitation which has worked successfully and he passes it on to the next fellow.

Back of the salesman is a whole battery of ammunition which he brings to bear on the showman, and, through him, on the public which reads as it runs.

THE biggest ammunition in my opinion, for the use of the average theatreman, is the list of stock accessories. It attracts attention, it reaches everyone through the eyes, the easiest and most effective appeal, and it is inexpensive. When an average showman takes full advantage of a display of ones, threes and six-sheets, he is, I believe, getting the maximum patron-result for a minimum of expenditure. He may not be getting a very general circulation for his posters, but he is doing something more important, he is reaching the people in the neighborhood of the theatre from whom he draws the hundreds of men, women and children who come to his show week after week.

The salesman impresses on the showman that accessories are of prime importance. This showman angle has been used as the basis for building up the accessory department of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, so that it is not a side-line, as in some organizations, but a vital part of marketing a production, second to none. As a result, the use of accessories has increased considerably, and with entirely satisfying results to the exhibitor.

The advertising aids and exploitation contained in the press book is aimed ninety percent at the smaller theatre. Elaborate prologues, long advance campaigns, and similar plans are not for him, while for the large first-run theatre, the director of exploitation usually follows his individual bent.

Expense must be considered first. For a short run, at low admissions, it does not pay the showman to "splurge"

"TWENTY DOLLARS A WEEK" is a product of Distinctive Pictures Corporation and released by Selznick. Featured with Mr. Arliss in this picture are Taylor Holmes and Edith Roberts. Surely, talent enough to tickle the exacting palates of the most hard-boiled audiences.

Old Lady Astor Says

NEIL HAMILTON, the altogether fine and inspiring Nathan Holden of Griffith's "America," is to play the juvenile lead in Famous Players' "The Mountebank," in which Ernest Torrence and Anna Q. Nilsson have the featured roles. We are all set right now to see something out of the usual with Torrence and Hamilton in the same team. Torrence has played in thirteen pictures, and is firmly intrenched as one of the great character screen artists, easily the peer of the best. Young Hamilton "arrived" in smashing fashion in "America," but as yet he is known only to a comparatively small part of the vast picturegoing public.

A GOODLY number of motion picture partisans gathered at the Cameo on the morning of March 19 at the invitation of John Flinn of the Hodkinson company to witness the filming of "What Shall It Be?" The picture is a simple little subject, but there is a powerful appeal packed in its tale of a family of nine. At the head of this brood of seven children is a workaday farmer father and everyday mother. The well-to-do bachelor brother of the former writes that for one of the children given him for adoption he will write a handsome check for the benefit of its parents. The pull comes when the parents struggle for a decision. Renaud Hoffman is the producer, and he shows himself a master of pathos and also incidentally of a happy ending.

RICHARD V. ("Dick") Anderson, sales manager of International News, has been out in the western part of "York state" planning wider distribution on his company's product. He reports that the series of "Safety First" pictures now running and which were made under the auspices of the M. P. T. O. of New York with the co-operation of the New York Police Department, are proving popular.

BEING something of an old woman myself, my heart went out the other day to a young woman in Brooklyn who was hailed on the public highway by a bicycle policeman. To be sure, she was driving an automobile and driving it at high speed. As the policeman pulled in alongside the car he demanded "You can't get away with that stuff—where do you think you are going?" "Oh, please don't stop me," said the young woman with visions of a police court looming large. "I have a date to take five old ladies to see 'Black Oxen' and I am late now." "M-m-m," remarked the policeman. "That's a new one. It sounds good. I'll say you win! On your way!"

FRANK TILLEY in Kine's issue of March 6 inserts a harpoon into that exhibitor in the English provinces who during British Film Week smothered his theatre with Union Jacks and ran "Little Old New York." Without in any way attempting to palliate the particular exhibitor's peccadillo it may be remarked in passing that he put on a production that is very popular in the "States."

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD is authority for the statement that nearly a million dollars a year is being spent on the orchestras of the Rialto, Rivoli, Criterion, where "The Covered Wagon" is playing, and the house where "The Ten Commandments" holds forth. This means almost $20,000 weekly. "The man who composes good music for the motion picture public does more for his art than the one who writes an elaborate symphony," says the doctor in referring to the opportunities of the writer of motion picture scores. "The former reaches the masses, while the other's audience is limited to a small group of the intelligentsia."

THE return of Charles Ray to the fold of Thomas H. Ince will provide exhibitors a live topic of conversation. The event will have real interest for the men who deal in names as other merchants barter in household or other goods. The Ince-Ray combination in other days furnished some corking good pictures. The player has a field distinctly his own. The producer knows that field and how to adapt his player to it, as he has most ably demonstrated on many occasions. The rejoining of hands of these two men means more good pictures, and that is a matter for congratulation all around.

ELEANOR BOARDMAN, who has enrolled in a school of the drama in Los Angeles, has discovered a great difference between crying for the stage and the screen. Crying for the camera is more sincere, is her view of it, declaring it requires real emotion, and that sobbing on the stage is more a matter of technique. Without the remotest reference to Miss Boardman it is our view that if there is one branch of technique that "cries to heaven" for improvement it is that of bawling before the camera. Few there are who seem to be able to cry without destroying any illusion that already may have been established. And as for tears! They have been so overworked that rarely does there seem to be pathos in them. The woman who covers her face to hide her sorrow performs a double service. She conceals her own facial distortion and spares the irritated spectator.

FRED L. PORTER, former secretary of the Christie Film Corporation, has been elected vice president and treasurer of the company. Mr. Porter is one of those who pulled stakes in the east and went west to take the big chance—and won out. He is one of the originals in the present organization, having joined the Christie brothers in 1916. William S. Holman, former auditor of the company, is the new secretary. Mr. Holman also is treasurer of the Christie Realty Corporation.

IN the interests of public safety there should be a change in the policing arrangements of these Broadway premieres, whether they occur on Forty-second street or Forty-fourth street. Of course, it is not every evening that a "Thief of Bagdad" comes to town. The scene in front of the Liberty at 8:15 to 8:30 on the night of March 18 was thoroughly discreditable to the police force of the big town. It must be added, however, that the situation was radically different when the show was over. There were at that time enough bluecoats on hand to take care of a genuine riot. It has come to the usual thing, however, to permit the lobbies of the theatres to be crowded with star-gazing non-ticket holders on the occasions of important premieres, so much so that at times it is necessary almost to fight one's way into the theatre.

GERALD BEAUMONT, whose sports tales have been enjoyed by many thousands, is coming into his own as a maker of stories for the screen. "The Empty Stall" and "The Fiddlin' Doll" have been completed by Universal. The tales are based on the adventures of the Information Kid, a magazine fiction character created and popularized by Beaumont.

COLONEL H. A. COLE of the Grand Theatre of Marshall, Texas, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas, is a visitor in New York for a few weeks. Mr. Cole is very much interested in his new organization, which now has increased to 160 in membership. Nine men on the road are meeting exhibitors and talking membership, and have been very successful. The Lone Star exhibitor president is a good man to meet, and from the conversation we had with him it looks as if he had a husky organization of theatre owners behind him.

Sidney Olcott Honored by Greenroom Club at Midnight Revel

Exhibitor Sees Him as Peer of Greatest Director

SIDNEY OLCOTT was the guest of honor at the March 22 fortnightly midnight supper of the Greenroom Club in its new quarters, 19 West Forty-eighth street. On his entrance he was greeted with the traditional hisses and groans, which were repeated on several occasions during the progress of the rare entertainment which followed the supper.

One of the features of the show was a mock trial of the honor guest, charged with being the worst director in the world. But one witness was summoned against him, Frank Wonderlee, who knew the defendant "when," and whose testimony harked back to the days of 1903 and of primitive picture making.

When S. Jay Kaufman, the most efficient master of ceremonies, called for the verdict, there followed a great and seemingly unanimous shout of "Guilty!"

With the close of the show, however, the "ragging" ceased and Mr. Olcott was told by his fellow-guests and fellow-Greenroomers of the high esteem in which he is held in the amusement world.

The speakers included his fellow-guests, Arthur S. Friend and J. D. Williams, the latter of whom had that day returned from Los Angeles; Robert G. Vignola, long-time associate of the guest of honor; Walter Reed, theatre owner; and Prompter Hal Crane, John Peebles and Mr. Kaufman.

Mr. Olcott's response was largely a message of courage for those whom success had as yet failed to touch and in a measure was an answer to those who had referred to the struggles of the guest of honor due to his refusal to touch a picture which to him appealed as inferior.

Speaking as an exhibitor Mr. Reed predicted that within six months Mr. Olcott would be recognized in the motion picture industry as the peer of its greatest director.

"Mr. Olcott presented to us exhibitors a motion picture, 'The Humming Bird,' which I believe had more commercial value, more heart interest, producing the best box office results, of any picture we have had in the history of the industry," continued Mr. Reed.

"I believe he puts more feeling, more sentiment and more heart interest in his direction of pictures than any other man I know of or that is on the horizon or is in sight." (Applause.)

Importance of Director

Mr. Williams said the first Olcott picture he had exhibited was one of the single reels for the making of which the guest of honor had been declared guilty. He raised a laugh when he expressed the belief that for its rental he had paid a sum greater than the original negative cost.

The speaker expressed the view that the director is never given sufficient credit, that while others may put up the money to make a production it is the director who guides the work and is responsible for a picture's success.

While Mr. Olcott had been one of the earliest directors of motion pictures Mr. Williams called attention to the fact that the producer had been responsible for two of the best ten of 1923, which in itself was the highest tribute to his ability.

Mr. Friend, under whose auspices Mr. Olcott had produced "The Green Goddess," declared that the guest of honor had impressed him not only for his ability as a director but for his possession of rare personal qualities. "Mr. Olcott is worthy of all the tribute you are able to pay to him," he said in closing.

Mr. Vignola said Mr. Olcott had given him his first job in motion picture work and that he was responsible for his taking up directing.

"I never wanted to be a director," said the speaker, "but Sidney was always encouraging me to become a director. He was just the way he was tonight in his speech to you boys, always encouraging. Everybody you meet has a kind word for Sidney Olcott."

"He always knew what he wanted and how to get it. When I wanted something and was in doubt how to get it he would tell me how. If I have been successful the credit really is due Sidney Olcott. It has always seemed to me that the people in the business were blind not to have discovered in him the qualities that we who were associated with him saw so long ago."

Mr. Olcott in opening referred feelingly to the remark of one of the artists, Emil Beaurrieau, a Frenchman, who had been in the country but a couple of years and who had alluded to the United States as the land of opportunity.

The director simply and eloquently told of his arrival in New York, of the horny but ready hands that were extended to him by strangers, of illness and privation and of his determination to stick it out and to win.

"There isn't a man in this room who cannot be successful," said the speaker earnestly, "if he believes in himself. He will bring to himself that which cannot be kept from him, and that is the success which comes to every man according to his merit.

"If you are going to stay down and quit you will never get anywhere." (Applause.)

Mr. Olcott in closing alluded to the many kind things that had been said during the talks. He assured his friends that these utterances had gone not to his head but to his heart. He paid a tribute to the Greenroom Club of other days and of the present.

Among the entertainers were Arnold Daly, Emile Beaurrieau, Louis Wolheim, Frank Wonderlee, Tom Lewis, Stanley H. Forde, Harold Kennedy, Jane Green in songs written by Walter Donaldson, who accompanied her; Robert Redman, and a musical sketch written by Architect Frehauf and put on by the author and three of his fellow-members of the Sheepskin Club of Brooklyn.

The guests of honor April 5 will be Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford.

HARRY RAPF JOINS MAYER ORGANIZATION

Will Produce Series Known as Harry Rapf Productions

AN announcement of unusual importance to the motion picture industry is contained in the statement issued yesterday by Louis B. Mayer revealing the signing of contracts whereby Harry Rapf, noted producer, will join him and Irving G. Thalberg to make a series of pictures to be known as Harry Rapf Productions.

A prominent and stable figure in the film business for years and until recently connected with the Warner Brothers, Mr. Rapf goes to the Mayer Studio with a wealth of practical experience and a reputation as the maker of good pictures that is familiar to every theatre owner and manager in the country.

Following closely the announcement by Mr. Thalberg, vice-president and general manager of the Mayer company, of the acquisition of Hobart Henley to head a production unit, the addition of Harry Rapf now places five important production factors under the Mayer banner. The other three, John M. Stahl, Fred Niblo and Reginald Barker have been operating as individual units for nearly two years.

TOM GERAGHTY ENTERS PRODUCING FIELD

First Picture Featuring Jack Pickford Will Be Started Soon

A NEW producer has entered the motion picture field. Tom J. Geraghty, well known scenarist and film supervisor, will begin production soon at the Pickford-Fairbanks stud'o, while Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are vacationing, and Jack Pickford will be the star of his first feature.

Jack Pickford is now at Hollywood and, according to Geraghty, will don the screen make-up very soon and work will begin. After the first Jack Pickford production is well under way, Geraghty plans to start a new feature, probably with a feminine star.

Geraghty's record as an author and supervisor includes such features as Thomas Meighan's "Back Home and Broke," Wallie Reid's "Always Audacious," "Forever" with Elsie Ferguson and Wallie Reid: "Sentimental Tommy," "In Old Kentucky," with Anita Stewart, "Hollywood," the all-star feature: "Doug'as Fairbanks," "The Mollycoddle" and "When the Clouds Roll By," as well as many others.

Prominent motion picture director and producer who will soon start producing for himself. Jack Pickford will star in the first Geraghty feature

PUBLICITY MEN READY TO REVEAL TRUTH

Naked Truth Bedtime Stories Promise Wonderful Revelations

CHARLES M. SCHWAB, Arthur Brisbane and Rodolph Valentino are the latest additions to the celebrities who will tell five-minute Bedtime Stories in a regular scenario of naked truths about the movies at The Naked Truth dinner, annual gridiron revel and dinner dance of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers to take place at the Hotel Astor next Saturday night, March 29.

The Bedtime Stories, it is further announced by President Victor Shapiro of the A. M. P. A., will be held in true film form, the word-pictures being broadcast to radio fans all over the country via Station WEA. Samuel Rothafel, as master of the waves, will do the introducing in the best approved movie style.

The Naked Truth dinner is going to make entertainment history in the motion picture world, according to A. M. Botsford, chairman of the entertainment committee, who says nothing so elaborate and spectacular has ever been planned in film circles before.

The latest big coup of the entertainment committee is the securing of a notable group of screen stars to interpret the $100 prize-winning sketch which will be one of the features of the evening. The sketch, which is called "Passionate Italians," is an adaptation of "Romeo and Juliet." The artists who have been rehearsing their roles all week are Bebe Daniels, who appears as Juliet, Richard Dix, who will be seen as Romeo, and Ernest Torrence, who has been cast as Friar Laurence. The author, it is declared, will be introduced at the dinner.

The dinner starts at 7 p. m. sharp. It will be followed with the Bedtime Stories. Next in order comes the presentation of the winning sketch, "Passionate Italians," the same to be followed by a specially produced film labeled "Sinsational Sinema Production." After the press agents have checked up on "Our Own Popularity Contest" and "crowned the King and Queen of Filmdumb," the dancing begins and continues till dawn. Two Paul Whiteman jazz bands have been engaged for the evening and Mr. Whiteman will be there in person to lead. There will be continuous music during the dinner and dancing, the orchestras resting only when the other numbers are on.

Tickets at $15 for doubles and $10 for singles are going fast, but a few are still available and may be obtained from S. Charles Einfeld, at First National Pictures, 383 Madison Avenue, New York City.

"Don't miss the big surprise—it'll rock the industry to its depths—here's where we tell the naked truth—spill the beans—everyone who's anyone will be there to witness this gigantic revelation in evening clothes!"

PLANS COMPLETED FOR ANNUAL M. P. T. O. CONVENTION

Present indications point to a record breaking session when the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America meet in Boston in May 27-8-9 in their annual convention. Those in charge of the convention have completed arrangements for transportation and hotel accommodations for the visitors and a fine program has been drawn up.

Much of the time will be spent in hearing reports of the work accomplished during the past year and plans for an aggressive campaign in behalf of theatre owners.

FINAL 'CYTHEREA' SCENES ARE BEING SHOT

Elaborate Sets and Colored Film for Goldwyn Production

SAMUEL GOLDWYN announces that final scenes are now being taken on the Goldwyn-Fitzmaurice production "Cytherea," adapted from the novel by Joseph Hergesheimer, which First National will release in May.

"Cytherea" has been about three months in the making, and when it reaches the public, will bear the combined title of "Cytherea—Goddess of Love."

An especially picked cast comprising Alma Rubens, Lewis Stone, Irene Rich, Norman Kerry, Constance Bennett, and Betty Bouton will interpret the roles.

The story deals with modern high society. A doll, named Cytherea after the Greek Goddess of Love, acts as the disturbing influence in a man's love-life, alienates his affections, and attracts him to a woman who resembles the doll in flesh and blood. Their romance, and its many dramatic reactions sustain a tempo and story with surprising twists.

The settings in "Cytherea" represent the acme of artistry, having been designed by Ben Carré to fit the plot actions rather than having the plot actions fit the sets. Lavishness with a touch of the exotic is the keynote of the interiors.

A novelty innovation will be introduced in "Cytherea" in that three sequences will be done in color, each a distinctive contribution to screen technique.

'HURRICANE HUTCH' IS MAKING NEW THRILL SERIES

William Steiner has announced his fourth producing unit. It will star Charles Hutchison, known as "Hurricane Hutch" and whose dare-devil feats are known around the globe. He is one of the best known thrill creators in the business and can always be depended upon to furnish fast and furious action.

He will make a series of six five-reel sensational feature attractions. "Surging Seas" is almost ready for release and "The Crash" is in production. This will be followed by "Hutch of the U. S. A."

The cast includes Edith Thornton, Earl Metcalf, George Hackathorne, David Torrence and Charles Force.

The pictures are released through the New-Cal-Film Corporation.

UNIVERSAL WANTS DEMPSEY

According to reports, Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion, has received an offer from Universal for a series of pictures in which Dempsey will appear, as star. Jack Kearns has left for the Coast to discuss details and probably will sign for the champion. It is said an offer of $100,000 was made for the pugilist's services.

Distributing Costs Imperil Good Motion Pictures, Says J. D. Williams

RETURNING to New York after an extended trip to the Coast with stops at intermediate points, during which he visited many prominent exhibitors, producers and stars, J. D. Williams, President of Ritz-Carlton Pictures, Inc., is more strongly than ever of the opinion that the greatest impediment to the progress of the motion picture industry is the faulty and cumbersome distribution system.

Declaring that producers are at present making fewer suitable subjects for metropolitan first-run theatres than will be necessary for the coming season, Mr. Williams blames inequitable distribution costs for the shortage of high grade subjects which he believes will make itself felt next October.

"When I predicted a shortage next fall to a prominent star the other day," said J. D., "he replied: 'This shortage will make it much better for my pictures.' This is entirely erroneous in principle, because if the average exhibitor does not get enough worthwhile pictures to assure good average business, he cannot pay for and sustain himself upon the occasional big picture when it does come along. The industry as a whole is so interdependent upon its component parts that to maintain a healthy condition all must function properly.

"Distribution is the greatest problem we have to contend with today," continued Mr. Williams. "Unless the method of selling pictures is improved it will result in more harm than any other single impediment the business has yet had to endure.

"The average distributor will tell you that pictures cost 30 per cent to distribute, yet I know from personal experience that some subjects cost 15 and some 90 per cent between studio and theatre. The gulf between what we know as 'independent' producers and distributors will continue to widen until the distributor can, with fairness, correctly assess the varying cost where it belongs in order that the producer may be charged only with the costs on his own production.

"Distributors today are averse to handling a production which has cost $500,000 if they estimate it will not gross over $700,000. At the same time they welcome negatives costing $150,000 which will gross $300,000. It is my contention that there should be more money in properly made pictures of the first class than the latter, because both will play approximately the same number of theatres, both require the same number of calls by salesmen with consequent equality in selling costs. The physical distribution cost of six to eight reels of film is the same, whether they earn the larger or smaller gross. This comparison applies, of course, to productions which have been made without waste by competent producers.

"To realize that distribution always has been a vexing problem we need only recall the time when all pictures sold for 10 cents a foot. Then a few farsighted men got out of the rut by making big features, which earned large profits, and we moved along until we bogged into the present 30 per cent rut. It is uneconomic that 400 contracts on one picture grossing $300,000 should not entail approximately the same distribution costs as 4,000 contracts on another grossing $600,000. The only difference is the interest on the money involved during the time it is invested. The percentage of selling cost on the $600,000 negative should be less, if there be a difference in rate at all.

"Right now we should be producing more $400,000 or $500,000 pictures, but experienced independent producers are disinclined to do so because of the fear that they will not earn sufficient to cover distribution costs, provided the gross fails to approximate a million. This is where distribution costs affect the exhibitor, because he needs high grade product.

"Until distributors can make money by selling a $400,000 picture for $500,000, we will not get enough big pictures. Prominent stars, well known books and plays lower the distributor's advertising costs, reduce sales resistance, and make money for the exhibitor, but there is no incentive for the independent producer to put them in pictures so long as he has to pay an unfair percentage of the overhead for distribution as does the cheaper negative with none of these expensive elements."

PRODUCERS DISTRIBUTING GUILD ORGANIZED

Arthur Smallwood Heads New Company for Independent Distribution

ANOTHER new distributing company has entered the field. The Producers Distributing Guild, Inc., is the new organization, with Arthur N. Smallwood at the head. According to an open letter issued by the company the new organization will distribute a limited number of first-class productions each year and will exploit and give other aid to the exhibitor and plans close co-operation between distributor and exhibitor in all parts of the country.

Some time ago Mr. Smallwood sent out a series of open letters setting forth the faults as he sees them, of the present distributing system and offering ideas for relief. The letter met with such response he decided to put his ideas into practice with the result that a new organization was formed, and although some of the ideas are somewhat revolutionary they will be given full opportunity to overcome what are believed to be shortcomings in film distribution.

Each picture for distribution will be given individual attention as to the manner of exploitation and advertising values. Special attention will be paid to preparing campaigns and advertising tie-ups that will be of benefit to exhibitors. Every detail of the picture that lends itself to box office attraction will be utilized to attract patrons.

This exploitation service will be handled for the producer at net cost to the Producers Distributing Guild plus a service charge of 15 per cent, providing that the service charge totals not less than $5,000 on the entire campaign for the individual production.

According to the letter, the new company will function as a merchandising agency handling sales and exploitation of independent motion picture producers, but pledge independent producers the service of a nationwide corporation of unquestioned integrity for the handling of the physical distribution of motion picture prints on a flat service charge basis for inspection and shipping of prints and paper, collection of rentals and remittance direct to the producer of his share of the rentals.

The Charm and Beauty of 'Our Mary' as Dorothy Vernon

United Artists' 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall' Is Much the Richer for the Personality That Mary Pickford Lends to the Title Role

New Producing Company Is Organized with Elmer Harris at Helm

ELMER HARRIS who in association with Frank Woods has been releasing productions through the Allied Artists is now continuing his association with Mr. Woods in a new producing company backed by a group of well known western capitalists and contracts have already been signed for ten big features, five from Mr. Harris and five from Mr. Woods that will be released through the Hodkinson Corporation.

This important announcement was made public at a luncheon tendered to Mr. Harris and representatives of the trade press in the Knickerbocker Grill, New York, at which Mr. Harris outlined his production plans and discussed the first subject to be produced.

Associated with Mr. Harris and Mr. Woods in the new producing Company are A. B. C. Dohrman of San Francisco and W. J. Connery of Los Angeles both of whom are prominent in the financial and civic activities of California.

Present plans call for the pictures to be made in San Francisco and according to Mr. Harris this does not mean that the Golden Gate is making an effort to steal the motion picture industry from Los Angeles, but the officials of the new company believe that there is no reason why upper California cannot make just as good pictures as lower California.

Mr. Harris is the author of many celebrated Broadway musical comedies including "So Long Letty" and "Canary Cottage" and his latest creation "The Wise Virgin" will be the first subject to be placed under production. This subject is a light vein comedy drama dealing with modern life in all of its fast moving phases and is typical of the effervescent style of the author.

Contracts have been signed with Patsy Ruth Miller and Matt Moore to be jointly featured in the first production and there is a possibility that Miss Miller will be seen in several of the subsequent subjects, that will be selected by Mr. Harris during his present visit to New York.

The formation of the new producing company and the distributing arrangements are the culmination of conferences held recently in San Francisco and Los Angeles by the Western financier and F. C. Munroe president of the Hodkinson Corporation, and in speaking of these discussions Mr. Munroe said that while his company had set out to distribute about thirty-six pictures during the coming year, the plans had been made elastic enough to take in additional pictures of exceptional quality, and that in the aggregate the Hodkinson Corporation would possibly handle forty or forty-one pictures in the fiscal year.

CENSORSHIP REPEAL HAS VERY GOOD CHANCE TO PASS

Albany, N. Y.—The censorship situation in New York state took a sudden shift for the better March 24, when a Republican member of the Assembly, F. Trubee Davison, introduced a bill calling for the repeal of the present motion pictures censorship law in the Empire State. The introduction of the bill came as a complete surprise to both Republican and Democrats alike, and serves the purpose of placing those working for the repeal in a much more strategic position.

It is now up to the Assembly to either pass the Davison bill, which it can do if it adheres to party lines, or report the Hacken-burg bill out of committee, and allow it to go to a vote, with the chances about even that it may pass.

THEATRE OWNERS DENY GIVING NAMES TO DIRECTORATE

The organization of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation under the laws of New York has brought forth criticism from the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation organized under the laws of Delaware, and the officers of the latter corporation make accusation of attempts, on the part of the officers of the former company to confuse theatre owners.

It is charged that the New York company in an effort to obtain the names of leading theatre owners for the directorate or advisory board led the parties to believe the organization was that of the Delaware charter, and that as soon as the parties were advised as to the status of the new organization they withdrew their names from the board.

ROY PURVIS

General manager of the Sydney branch of Hoyt's De Luxe Theatres, Sydney, Australia, which plays First National productions. He is making a tour of this country to study American theatres

AUSTRALIA IS FERTILE FIELD FOR PICTURES

People Demand Best Pictures and Patronize Good Productions

THE American motion picture public and the Australian picture patrons are sisters under the skin, according to Roy J. Purvis, general manager of Hoyt's De Luxe chain theatres of Sydney, Australia, who is visiting in this country.

Mr. Purvis arrived on the West Coast three weeks ago and made a study of production methods in California. He has been in close touch with methods of advertising and exploitation here and expects to take many novel stunts back with him when he returns to Sydney at the end of April.

He states that society dramas are popular in his country. In these pictures there is usually a display of gowns which attracts the women to the theatres. When a new style hat or gown is shown on the screen, it is safe to bet that a replica will appear on Sydney's boulevards shortly after.

The exhibitors' methods of advertising and exploiting are very similar to that of Americans. They go in for it on a large scale and the pictures are played up strong in newspapers and by the use of ballyhoo and window tie-ups. The newspaper space rates are much lower than in this country and they, therefore, go heavy on printers' ink to acquaint the public with their products.

Mr. Purvis is very optimistic regarding the outlook for pictures in Australia. The people are educated to good pictures and an honest effort is made on the part of the exhibitor to give the best possible. Feature pictures are shown in Australia within two months of their release in this country.

There are several new theatres being constructed in three leading cities of Australia to care for the large number of patrons. The theatres are conducted very much in the same manner as in America.

According to Mr. Purvis, "The Isle of Lost Ships," a First National production, proved to be the most popular picture shown on the island last year.

This is Mr. Purvis' first visit to this country and he is busily engaged in learning all that the American exhibitor can teach him regarding the business, and plans to put all his acquired knowledge to work immediately upon his return home.

He has made many friends on his trip and has learned to like America and American methods. He has nothing but praise for his reception here and will depart with a feeling of friendliness that will be an asset to the picture industry.

SYDNEY COHEN GUEST OF HONOR AT BANQUET

President of M. P. T. O. A. Given Welcome by Connecticut Society

NATIONAL President Sydney S. Cohen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was the guest of honor at the annual meeting and banquet of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, held in the Hotel Taft in New Haven last week.

Mr. Cohen was accompanied by State President R. F. Woodhull of the New Jersey Theatre Owners and M. J. O'Toole, Chairman of the Public Service Department of the national organization.

State President Joseph W. Walsh, of Hartford presided at the meeting, which was one of the best attended and most enthusiastic gatherings of exhibitors in the history of the industry in Connecticut.

Many matters of special importance to the Theatre Owners were considered at the meeting which included processes for handling legislative matters in the state and different cities, as well as contributing in effort and otherwise as much as possible to necessary work of a like character in the Nation. The music tax situation was also discussed and moves made to defend the cases for alleged infringement of the copyright laws brought against certain exhibitors in the state.

These questions brought out many new suggestions of a practical character. In shaping these proposals and hurrying the same to a successful conclusion, President Walsh was ably assisted by General Manager Louis Sagel of the big Poli Theatre Circuit, the largest and most influential in the New England territory.

At the banquet Mr. Woodhull spoke in a pointed way of the need for organization among the exhibitors and illustrated how its effect had been felt in a very favorable way in regulating and improving conditions within the industry.

Mr. Cohen disclosed that at the Boston convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in May, he would retire from the Presidency and expressed the hope that the zeal and fidelity manifested by the Theatre Owners of the country in sustaining the outstanding programs of the National Organization would increase in volume under the administration of his successor to the end that all exhibitor problems would be satisfactorily adjusted.

STRONG CAST FOR HODKINSON'S NEXT PRODUCTION

The casting of "Another Scandal" the Cosmo Hamilton story in which Lois Wilson will be starred under the direction of E. H. Griffith was completed this week with a line-up of artists drawn from the speaking stage and the foreign and American film field.

Holmes Herbert who, has recently been seen in "A Woman's Woman," "Week End Husbands," "The Wild Goose" and "The Enchanted Cottage" has been cast for the leading role opposite Miss Wilson.

Flora Le Bretton the famous English film star who made her debut in American films in J. Stuart Blackton's "The Glorious Adventure" has been placed in the ingenue lead.

Ralph Bunker the well known stage comedian who is scheduled to be starred in Cosmo Hamilton's newest play "Society" and who appeared as leading man for Marguerite Clark in "Scrambled Wives" has been signed for the comedy lead.

The fifth important role in "Another Scandal" is filled by Zeffie Tilbury, well known character woman of the speaking stage and known to film fans through her

ASK STATE TO EQUIP SCHOOLS WITH PICTURE OUTFITS

The inclusion in the courses of study in all high schools and colleges of North Carolina of a regular period for motion pictures is receiving the serious consideration of the state educational leaders. Reverend Arthur Talmadge Abernethy, a leading and influential minister of Asheville, N. C., has recently been to Raleigh seeking the co-operation of state officials in a movement he has undertaken to have such a course installed throughout the state for object lesson teaching.

"I know from direct experience," declares this minister, "that there is not a more direct way of teaching, and the great churches of the country are installing moving picture equipment for Sunday School work, and thus drawing the younger generation into a renewed interest in studies."

Dr. Abernethy would have the State authorities accept the recommendations of Edison, Governor Walker, of Georgia, and other strong supporters of the system, and he hopes the North Carolina authorities will give picture equipment a regular place of study on the programs of the schools and colleges.

NO TAX REDUCTION FOR SOUTH CAROLINA

Assembly Fails to Take Action on High Admission Taxes

MOTION PICTURE and theatre patrons in South Carolina will still be called upon to donate an additional ten per cent tax every time they attend a theatre, a total of twenty per cent on admissions, because in the closing session of the General Assembly nothing was done toward a repeal of the statewide admission tax bill passed a year ago.

Twice during the past year the enforcement of this tax has been abated by the special tax commission, because even they could see the unjust discrimination in the act; but even this moral support in their favor, only a handful of theatre owners of the state could be awakened to the fight, and it was left to too small a number of valiant workers to endeavor to do something to relieve the situation.

The rank and file of exhibitors of the State would not respond, either through financing the fight or by lending their moral and personal support. Max W. Bryant of Rock Hill, Warren Irvin of Columbia, Montgomery Hill, Carolina, supervisor for Southern Enterprises, and a few others, did their utmost even to have a substitute bill passed, taxing the seating capacity instead of admissions, but without support of the masses they could do nothing.

METRO-GOLDWYN COMBINE MAY BECOME A REALITY

According to report from the Metro office, discussions are under way regarding the consolidation of the physical distribution of films of Goldwyn and Metro. The report gained headway some time ago, but no announcement was made to verify it until the Metro statement on March 27.

The Metro announcement makes it plain that, should the deal materialize, only physical distribution would be involved. Production in no way is to be altered, although there may be a concentration on studios, nor is the actual sales handling of the project to be changed in any way. Metro would handle Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases out of Metro exchanges and Goldwyn would discontinue its branches, it was stated. It is possible the arrangement will go into effect April 15.

ERNEST TORRENCE FULFILLS CHERISHED AMBITION

Ernest Torrence just bubbled over with joy during the first day's work on "The Mountebank," which Herbert Brenon is producing at the Paramount Long Island studio. The reason for his exuberance, he explained, was that he was, at last, playing Petit Patou, the clown in William J. Locke's play.

"Long before the book was produced as a play and before the Famous Players bought the picture rights I had cherished an ambition to play the part of Andrew Lackaday, the clown," Torrence said, "and it was with much satisfaction and gratification that I put on my make-up. Can you blame me for being happy? You'd be too, if you had fulfilled such a long-standing ambition."

Greatest Reception of Her Career Claims Sennett Star

MAKING personal appearances in connection with the showing of her latest comedy feature, "The Extra Girl," Mable Normand, the Mack Sennett-Associated Exhibitors star, took Newark by storm. A crowd was massed in front of the railway station when she arrived in the city and another greeted her a few minutes later when she reached the Robert Treat Hotel.

The Branford Theatre, seating 3,500 persons, was packed when Miss Normand made her first stage appearance, and again when she appeared at night. Sunday was a balmy, almost springlike day, just the kind to tempt New Jerseyites to the nearby seashore, but for all that the theatre was filled almost to capacity when Miss Normand made her afternoon address. When she left the theatre the crowd in front was so dense that a special detail of police was required to clear a passage across the sidewalk to her car.

But this was not a marker to what happened Sunday night. The "S. R. O." sign was displayed early, long lines extending far from both the Market and Broad street entrances, and Miss Normand declared the reception was easily the most vociferous and enthusiastic of her career. The same degree of enthusiasm has been maintained during the entire week, the scenes on the opening day proving but the first of a continuous series of triumphs.

Miss Normand was introduced on each occasion by James B. Reilly, one of Associated Exhibitors' special sales representatives, who is accompanying her on her personal appearance tour. While not appearing in character, the star proved the comedienne while speaking from the stage as well as in the film itself, and kept the gatherings in roars of laughter. She described graphically her experience with the lion that plays such a prominent and terrifying a part in "The Extra Girl."

Miss Normand arrived in New York two days before making her first appearance in Newark, and while at Hotel Ambassador was swamped by interviewers, friends in and out of the picture industry and admiring fans. The little star expressed keen appreciation of the warmth of her reception. She exhibited stage fright as the time of her first stage appearance—it was the first she ever made, she said—drew near, but the crowds did not suspect it.

KANSAS CITY CANDIDATES MUST ANSWER QUESTIONS

At a meeting of the Kansas City Division of the M. P. T. O. A. in Kansas City at the organization's headquarters, Eighteenth and Wyandotte streets, it was decided to place a restriction upon the use of political slides in theatres of the association.

Before a candidate for office can enter into contract for the showing of a slide he, or she, first must fill out a questionnaire, to be supplied by the exhibitor and printed by the organization.

"We believe such action is nothing more than fair," A. M. Eisner, president, said. "If a candidate favors legislation which is detrimental to the motion picture industry, or opposes just and fair legislation in behalf of the screen, why should we use our screens in his behalf, even though we do receive remuneration for it? The amount of remuneration received for the running of slides is small in comparison to the damage a prejudiced or unfair office holder can do."

MANY NEW YORK TOWNS ADOPT DAYLIGHT SAVING

Despite opposition offered by motion picture exhibitors who declared that daylight saving is costing them thousands of dollars each year, the clocks will be advanced an hour on April 27 in at least seventeen places in the Albany section of New York State while fourteen others will give consideration to the change during the next few days at meeting of the common councils or governing bodies of the respective places. Daylight saving will prevail this summer in Albany, Troy, Cohoes, Water-vliet, Waterford, Hudson, Saugerties, Amsterdam, Gloversville, Ballston Spa, Saratoga Springs, Glens Falls, Williamstown, North Adams, Pittsfield and Bennington.

Possible adoption of daylight saving will be debated this week in Mechanicville, Lake George, Catskill, Chatham, Fondo and Greenwich. Schenectady will consider it on April 2 while Hudson Falls and Fort Edward will also debate it during the fore part of April.

NEW BURR FEATURE IN FOURTH WEEK OF PRODUCTION

"Lend Me Your Husband," the third in C. Burr's "Big Four" series is now in the fourth week of production at the Burr studios in Glendale, Long Island, under the direction of William Christy Cabanne.

So that full advantage may be taken of the forthcoming warmer weather for the taking of exteriors, the Burr organization is concentrating upon the interiors of this Marguerite Gove story which was written directly for the screen.

It will be some time yet before the interiors are all taken, owing to the fact that but one or two sets can be built at a time because of their size and massiveness. This despite the fact that the studio is three hundred feet long.

Among the players now appearing in the filming of "Lend Me Your Husband" are Doris Kenyon, Violet Mersereau, Dolores Cassinelli, J. Barney Sherry, David Powell, Burr McIntosh and Cornelius Keefe.

EXPLOITATION HALF OF BATTLE, SAYS CAREWE

Director's Talk Heightens Interest at Luncheon of A. M. P. A.

INTEREST at last week's luncheon-meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., was heightened by the presence of Edwin Carewe, just back from Egypt, where he produced "A Son of the Sahara" for First National; Karl Kitchin, of the New York Sunday World, and Montagu Love, who appeared under Mr. Carewe's direction in "A Son of the Sahara."

Mr. Kitchin's talk on some of the unpublished secrets of the Tomb of King Tut-ankamen, which he gathered during his recent tour of Egypt, conveyed some amazing revelations the nature of which proved as entertaining as they were edifying.

Mr. Carewe began his talk with a narration of some of his experiences in directing the camera in the land of the Sphinx. After dwelling on the subject of economy as achieved by producing a picture of the desert in its native environment, the director struck the keynote of his talk by his outspoken conviction on the value of exploitation. Mr. Carewe said, in part:

"After directing motion picture productions for five or six years I am firmly of the belief that exploitation is half the battle, so far as a picture's success with the public is concerned. There's no question but that you've got to go out and tell folks what you've made after you've made it; you've got to tell them how good it is, its particular merits, and why the public is going to like it. From now on, I shall never under-estimate the value of exploitation to a production."

NEW PATHE BRANCH MANAGERS ARE ANNOUNCED

As the result of changes made effective this week in the sales personnel of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., new branch-managers take charge of Pathe's offices in Albany, Minneapolis, and New Orleans.

In line with Pathe's policy of rewarding meritorious service, P. A. Schmuck, who has been acting as salesman in the Philadelphia territory for Pathe, has been promoted to the branch-managership of the Pathe exchange in New Orleans.

H. J. Bayley, who has been in charge of the Pathe office in New Orleans, has been named branch-manager of the Minneapolis exchange. Mr. Bayley was Southern District Manager for Vitagraph from 1917 to 1922, and in September 1923, Mr. Bayley was appointed branch-manager of the Pathe office in New Orleans.

Charles W. Stombaugh has been transferred from the branch-managership of the Pathe exchange in Minneapolis and placed in charge of the Pathe office in Albany, N. Y. Mr. Stombaugh has been associated with Pathe since April of 1918, when he was named branch-manager at Omaha.

Word comes from Universal City that "The Signal Tower," Virginia Valli's next big Universal-Jewel production, is ready to be shipped East for distribution. It will be the second big Jewel starring Miss Valli, and also the second Jewel made by its director, Clarence L. Brown.

Miss Valli's first Jewel starring vehicle was "A Lady of Quality," now enjoying great popularity. Brown's first Jewel was "The Acquittal," acclaimed by some critics as "the perfect picture."

Opposite Virginia Valli is Rockliffe Fallowes in the role of a railroad signal tower operator. Wallace Beery is the "heavy" in the role of an assistant signalman.

Make Your Desk Phone Private as a Booth business men*

HUNDREDS of business men have told us of losses of contracts, customers and even friends that they could trace directly to "leaks" of valuable information through unguarded telephone conversations. Such leaks with their resulting losses are inevitable unless some safeguard is provided that will insure the privacy of telephone conversations.

There are two ways to get telephone privacy when there are persons in the same room or office with you. One is to make an embarrassing apology while you run around looking for an isolated 'phone, or shut yourself in a stuffy booth. The other way is to sit right at your desk and talk in your natural tone of voice into the Hush-A-Phone—a voice silencer that slips on or off your 'phone at will and renders your conversation inaudible to persons only a few feet from you.

THOUSANDS of bankers and prominent business men have adopted the Hush-A-Phone as a protection against "leaks." It assures absolute voice privacy at your own 'phone. It spares you the embarrassment of side stepping important calls when there are visitors at your desk. It insures you against the danger of careless gossip of friends as well as against the intentional eavesdropping of the malicious. At the same time, it makes for a clearer wire by keeping outside noises out of the transmitter and promotes office quiet by making the speaker's voice inaudible to other workers.

In ticket offices, and small theatre offices, where privacy is impossible, the Hush-A-Phone safeguards confidential conversations, and prevents business "leaks."

We invite you to try the Hush-A-Phone—without cost—on your own 'phone. Read our offer.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

We have received so many orders from bankers and business men who are now enthusiastic users and endorsers of the Hush-A-Phone that we are convinced that thousands of others would become "sold" if they had an opportunity to try the Hush-A-Phone out for themselves and see what a real necessity it is in modern business. We will send you the Hush-A-Phone for five days' free trial. At the end of that time you can send us your check or return the instrument to us postpaid. All that you need do now is to fill in the coupon below and mail it to us attached to your letterhead. We will ship you the Hush-A-Phone by return mail.

The Exhibitors' Round Table

Manager Entertains Delegates

The League of Nebraska Municipalities held its annual meeting in Grand Island a few weeks ago and, that the delegates—mayors, aldermen and other city officials, might be assured of a pleasant visit, Manager Vogel of the Majestic Theatre arranged a special screen entertainment for them. The picture feature which he selected was the Associated Exhibitors attraction, Douglas MacLean in "Going Up." After viewing the production and chuckling over it, the city fathers resumed their business session and adopted the following resolution:

"We wish to extend our appreciation and thanks to the management of the Majestic Theatre for the interest taken in the welfare of the delegates to the meeting of the League of Nebraska Municipalities by furnishing exceptional entertainment at that theatre. We certainly enjoyed 'Going Up.'"

Insurance Suit Started

Trial of a suit to collect insurance on damages from an explosion, believed to have been caused by gas, at the Doric theatre, Kansas City, began March 19 in the federal court. The explosion was December 7, 1922, and virtually wrecked the theatre, which did not reopen as a theatre after that.

The suit was instituted by the Overland Amusement Company, which operated the theatre, against the Connecticut Insurance Company of Hartford, and the Union Insurance Society of Canton, China. The amusement company seeks to recover $13,463.65 on three policies. The insurance companies contend they are not liable because the damages were caused by an explosion and not by fire. Maurice Winger represents the amusement company.

If advance indications can be accepted as a barometer, the much anticipated record breaking attendance at the sixth semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. Kansas at Emporia, Kans., April 1 and 2, will be a reality.

Never before has as much enthusiasm been displayed by exhibitors over the state and seldom has as much tireless effort been devoted to the preliminaries of a convention as now is the case.

The M. P. T. O. K. headquarters might probably be compared to a wheat broker's office. Form letters, "dummy" souvenirs programs, special invitations and instructions to exhibitors literally are heaped upon the desk of C. E. Cook, business manager of the organization.

Radio Not for Theatre

FROM Charles F. Kear, manager of the Minersville Opera House, comes definite word that so far as his experience goes the radio is not for the motion picture theatre. The Pennsylvania showman says he has had several years' rehearsal with an installation which cost him $618 and up to the present time it has been "nothing but a howling failure from an entertainment standpoint."

His interesting letter, which is printed on another page, points out some of the distressing interruptions, such as a shout of "Take it off" when some inconsiderate neighbor "feels in," that are likely to be encountered. Mr. Kear says there is a drop in business, but he does not ascribe it to radio.

Talking of Distribution

ONE of the contributions of the week in the way of an analysis of trade problems comes from J. D. Williams, just returned from Los Angeles. Mr. Williams tackles the distribution situation, declaring that the high priced picture should not pay the same handling cost of the production which books for a less total.

The distributor makes an interesting presentation of his case. Briefly, it is that a picture grossing $600,000 should not pay the same percentage for handling that is assessed against one grossing $300,000, it being conceded that each subject plays the same number of theatres.

If it be true that the more expensive picture or the one receiving the larger returns is sold to 50 per cent of the exhibitor buyers over the counter and the lesser production to, say, 25 per cent or under then there would seem to be added justification for the position of Mr. Williams.

It is conceded that the larger the percentage of exhibitors who come to the exchange to buy directly the less the selling cost entailed on the exchange. In other words, where the salesman has to take the road with the accompanying expense the cost of distribution mounts.

There are distributors who claim that it costs as much to sell pictures in towns of less than 5,000 population as is returned in bookings. In some cases, of course, there is a great deal of truth in the statement, but where pictures are sold in multiples the rule will not hold.

But the main point of Mr. Williams' contention is that where an equal number of theatres are sold on two productions, and on one of these the gross bookings reach a sum double that of the other, it is out of reason that the percentage of cost for distribution against each should be the same. In other words, he points out that the cost of the physical handling of the one is identical with that of the other.

The arguments of Mr. Williams will bring a variety of opinions in response. One of the questions the exhibitor naturally will ask will be if the percentage of distribution is reduced on the higher priced subjects will there be a corresponding increase in cost of the lesser?

Authentic Locations

EDWIN CAREWE, just back from the Sahara—and Paris—gave a sprightly and engaging talk to the members of the Associated Motion Pictures Advertisers at their weekly luncheon March 20. Also there was packed away in it some information of vital concern to the trade as a whole.

The producer casually referred to the subject of costumes. To secure in Hollywood the equipment which he deemed necessary would have entailed an expenditure of at least $30,000, he estimated.

In Touggourt, the Algerian desert town in which he made his headquarters, Mr. Carewe secured costumes for his men and women players at a total expense of $3,500. There was no question as to the correctness of the clothing. They were fashioned for native wear. And in the lot were some elaborate and expensive attire for the women.

If a mob scene were required it was merely necessary to name the number, and the "extras" a little later walked into the location garbed to the minute in faultless attire—faultless because it was bound to be absolutely authentic. They wore their own clothes.

Mr. Carewe remarked that in Hollywood it would have been possible to build sets which measurably would have simulated the genuine, but to have obtained the realistic atmosphere as he observed it in Africa would have been practically impossible.

So it will be noted that in the single item of costumes the producer had a saving of $26,500 to set against his expense of time and railroad and steamer fares. What may have been saved in staging there was no attempt to estimate.

Above all this, however, there is the larger factor of authentic locations, the putting on of the picture in the spot indicated by the story being filmed—and which is bound to add mightily to the illusion of the tale when it reaches the screen.

LEADERS ALL

F. C. Munroe, Organizer of Men and Systems

IT is a ripe experience which F. C. Munroe, the new president of the Hodgkinson company, brings to his responsible position. It was an unusual background in organization, in building and operating systems in which men and materials were the chief factors, that he carried with him into the Hodgkinson offices.

But let's start this story at the beginning, which was in a little Massachusetts seaport town, famous wherever seamen foregather—Marblehead. The date was March 14, 1873. Young Munroe went to school in Salem, in the high school of that famous old community preparing for Harvard, which he entered in due course and from which also he was graduated.

MR. MUNROE's first experience in business was with his father manufacturing shoes in New Hampshire. The burden of the active management fell on the recent graduate. Possibly it was this fact that led some of the employees, the lasters, to feel they could put something over on the young man and they walked out on him. The departing men were sanguine they would be sent for in short order and put at work at advanced wages.

To their surprise they encountered a fight, so strenuously conducted that following the filling of their benches they sued for peace. Where possibly they had felt they were dealing with a "kid" their viewpoint was changed.

Following the death of his father, Mr. Munroe disposed of the business in New Hampshire and returned to Salem. He entered the employ of the Western Telephone and Telegraph Company, a holding body for five telephone companies. His initial salary was $15 a week.

After two years with this company the young man went to the New England Telephone Company as auditor of supplies. It was a newly created job, one without precedent in the company, and one that was demanded by the rapid expansion of the telephone business.

Without any knowledge of telephone equipment Mr. Munroe put on overalls and went into the warehouse. For three months he stuck to the work, getting acquainted with the many dif-

LEADERS ALL—F. C. MUNROE

BECAUSE upon his entrance to a business career he devoted a mind already academically trained to the accumulation of knowledge of practical details, particularly along organization lines; because of his steady development with a rapidly expanding business in a field where there were few precedents; and because of the executive ability displayed in the management of great responsibilities in a time of national stress and in the period of readjustment ferent kinds of equipment necessary in the maintenance and physical operation of a telephone company.

To his title of auditor of supplies was added "and freight." After two years with the New England he was made company sales manager, under the title of superintendent of contract department.

THE policy of the company at that time called for an intensive development and selling campaign, involving house to house work on the part of the department. It was the period of the great expansion of the telephone in the home, subscribers being offered three months' service gratis for signing a one year's contract.

In a short time Mr. Munroe's department was extended until 300 salesmen were at work, divided into districts. It was an experience that stood the head of the department in good stead in later years.

All through this period Mr. Munroe made a close study of organization, in the abstract and in the concrete, in railroads, in the army, in government and in industry generally.

When the great change in the plan of telephone organization was determined on Mr. Munroe was ready for it. It involved a specialized form of administration on a functional basis of different units, and had been passed on by some of the ablest men in that line of industry.

Under the new order Mr. Munroe was called upon to fill the created office of commercial engineer. In the carrying out of his duties he was required to do much traveling. He acquired a large acquaintance among the officials of the Bell system and in the course of his work read papers on the multiplying problems.

HE came to be looked upon as an expert on the subject of rates, which as a matter of fact constituted only a part of his duties. While in that particular division there was maintained a large force of employees, he also had supervision over another division engaged in the work of determining scientifically so far as possible the developments and the requirements of future years, in some cases two decades in advance. Mr. Munroe was among the first to enter this interesting and as he found it fascinating field of commercial economics.

When war was declared Mr. Munroe joined the Massachusetts Committee of Public Safety and aided in organizing and operating the Y. M. C. A. campaign.

The severing of sixteen or seventeen years' relation with the telephone work came with suddenness. At a half hours' notice he closed his desk one afternoon and practically never went back.

The Y. M. C. A. campaign had been successfully ended and the call came to Mr. Munroe to take up the organization of the Red Cross membership campaign. It was accepted, and the work was performed.

The commercial engineer was still an officer of the telephone company, and had no idea he was not going to JUDGING by the above picture at the left it doesn't seem as though 'Girl Shy' were particularly fitting as a title for Harold Lloyd's latest picture. But one must make allowance for the time spent before reaching this point.

HAROLD does seem shy enough in the pictures above and at the left, yet who wouldn't change places with the players. But when it really comes to the showing of the film we'd rather be on the audience side of the screen.

Lloyd's Latest Offers Showmen New Targets to Shoot At

Screenings of 'Girl Shy' Bring Enthusiastic Reports From Exhibitors in Various Sections of the Country

IF any picture in this country should hang out a huge pair of spectacles, as a sign, practically every movie patron and the public at large, would draw the conclusion that a Harold Lloyd Picture was in the offing.

The spectacles being the essential motif in Lloyd comedies, one comes naturally to the conclusion that the "cheaters" should play an important role when exploitation takes the stage. Thus, a huge sign in the shape of a pair of spectacle frames, will be a more than likely eye-catcher for as great a distance as the normal eye can see.

The thought of spectacles brings to mind another point of contact, unquestionably appropriate and fertile as a source of interest stimulation. We have in mind the local optician. In this connection the exhibitor has something in the nature of an advance aid which has already laid the groundwork for a tie-up on Lloyd pictures.

Suggestion for Window Display and Ballyhoo

The Optical Products Corporation, of New York, a concern that merchandises on a national scale, issues a window card featuring Harold Lloyd and his famous shell rims, and this card may be found in almost every optician's window in the country. The manner in which the exhibitor can play ball with the optician who already has this card displayed, is too obvious to need further emphasis here.

Pathe issues an advertising aid, also alluring enough in its possibilities as to engage the close attention of the showman playing "Girl Shy." This latest aid is the distribution of cardboard spectacles to youngsters. These are exaggerated in size and carry the Lloyd ad on rims and side-pieces. With a crowd of kiddies wearing spectacles and parading the streets, Mr. Ticket Buyer is not permitted to forget that a Lloyd picture is being offered to the public. And in theatre-going circles that is an event of no mean consideration.

A stunt that is by no means absolutely new, yet one which invariably works out successfully is the character impersonation ballyhoo of Harold Lloyd. A slender young man, a deft touch with cosmetics, and the all-important shell rims, and there you have friend Lloyd, by proxy, as it were, strutting the streets, mimicking the comedian's mannerisms, and unquestionably attracting sufficient attention to make the stunt pay.

The Lloyd impersonator should have a quantity of throw-away tickets on his person, and hand these out to the passerby. These could have the words, "Pleased to meet you. Meet me at the B'ank Theatre tonight. Thank you. Harold Lloyd," printed on them. Interest in this stunt can be heightened by the addition of a girl partner to carry out the suggestion of "Girl Shy." But in any event, don't forget the Lloyd goggles sign in front of the theatre.

'THREE WEEKS' TO PLAY NEW YORK CAPITOL

*Openings in 'Frisco and Washington
Are Highly Successful*

THREE WEEKS, the Goldwyn production of the well-known story by Elinor Glyn, is to have its first New York showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week of March 30. It has already shown at several first run houses in other parts of the country and has been extremely successful.

On March 16 it opened at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C., and its success was so marked by an increased volume of business that it was decided to hold it over a second week.

Its showing at the Strand Theatre in San Francisco proved to be a very lively social function. Mrs. Glyn went up from Los Angeles to be present at the opening and she was met at the station by the Chief of Police of San Francisco, who headed a delegation of distinguished citizens. The audience was composed of prominent people from various circles and was attended by newspaper people as well.

The critics devoted much space to the opening commenting favorably on the picture and predicting great success for it all over the country. The popularity of the book for a great many years is expected to react very favorably on the picture.

The film was directed by Allen Crosland and features Conrad Nagel and Aileen Pringle in the leading roles. Mrs. Glyn, after having seen the production, is said to have expressed herself as being delighted with the way in which Miss Pringle portrays the part of the queen.

SEVERAL CIRCUIT BOOKINGS ON GOLDWYN FEATURES

"Under the Red Robe" and "The Great White Way" have been booked by the West Coast circuit for all its theatres in both Northern and Southern California. The deal was closed by J. R. Grainger, general sales manager for Goldwyn.

This is only one of a series of important bookings on these two big features which have been playing in all the key cities to unusually big business.

Another important deal was closed recently with Nate Robbins who has contracted for all Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases down to the "Rejected Woman" for showing at his theatres in Utica, Syracuse and Watertown, New York.

The Sparks Circuit of Florida has also contracted to book all Goldwyn seventh year releases which, of course, includes "The Great White Way" and "Under the Red Robe."

'WANDERING HUSBANDS' GIVEN CORDIAL RECEPTION

The second of the Lila Lee-James Kirkwood features for distribution by Hodkinson had its first showings at the Granada Theatre in Hollywood and the Paramount Theatre in Santa Monica, very recently. The picture was very well received by the critics and the public of both cities and gives reason to believe that it will be well accepted in the other cities where it is soon to be shown.

"Wandering Husbands" devotes itself to the other side of the question. Many films have been made to exploit the cause of the husband whose wife is flighty and neglectful, and it is now time that the public got a glimpse at what's wrong with the men. Margaret Livingston is the most notable name in a strong supporting cast.

'WOMAN TO WOMAN' TO OPEN AT NEW YORK RIVOLI

A tentative date having been named about two weeks ago, it has now definitely been decided that Selznick's feature "Woman to Woman" starring Betty Compson, will open at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, on March 30. The picture has been shown broadcast in England and throughout the West, but its showing at the Rivoli will mark its Eastern premiere.

The opening is being preceded by a widespread exploitation and advertising campaign that should successfully acquaint almost everyone in the city with the fact that the picture has arrived and is well worth seeing.

'DAWN OF A TOMORROW' WARMLY RECEIVED

Has Opening at Rivoli and Critics Acclaim Its Merits

GEORGE MELFORD'S "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," a Paramount production featuring Jacqueline Logan, David Torrence and Raymond Griffith, opened at the New York Rivoli Theatre on Sunday and was enthusiastically received by the capacity audiences which jam the theatre on Sunday.

But the audience was not alone in its enthusiasm, for the newspaper critics entered into it with them as revealed in their reviews in the next day's papers. One critic even went so far as to say that she believed that the picture was better than the stage version.

The reviewer of the World said: "Frances Hodgson Burnett's book and play, which might so easily have been brought to the screen dripping with sentimental gush, has with rare discretion and infectious acting been made into one of the finest pictures of the year. It ought to be seen by all who think there's not much sense in going to the pictures any more."

The New York Tribune said: "The picture is a delight. We do not hesitate to recommend it to all." The critic of the Post described it as a cool spring, and believed that "its very simplicity and lack of fire-works" would be the thing that would put it across.

'WHEN A MAN'S A MAN' MAKING BOX OFFICE RECORD

Harold Bell Wright's western drama, "When a Man's a Man," is rolling up a long list of broken box office records for itself. The picture was retained at the New York Cameo Theatre for several weeks during which time it played to capacity at practically every performance.

A similar success is said to be accompanying the picture on all its runs throughout the country. First National has received wires and letters of congratulations from exhibitors everywhere telling them of the enthusiasm with which the picture is being accepted and conveying their congratulations on the merit of the picture.

The picture is a screen version of the novel and the popularity of the book is believed to have contributed very materially to the success of the production.

Heartily Praised Up and Down Main Street

Exhibitors Laud Enterprising Activities of C. B. C. Company

By RALPH ROSSITER

THE C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has made it a strict policy to keep in constant touch with "Main Street" realizing the necessity of catering to the needs of the exhibitor and appreciating the inestimable value to be received thereby. Adhering to this policy since the very inception of the organization some years ago, won over the good faith and confidence of some of the most prominent theatre owners throughout the entire United States who have repeatedly voiced their approval of C. B. C.'s activities from time to time.

Notwithstanding the fact that the company's product is sold on the States right basis they constantly endeavor to keep in direct touch with the exhibitor offering all possible aid for exploitation and other services which the theatre man always appreciates. They have developed a habit that was at first considered impractical, that of sending questionnaires to the leading theatres asking advice on scenarios before production was started in order to feel the pulse of the ultimate market. Letter writing and personal contact have been potent factors in establishing relations that are standing C. B. C. in good stead to-day.

Cooperation with "Main Street" has resulted in the showing of their productions in the first run houses of all key cities. This is a splendid record when one considers the many difficulties that confront the independent producer and distributor.

Recently Abe Montague of the Certified Screen Attractions in Boston negotiated a deal with C. B. C. for the handling of "Innocence," a picture starring Anna Q. Nilsson. Because of proper exploitation aid the picture did a record business at Loew's Theatre, and did so well that Mr. Montague was prompted to write to the firm commending them.

The following is a partial list of the first run theatres and circuits that have played the C. B. C. pictures: "Forgive and Forget"—Ritz Theatre, Pittsburgh, Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia.

"The Barefoot Boy"—Palace Theatre, Broadway, N. Y. C.; Rialto, Chicago, Chatteau, Chicago; Palace, South Bend, Ind.; Cosmo, Gary, Ind.

"The Marriage Market"—Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia; State Lake, Chicago; Entire Loew Circuit.

'FIGHTING COWARD' WINS

James Cruze Adds One More to His List of Successes

JAMES CRUZE, in his latest Paramount production, "The Fighting Coward," has added another success to his long list of unfailing box-office hits, judging from the reception the picture was accorded on the occasion of its New York premiere at the Rivoli Theatre. Capacity crowds were the rule at every performance and the picture was given a big boost by all the New York newspaper critics.

Characterizing it as "one of the most delightful and gratifying traversities we have ever seen on the screen," The Tribune said:

"Never has James Cruze done a more delightful bit of directing, and Walter Woods is to be congratulated on his perfect adaptation. Ernest Torrence is an absolute joy. So is Noah Beery. It seems as though everyone in the cast does the best work of his career."

"The Fighting Coward" seemed to me to be awfully funny," said the Daily News, while the Times critic pronounced it "a hilariously funny entertainment." The Herald said: "James Cruze is the possessor of the keenest sense of humor in the cinema directorial field, and he is at his best in 'The Fighting Coward.'"

'LILIES OF THE FIELD' IS AT STRAND TWO WEEKS

"Lilies of the Field," a First National production starring Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle is having its second week at the New York Strand, and continues to pull in splendid business. After its first day in New York it received the unanimous praise of the newspaper critics who paid special tribute to the acting of Miss Griffith.

The picture has had successful openings in over a hundred first run houses throughout the country and in many of them it was rebought for a second week by popular request.

JAMS THEATRE

Police Called Out to Untangle the Crowds at Troy Theatre

TROY, New York, stands ready to attest to the entertainment value of Selznick's "Daughters of the Rich." That is, if attendance records can be used as evidence. It all happened last Sunday at the Troy Theatre.

Despite the fact that the managers are prepared to handle big crowds on Sunday because this is their biggest day, they were unprepared for what happened at the showing of this film. About nine o'clock a crowd of approximately fourteen hundred people started to leave the Troy Theatre but they did not get very far for at the doors they were met by a crowd of equal size, eager to enter. It was a case of the irresistible meeting the immovable and the result was a record-breaking jam.

The police were called out to help straighten out things, and in about ten minutes things started moving. In the meantime, however, not a single ticket was sold at the box office because the jam prevented prospective buyers from getting near the booth. Of course, the publicity resulting from the incident, did much to call attention to the film, and is probably somewhat responsible for the splendid business which resulted during the remainder of the run.

REPORT GREAT SUCCESS ON 'HUNCHBACK'

Continues to Break Records in All Sections of Country

UNIVERSAL'S "Hunchback of Notre Dame" is now being shown in all parts of the country in the smaller as well as the larger houses, and is breaking records for exhibitors everywhere.

The film originally opened at the Astor Theatre in New York where it played for many months. It was one of the biggest Broadway successes of the year and has played at most of the first run houses throughout the country. Yet despite the fact that it is not new it is still provoking a great deal of favorable comment from newspaper critics, is talked of in the editorial columns, alluded to in the schools, and is much discussed as a topic of conversation by the general public.

The bookings on the picture cover every corner of the country, yet despite the bad weather conditions under which it showed. Every report shows broken box office records. And a great many of the houses are playing the film at a top price of two dollars.

For instance, this is the report received from Walter Hays of the Syracuse Strand Theatre. "We have just finished the first week of our engagement of 'The Hunchback.' Although we were handicapped by bad weather conditions, all records for any picture that has ever played Syracuse either at a legitimate theatre at two dollars top, or at a picture theatre, have been broken with 'The Hunchback.' We are holding the picture over next week, a rare occurrence in Syracuse, and expect record breaking business for the balance of the engagement."

This report is typical of the dozens of others that have been received by Universal since the general release of the film following a brilliant Broadway run in New York.

ROAD SHOW PLAN MAKING RAPID PROGRESS

Exchanges Eagerly Endorse Booking Plan for 'Beau Brummel'

RAPID growth marks the campaign for the road showing of Warner Brother's new John Barrymore feature, "Beau Brummel." The picture will have its premiere at the Mark Strand Theatre in New York next week, despite the fact that the producers had thought to run it first at one of the Broadway theatres.

The Forrest Theatre in Philadelphia is soon to run the new film and plans have already been started for an elaborate presentation.

General Sales Manager Morris of the Warner offices, who is now on a transcontinental tour of the exchange centers, reports that the road show plan is being enthusiastically received everywhere and that before Easter the high spots of the entire country will be booked with special presentation of the picture at two dollar prices.

Believing that a picture boasting the triple attractions of a tried story, star and director, could stand regular theatre prices, the management of the Pinehurst, N. C., Carolina Theatre showed "Beau Brummel" last week at prices ranging from a dollar and a half to two and a half. The full attendance which was drawn at every performance proved that he was justified in taking the chance.

Further disclosures reveal the fact that the picture has also been booked by Sol Lesser for his West Coast Circuit of one hundred and twenty-six theatres. Wherever the picture has been shown it has been readily accepted by the public and highly praised by the critics as a comedy of unusual merit.

The film is being retained for a second week at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, because of the demand for it on the part of the public. The critics in this city have commented very enthusiastically on the picture and complimented the judgment of the public.

'HILL BILLY' IS PRAISED BY N. Y. CRITICS

Work of Star and Story Declared Exceptional by Many

JACK PICKFORD'S latest picture, "Hill Billy" produced by himself and distributed by Allied Producers and Distributors, has just closed its premiere week in New York and the wave of favorable criticism which greeted it must be supremely gratifying to the star. The critics seemed fired with enthusiasm for the picture as well as for the star and some even went so far as to characterize the film as one of the best that has been produced in a long time, and the work of Mr. Pickford as the most capable of his experiences.

Quinn Martin of the New York World wrote an unusually enthusiastic review characterizing the production as "the most beautiful production of the times," and Mr. Pickford's work as "so finely timed and wistfully appealing that we have decided there isn't another young man in pictures who has surpassed him this season in emotional pantomime."

Of the picture he said: "It is a picture that holds you and carries you away. This is due largely to expert continuity, and a very fine and genuine piece of acting by the star. It seems rather improbable that a boy whose whole life has been so far removed from clod-hopping, could step into the part of a long-haired mountain hick and act precisely like one."

Louella Parson of the New York American expressed very much the same sentiments noting also that the picture might be said to be "better than some of the pictures which are heralded as 'super-specials.'"

Sir John Carlton lies at death's door. At his bedside sits his wife determined to be at her husband's side to the end, despite the fact that she has been without sleep for several nights. The family physician manages to lead her out of the room, whence in her own private room she jots down in her diary that she prefers not to live should her husband die. At this crisis, when her friends and even her children disappear, she has only her memories to sustain her, memories whose secrets are recorded in the diary in her hands. Lovingly she glances through the pages which record her uphill fight against adversity with her husband through the fifty-five years of their married life, and it is these recurrent memories as she dozes off, which unfold for her the romance of her past life. When she awakes it is to find that Sir John wants her—and the miracle of love has prolonged his life for a while at least.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

TEARs. Not the hysterical sobbing kind. But tears which shine through the beams of a courageous smile. Tears which scintillate like dewdrops in the morning sun.

Love. Not the kind usually shown in pictures. A love built on the steadfast foundation of faith and high ideals and sustained through three decades.

A dairy, the yellow ear-marked pages of which hold a woman's secrets, symbolic of her everlasting devotion to her ideals and belief in human nature.

These devices form the sum and substance which serve Norma Talmadge as a vehicle for a really great emotional portrayal of youth, maturity, middle age and old age.

"Secrets" is a straightforward story of a woman's life from early girlhood to old age. It is a warm, appealing romance, which deals with four distinct periods in the life of Mary Carlton, showing the evolutionary changes which take place in the attitude of a man and woman toward love and marriage, during a period of fifty-two years of their life together in various locales.

What ensues is an alluring love story, so well told in the subtlest inferences of the silent drama, as to stamp "Secrets" as a great picture. A picture to which the American woman will pulsate with all the sympathy and tenderness which makes her kindred to her man. And a picture which will stage separate, tingling little dramas in the hearts of male onlookers. Again we say, "'Secrets' is a great picture."

Norma Talmadge rises superbly to her opportunities in carrying the story, skillfully, swiftly and surely to a convincing conclusion. As Mary Marlowe, the London school girl in billowy crinolines, she gets her initial character portrayal off to an auspicious start when she elopes with her father's penniless clerk on a high-wheeled bicycle in 1865 and sails to America.

Miss Talmadge again rises to splendid dramatic heights as Mary Carlton, the young wife and mother, pioneering in a far-off isolated Wyoming cabin—a fighting Mary who takes pistol in hand and battles with an outlaw band to save her husband. Throughout the various turns of events Miss Talmadge never fails to give a convincing, inspiring performance.

Eugene O'Brien, as Sir John Carlton, meets the dramatic requirements of the husband as to the manner born. His performance throughout the various stages as the husband to whose every wish and whim, Mary answers, "Yes, John," merits no uncertain praise.

A deft touch which proclaimed the genius of both Miss Talmadge and her director is masterfully recorded in the final scene when the seemingly meek little wife is found still fighting for her husband—this time to save him from disgracing himself with a notorious beauty. Unlimited faith and understanding come into their own and prove that she actually has never lost her husband's love.

When one thinks of "Secrets" along exploitation lines, one thinks immediately of the unique possibilities for teaser publicity to which the title of the production lends itself readily. An appropriate as well as eye-pulling display for the lobby would have as its essential motif a huge diary. Two pages photographed from a handwritten diary could be inserted on the face of this display diary, at the top of which, in large letters, the words, "Secrets Revealed," would be in order.

A tie-up that suggests itself very naturally is one with music stores selling the Remick song, "Secrets," on the cover of which is a picture of Norma Talmadge as she appears in the film story. A street ballyhoo is not without a fertile prospect for attracting the kind of attention that pays. In this case a walking book entitled "Secrets," together with a placard announcing that the book will be opened at such and such theatre, would seem to be the logical piece de resistance so far as working on the cupidity of passing pedestrians is concerned.

The Black	Rex
Mary Fielding	Edna Murphy
Boyd Fielding	Charles Parrott
John Fielding	Sidney De Grey
Billy Blair	Leon Bary
Wade Galvin	Pat Hartigan

The Black, by right of might, is undisputed leader of a band of wild horses. By his intelligence and agility he protects the herd and eludes various pursuers. The Fielding ranch is in charge of a villainous foreman who has involved Fielding's weakling son in a cattle stealing escapade. Billy Blair, a cowpuncher, has two consuming passions. One is his love for Mary Fielding, the other his desire to capture The Black. His perseverance is rewarded, for he wins both girl and horse. All three co-operate in frustrating further villainy on the part of Galvin, the foreman, and in bringing him to justice.

By HERBERT K. CRUIKSHANK

FIVE reels of hide-and-seek with a horse. A wonderful horse, Rex. Rex in thrilling leaps over a precipice. Rex in a forest fire.

Rex in a tremendous headlong plunge into a rushing rapids. Rex running, pacing, trotting, galloping up and down steep mountains, in and out of gloomy caverns. Rex doing everything except climbing trees. And that's about all.

But that is enough to please the kids and those grown-ups who are old only in years, or who love and admire beautiful "hoss" flesh.

There is a three-cornered fight where Pat Hartigan, as the villain, gives and takes some awful Firpos. There is a lot of wild riding and driving. And there is a fine scene in which Rex jumps from a cliff into the swirling river to rescue Billy, who has saved him from the forest fire.

This is purely an animal picture and should please patrons enjoying that class of entertainment. There is nothing to exploit except Rex himself, and he deserves a crown and sceptre.

Buddy Benson's sweetheart, Rosalind, has been completely spoiled by attendance at an Eastern finishing school. She returns to the ranch jointly owned by her father and Buddy. Buddy, disillusioned, becomes enamored of Mary Ross, whose brother, Dick, owns the adjoining ranch. Dick's foreman, Jack Wells, is a cattle thief. Wells kills a man and fastens the guilt on Dick, demanding Mary as the price of his silence. Buddy disposes of Wells in a satisfactory fight, winning the friendship of Dick and the love of Mary.

By HERBERT K. CRUIKSHANK

ROUGH RIDIN' is right. And how those boys can ride. It seems as if they could ride straight up one side of a sky-scraper and down the other. Saddles and bridles are unnecessary luxuries. There is nothing startlingly original or new in this "Western." But the old hokum of swirling dust, madly galloping horses and battling men is rather well done.

There is some pretty scenery, and a couple of laughs provided by a Ford car and Arthur Detloff as "Tubby." Joe Rickson, as the villainous foreman, has too pleasant a smile—and dimples. We thought Frances Beaumont, who plays Rosalind, the sweet girl graduate, somewhat beyond the flapper age. But then it may have been the lighting.

Buddy Roosevelt looked the part, put up a good fight with the villain, and imparted a thrill by rapidly riding over a railroad trestle before a rushing locomotive in order to save the "gal." The extras deserve mention. They rode hard, and looked like real ranch hands rather than Times Square cowboys.

If your patrons like the usual stuff from "the great open spaces," and won't kick at captions like "I'll die rather than marry that brute," they should be moderately pleased.

A lobby display reminiscent of the Spanish War and its Rough Riders should attract attention. A picture of Theodore Roosevelt, the greatest Rough Rider of them all, might be used effectively in conjunction with the name of the star, Buddy Roosevelt.

Freddie, a trained seal, is smuggled out of a theatre by George Fitzgerald, fiance of his owner, Undine, vaudeville performer, to escape seizure for debt. Wetherill, George's friend, assists. The latter is notified that his rich uncle is dying and wants Wetherill's wife to nurse him. But they have quarreled, so Undine substitutes for the wife, accompanied by George, as Wetherill's valet. A flood engulfs the uncle's house. The occupants seek the roof, where escaping animals from a circus also find refuge. They are all finally rescued by the seal, who conveys them ashore with the aid of a telegraph pole.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

LAUGHING gas in sufficient quantities and strength to keep any audience in mirthful spasms is freely administered by this Thomas H. Ince production. It is a rattling good box office attraction for all classes of theatres. Once in a blue moon a comedy flashes across the screen which is totally different from its predecessors in conception and execution. "Galloping Fish" belongs in this category, a real gloom-dispeller, guaranteed to coax a grin out of the most confirmed cynic.

So far as the plot is concerned, it merely consists of a series of linked-up episodes, but the linking is so cleverly done that perfect continuity exists and the title reflects the action, which fairly gallops along from beginning to finale.

Interest, of course, centers in the adventures and wondrous stunts of the inimitable Freddie, the trained seal, who takes proud rank as the most versatile performer, outside of mere humans, who ever graced the silver sheet. It's no small task to build up a story around a bona-fide graduate of the fisheries, but the trick is neatly turned in this particular instance, with the assistance of a carefully selected cast, every member of which contributes generously to the gaiety of the occasion.

The smuggling of the seal out of reach of the law in the guise of a dead man in an ambulance is only one of many absurdly comic and yet convincing situations which "get across" with tremendous vim. A bully climax and accompanying thrill is achieved when the dam breaks, and the various characters, with the seal and a bunch of circus animals, are marooned on a roof-top. It is then that the only Freddie shows up in bold relief as a genuine film hero should, by rescuing the entire aggregation.

No printed description can adequately convey a distinct impression of Freddie's brilliant work, it must be seen to be thoroughly appreciated. That master of farcical merriment, Sidney Chaplin, is at his best in the role of Freddie Wetherill, a part peculiarly well suited to the comedian, Louise Fazenda plays Undine with her usual marked pantomimic ability, Ford Sterling scores as George Fitzgerald, the support is excellent and photography superb.

You can promise your patrons an hour of clean-cut, unique comedy and rest assured that they will not go away disappointed. Play up Master Freddie, the trained seal, as something that no seeker after amusement can afford to miss. Sidney Chaplin has established himself as a prime favorite in all parts of the country and can be widely exploited, as well as Louise Fazenda, who has a big fan-following. Make it plain that "Galloping Fish" gets clean away from the beaten paths of humorous offerings and strikes out along an entirely new amusement trail.

THE CAST

By HERBERT K. CRUIKSHANK

IF the twelve other episodes of this Western chapter-play maintain the standard of interesting action delineated in the first three, the serial will attract the regular patronage of men, women and children. There will be something of interest to all.

The stirring theme of the high-hearted pioneers who braved an expansive wilderness to win the West has been made familiar to every American. Here we have the prairie schooners, and their occupants. The bleaching bones of unfortunate men and animals, the fearless scout, the painted, scalp-seeking, pitiless Indians, wild men and wild beasts, fights and rescues, constantly threatening disaster and the thrills always experienced when the fair maiden and the dauntless hero emerge safe and triumphant.

The story portrays the colorful life of a real personality, John A. Sutter. Fort Sutter, built by him, is still a landmark. Charles Brinley, who plays this adventurous dreamer of empire, conveys the impression of an ambitious visionary. Sutter, in the picture, looks like Robert E. Lee. He has too many conscientious scruples for a monarchy-builder, and abandons his plan for the sake of fair play when he encounters a conflicting land grant given by the President of Mexico.

The villainous Marsdon together with a band of bullies and Arabella Ryan, an adventuress, does everything possible to secure and destroy the Cardosa grant. Sometimes they almost succeed. The grant is really burned by accident but meantime a revolution intervenes.

California gains independence, due in great measure to the famous scout, Kit Carson. General John C. Fremont wrests the new made republic from its exploiters and makes it a part of the Union. Then the soul stirring discovery of gold near Sutter's Fort, and the final dash by "Cal" and Sonora to the President at Washington who restores their rights.

Neva Gerber, the Sonora Cardosa of the picture, rides well, shoots straight, and makes an attractive figure in costumes alternating from the hoop-skirted gowns of the period to the typical buck-skin outfit of the pioneers. Edmund Cobb, is sufficiently handsome to be interesting as "Cal" and puts up many a corking good fight with fists, guns and other implements of warfare. Wilbur McLaugh and Ruth Royce are satisfying in their villainy.

There is a bit too much smoke in some of the fight and fire scenes—but they are realistic. Of course bulls-eyes are scored at long range from the backs of madly galloping horses and from wildly careening wagons—but then we all know what wonderful shots those forty-niners were. Here and there the weapons used look suspiciously modern—but who cares? There is plenty of action, and the theme is interesting to all who care to learn how our Nation was built.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A GOOD program attraction! "Galloping Gallagher" lives up to its lively title, explodes the melodramatic dynamite in a succession of bangs and should be well received wherever typical Western films are a favorite article on the entertainment bill of fare.

If the plot hurdles over the border of strict probability here and there, it at least possesses the merit of being a bit unusual in conception and development. While hero Bill Gallagher's adventures include the thrills, combat stuff and wild riding exploits always served up liberally in these sort of pictures, he swings incessantly into unexpected trails and peppers his audience pleasantly with surprise ammunition.

And the best of the surprise episodes are those furnished by that extremely sagacious and gifted four-footed actor, Bill's steed, the renowned Silver King. This beautiful thoroughbred, who has shared Fred Thomson's dramatic triumphs in the past, has never appeared to better advantage on the screen, and is really half the show in himself.

Silver King is ever to the front and distinguishes himself in the opening reel by cornering and catching one bandit, while his master tackles another. Later, he enables the hero to escape from durance vile by knocking over a chap, taking the jail keys from him and bringing them to Bill.

Also, there is a bully fight between Gallagher and the villainous Joe Burke, which is a rattler in the line of rough-and-tumble tactics, and some grisly comedy supplied by an undertaker always in search of custom, and feverishly anxious to be first on the spot when there seems to be a chance of somebody being bumped into Kingdom Come.

Besides the adults who find pleasure in watching a riot of fight, fun, lovemaking and hard riding stunts depicted in five reels, juvenile patrons will assuredly pronounce "Galloping Gallagher" "a peach of a film." Silver King will especially appeal to the youngsters.

Fred Thomson fits neatly into the star role. An athlete of national reputation, his ability and nerve are demonstrated to the utmost in the role of Bill Gallagher, which he plays with daring recklessness and no small amount of dramatic ability. Hazel Keener, winner of a recent beauty contest, conducted by the Chicago Tribune, is a prettily fascinating heroine, Frank Hagney scores in the heavy part of the villain, Joe Burke, and the support is adequate. Excellent photography distinguishes the whole production.

In playing up the star, dwell upon his athletic record, which includes the holding of the world's-all-round-championship for a period of three years, a fact which will interest the sporting contingent.

'SINGER JIM McKEE'

TYPICAL HART FILM

Bill Batters Bad Men and Takes Big Neckbreaking Chances in Western Feature

SINGER JIM McKEE. Paramount Photoplay. Author, William S. Hart. Director, Clifford Smith. Length, 7,098 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Singer Jim McKee William S. Hart
Mary Holden Phyllis Haver
Buck Holden Gordon Russell
Dan Gleason Bert Sprotte
Betty Gleason Ruth Miller
Hamlin Glass, Jr. Edward Coxen
Hamlin Glass William Dyer
Brute Bernstein George Siegmann

Disguised as Spanish bandits, miners Singer McKee and Buck Holden hold up a stage coach. Buck is killed in an encounter with the sheriff's men. Jim escapes with Buck's baby, Mary, and rears her to womanhood. Because Mary needs clothes, Jim robs a motor bus. He is caught, but meanwhile saves Mary from assault by a drunken suitor. Jim serves his sentence. At its expiration he finds happiness with Mary.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

IN the many communities where William S. Hart reigns as a prime screen favorite "Singer Jim McKee" ought to get the money. He's the same old Bill and the picture is made up of the same sort of melodrama which won him his renown in the past.

Artistically the film scores 100 per cent, the mountain scenery being impressively beautiful, enhanced by fine long shots and delicately graded lighting effects that are a delight to the critical eye. As for the action, it swirls along rapidly, with hair-breadth escapes from death, stage-coach holdups, red hot pursuits, weird and wonderful riding stunts, etc., all crammed into a veritable merry-go-round of excitement.

So, if you relish the Hart formula of screen entertainment, you'll like the film and pronounce it well worth the admission price. Of course, there are folks who see nothing to admire in Mr. Hart's wild doings by flood and field, and these latter will probably unite in giving "Singer Jim McKee" the unkind word. But we are convinced that the Hart adherents muster strong enough to make the feature a paying proposition from the showman's angle in most parts of the country.

Social ethics don't bother Jim McKee to any appreciable extent. When he needs coin he steps out and procures it with the aid of a gun, and it is this little failing on his part which finally lands him behind the bars. But it is a time-honored custom in movie circles to pass lightly over such trivial breaks by the hero of a regular Western picture, and anyhow, Jim atones for his sins by serving a sentence, and finds the girl he loves waiting for him at its close.

The heroine is a nice little girl, but one could wish that she wasn't called upon to weep so frequently and plentifully. Phyllis Haver plays this part, and except when her good looks are drowned in a torrent of tears, she registers as a very attractive young woman.

Bill Hart, as Jim McKee, wallops his enemies energetically, rides and takes chances on breaking his neck with all the self-abandon of an inspired lunatic, plays nimbly on the sentimental chords, and does it all as if he enjoyed the proceedings thoroughly. It is a typical Hart performance. He is well supported, the western characters are true to type and the locations well chosen. Director Clifford Smith has done good work, and it's a cinch no one will accuse him of failing to spice up the picture with thrill sauce and peppery punches.

Your best bet is to play up Bill Hart big in the exploitation of this feature. Stress his fistic scraps, the constant succession of wild adventures, the fall of star and steed over the cliff, his rescue of the heroine and the colorful atmosphere, and make your patrons understand that the well-known leading man is just as forceful and cyclonic as he ever was.

FAST, TENSE MELODRAMA

'The Night Message' Molds Familiar Feud Theme Into Unusual Form

THE NIGHT MESSAGE. Universal Photoplay. Author and Director, Perley Poore Sheehan. Length, 4,590 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Old Man Lefferts Howard Truesdell
Elsie Lefferts Gladys Hulette
Lee Longstreet Charles Cruz
Mrs. Longstreet Margaret Seddon
Harney Lefferts Norman N. Rankow
Hank Lefferts Robert Gordon
Lem Beeman Edgar Kennedy
Ike Flagg Lon Poff
Governor Pringle Joseph W. Girard

The Lefferts and Longstreet families in a southern mountain region are enemies. Elsie Lefferts and Lee Longstreet are sweethearts. Old Lefferts favors the suit of telegraph operator Lem Beeman. The latter, while hunting, accidentally shoots Elsie's brother, Harney. Lee is blamed for the killing, arrested, and sentenced to death. The telegraph wires are down in a storm when Lem decides to confess. He reaches the prison in time to save Lee but is killed. The lovers are united.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

WHEREVER lovers of fast, exciting melodrama congregate this picture will meet with strong approbation and swell the box office receipts handsomely. The director, Mr. Perley Poore Sheehan, is well known as a novelist, short-story writer and the scenario expert who was responsible for the adaptation or "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" for screen purposes.

This, his first appearance in a directorial role, stands as an additional tribute to Mr. Sheehan's versatility. He has done an excellent job in developing his own narrative for the camera, for "The Night Message" hits its stride right from the opening reel and swings smoothly and swiftly along to a stunning climax.

Feuds between Southern mountain folks are familiar stuff to the movie fans, but in this instance the feud is made the foundation for a story of such sweeping power and embellished with a variety of strange, unexpected angles, that no fault can be found with the picture on the score of originality.

In the first reel the romance between a boy and girl of opposing factions is developed and interest in the youthful lovers having thus been established, fate proceeds to deal heavy blows, with the result that sympathy for the suffering pair is piled up in plenty. And unquestionably the hero stands in need of tons of the said sympathy, for his is a hard case—the bitterness of a family feud intervening between him and his sweetheart, an accusation of having slain her brother, and a death sentence imposed on him for a crime of which he is totally innocent.

A splendid climax is attained when Lem, stricken with remorse, manages to repair the broken wires and shoot through a message to the place of execution which saves the guiltless man. Death comes to the operator as he concludes his belated work of redemption, but tragic as this episode may be, it does not strike one's fancy as illogical.

The storm is an exceedingly spectacular affair, filmed with tremendous effect and great accuracy of detail. In fact the photography throughout is remarkable for perfect camera technique and registers as a credit to the Universal studios.

Exploited as a straight melodrama of gripping power and swift sustained action, punctuated with decisive thrills and unusual situations, "The Night Message" ought to go over big. Edgar Kennedy, Howard Truesdell, Margaret Seddon and Gladys Hulette are worthy of prominent mention in your advertising campaign.

DUTCH ROLE SUITS JACKIE

Young Coogan Provided With Story That Will Please All

A BOY OF FLANDERS. A Metro Picture. Story by Louis De La Rame. Adapted by Marian Jackson. Scenario by Walter Anthony. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Length 7,018 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jan Van Dullen Josef Swickard
Jehan Daas Nigel de Brulier
Baas Cogez Lionel Belmore
Marie Cogez Nell Craig
Alois Cogez Jean Carpenter
Petrasche (the wonder dog) "Teddy" Nello
Nello Jackie Coogan

Left orphaned by the death of his mother, Nello is dependent upon his old blind grandfather who sells milk in the village. The child assumes all household responsibilities and takes his grandfather about. His only friend is Alois Cogez, and her mother, but her father hates the boy and makes life hard for him. Nello nurses back to health Petrasche, a poor beaten dog, and they become fast friends. Things go from bad to worse and Nello finally decides he can fight it no longer. He goes out into the storm of the night prepared to die, but his faithful dog finds him, he is restored and told that he has won the art prize and is to be adopted by Jan Van Dullen, the noted artist.

By HENRIETTE SLOANE

THIS new Jackie Coogan picture is sure to delight the youngsters and satisfy their elders. Its comedy touches will make them chuckle with joy, its pathos will tug at the heartstrings, and the general effect will be to send them away satisfied and gratified that they saw the film.

King or pauper, Jackie is never found wanting. As the poor little orphan burdened with the care of a household and the worry "of making both ends meet"; intrusted with the selling of the family wares and the difficult task of cheering up a failing grandfather, Jackie is provided with a role which gives him innumerable opportunities to demonstrate his pantomimic ability, and never once does he fall short.

Surrounded by a picturesque Flemish background, the little fellow radiates added charm. The story, simple—sometimes a bit improbable and somewhat unnatural—is still well within the scope of the youngster and fits him admirably. The juvenile romantic theme is simply delicious. The subtle flirtation between little Nello and the landowner's daughter, Alois, will make everyone sigh and smile. It is a delicate touch delicately handled, and admirably portrayed.

Yes, there is no doubt about it, this newest Jackie Coogan film is a winner, and exhibitors will find that no matter what class their audiences fall in, the picture will in all probability more than please.

Its exploitation should be a very simple matter. Stills of Jackie in his quaint, raggy Dutch costume will undeniably attract a great deal of attention. Play these up in a good lobby display. Make the lobby attractive with Dutch atmosphere. Using one of the twenty-four sheets, make a windmill cut-out and mount it above the marquee. By the employment of a small electric battery you can keep it in continual motion and there can be no doubt it will catch the public eye.

You might also provide a paper Dutch cap or paper clogs on which are printed the name of the picture and the date of showing at your theatre. Distribute these among the children. They will be delighted with them and will flaunt them on the streets where they are sure to be seen by everyone.

'HIS DARKER SELF'
NOVEL AND AMUSING

Humor and Thrills Mingle Effectively in Lloyd Hamilton's First Feature Length Film

HIS DARKER SELF. Presented by Albert L. Grey. Hodgkinson Photoplay. Author, Arthur Caesar. Director, John W. Noble. Length, 5,000 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Claude Sappington Lloyd Hamilton
Bill Jackson Tom Wilson
Uncle Eph Tom O'Malley
Aunt Lucy Lucille La Verne
Darktown's Cleopatra Irma Harrison
Jackson's Sweetheart Edna May Sperl
Claude's Girl Sally Long
Claude's Mother Kate Bruce
The Governor Warren Cook

Uncle Eph, old negro servant of the Sappington family, hauls liquor at night to Bill Jackson's dancehall. Jackson in a fit of temper knocks out Eph and fatally stabs another man. Eph is blamed for the crime. Claude Sappington, in love with the Governor's daughter, but frowned upon by her papa blackens his face and visits Darktown in an attempt to discover the real murderer. After many wild adventures he succeeds in making Jackson confess, saves old Eph and marries the girl he loves.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THIS is Lloyd Hamilton's first feature length picture and the erstwhile mirth-creator of two reel fame makes good right off the jump. "His Darker Self" was produced in the D. W. Griffith studios and the original intention was to star Al Jolson. The latter backed out of the engagement at the eleventh hour and Hamilton filled the gap.

It's a good filling, too, one that will stand the test of folks in search of lively entertainment, for in addition to the irresistibly comic action, there are frequent interludes of snappy melodrama and the thrill wires are keyed up to full concert pitch. Director John Noble has "done himself proud" in turning out this novel five-reeler, which is "classy" enough to meet the demands of any theatre and should pile up an enviable box office record.

When hero Claude Sappington decides to do some detective work and run down the bootlegging pirate who has slid the burden of a murderous crime on to the shoulders of an innocent man, he adopts the disguise of a gentleman of color, and his makeup is a wierd and wondrous thing to gaze upon. His adventures in the murky atmosphere of Darktown are many and peculiar, as for instance, when he gets mixed in with a baptismal ceremony and his burnt cork mask is washed away.

Another situation where the laughs come strong and plenty, is that in which Claude hides under the bed of a brunette beauty, Bill Jackson arrives trailed by his jealous sweetheart and a whirling free-for-all scrap develops between the four.

The big melodramatic punch is successfully administered in the motor boat chase after the bootlegger chief, a splendidly filmed scene which is packed with exciting detail and winds up in hurricane fashion. After which Claude's tangled love affairs are straightened out and a happy finale is staged.

The fine art of preserving an even serio-comic balance is skillfully demonstrated in the working out of this plot. Suspense is the toughest thing in the world to arouse and maintain where comedy-drama, is concerned, yet Mr. Noble and his players have accomplished the feat, besides keeping the humorous interest alive.

As for the star's performance, Mr. Lloyd Hamilton scores such a pronounced hit in the role of Claude Sappington, that there appears to be no reason why the producers of "His Darker Self" should in the slightest degree regret the backsliding of Al Jolson. Hamilton has made good as a feature lead and the fans will surely look forward to his future billing on the big time. He is well supported, Tom Wilson gives a capital impersonation of bootlegger, Bill Jackson. Sally Long, the Follies beauty, is an attractive figure as Claude's sweetheart and Tom O'Malley scores a hit as Uncle Eph. The photography throughout is excellent.

Blackface comedy drama is a distinct novelty on the screen and you can stress this point in exploiting the feature. Lloyd Hamilton is widely known through his two reel comedies and the fans everywhere will be interested in seeing how he shapes up in a feature film. Besides the star, the names of Sally Long, Lucille La Verne, Tom Wilson and Tom O'Malley possess advertising value.

SANTSCHI PUTS ON REAL MILL

'The Plunderer' Shows Tom and Mayo in Realistic, Bloody Battle

THE PLUNDERER. Fox Photoplay, Author, Roy Norton. Director, George Archambaud. Length, 5,812 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bill Mathews Frank Mayo
The Lily Evelyn Brent
Bill Presbey Tom Santschi
The Wolf James Mason
Joan Presbey Peggy Shaw
Richard Townsend Edward Phillips
Bells Parks Dan Mason

Richard Townsend goes West to develop his heritage, the unproductive Croix D'or gold mine. He and Bill Mathews, his trusty foreman, discover that the mine is being plundered of its gold by Bill Presbey, owner of the adjacent claim and father of Joan. Richard loves Joan, and Mathews is in love with The Lily, the fair proprietor of the mining town honky-tonk. After several exciting episodes including fights, a strike, the dynamiting of a dam, a fire and a mine cave-in, love and virtue triumph. Presbey succumbs to his daughter's plea plus Mathews' fists and returns the stolen gold. The Lily reforms and everything points to happiness ever after for her and Bill as well as for Richard and Joan.

By HERBERT K. CRUIKSHANK

THERE is nothing extraordinary about this melodramatic picture, but it may prove fairly entertaining to an audience satisfied with a picture replete with physical combat, the blowing up of a dam and some interesting closeups of mining machinery in operation. The love interest is sketchy and insufficiently developed. The picture is jumpy in places and the ending is abrupt. There are some pretty scenes of Nature's ample amphitheatre as viewed in the great open spaces and a fight which appears genuine from the battered countenances of the participants.

Tom Santschi as Bill Presbey, the Plunderer, stages the best battle he has put on since his historic melee in "The Spoilers." There is plenty of blood, and it is a relief to see the battlers a bit mussed up after the contest in contrast with the many film fights from which the hero emerges with his patent leather hair as unruffled as his shirt front.

Dan Mason, who plays Bells Parks, an old mine rat, dies too soon. His character interpretation is excellent—an outstanding feature. We would rather have had the rest of the cast die. James Mason didn't quite belong as The Wolf. His snarl is more of a sneer. This actor shines as a "snowbird" or some underworld slumite, but even as a wolf he doesn't fit in around a mine. Frank Mayo does his stuff according to schedule, and triumphs over the villain in the big fight. We think Santschi must have laid down. The girls in the cast fill in satisfactorily, with a special word for "Pearl," whose name does not appear in the cast.

Mayo, Santschi and the two Masons are the names to conjure with, and the fight is the outstanding feature. The dynamiting of the dam can be exploited, although the set in this scene is palpably a miniature. Headlines clipped from a current paper regarding a mine disaster should attract attention. Stills of the mining town dance hall will receive the furtive glances of your male patrons.

BURNETT PLAY A SUCCESS

'Dawn of a Tomorrow' Promises Satisfactory Box Office Returns

THE DAWN OF A TOMORROW. Paramount Photoplay. Adapted from the Novel and Stage Play by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Director, George Melford. Length, 6,010 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Glad Jacqueline Logan
The Dandy Raymond Griffith
Sir Oliver Holt David Torrence
Arthur Holt Roland Bottomley
Ned Harris Gordon
Black Guy Oliver
Madge Marguerite Clayton
Polly Alma Bennett

Sir Oliver Holt, ill and fearing coming insanity, goes to a London slum intending to commit suicide. He is prevented by Glad, a slum girl, whose lover is a young burglar known as "The Dandy." He employs Dandy to obtain money from his safe, having given him the combination. Dandy performs his task, incidentally stopping Sir Oliver's nephew from looting the safe. Dandy is accused of murdering a policeman. Sir Oliver establishes his innocence and Dandy and Glad become his wards.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

A VERY entertaining picture which reflects a credit upon all concerned in its production, "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" ought to register satisfactory box office results wherever it is booked. Dealing with the under-crust of London life, where crime is rampant in gloomy alleys, there is sharp physical action enough to fill the demands of those who desire gingery amusement fare, while others will respond favorably to its sympathetic message of hope for the downfallen.

George Melford's directorial craft is displayed in his careful handling of situations which offer considerable temptation for indulgence in excess sentiment of the gushing order. The average director seems unable to resist this lure, which accounts for the screening of many films clogged with dripping sweetness and staggering under an overload of moral reflections.

The characters are thoroughly human while the sentimental urge persists, it is always kept within reasonable bounds, you can sympathize with the hunger need, sorrows and passions of these wretched, ragged creatures and be uplifted by the cheery optimism of the little girl heroine, without experiencing an uncomfortable sense of forced theatrical atmosphere.

With this exception, the narrative is convincing and a momentary stretching of melodramatic license isn't likely to interfere with anyone's enjoyment of the picture. The British atmosphere is excellent, better photography could not be desired, there are a couple of handsome interiors and deep sets have been skillfully utilized in the filming of murky corners and dismal streets where the tide of wrecked humanity ebbs to and fro.

Dandy's dodging of the "bobbies" who are on his trail, the robbery of the pawn-shop and shooting of a policeman by two English thugs, and the girl heroine's desperate struggle with Sir Oliver's designing nephew, furnish a variety of well staged thrills. There is a crashing finale, when Dandy engages in a savage fight with Glad's assailant, is caught by the police and about to be hauled off to jail, when the millionaire appears and establishes his innocence.

Jacqueline Logan is pleasing, natural and emotionally effective as Glad, Raymond Griffith gives a fine impersonation of the light-hearted, light-fingered Dandy, David Torrence wins favor as the kindly Sir Oliver and the support is excellent.

You can exploit this as a good human interest story, with realistic underworld atmosphere and abundance of melodramatic thrills. Jacqueline Logan, Raymond Griffith and David Torrence have a strong fan following and their names should be prominently featured.

The Big Little Feature

'SECRETS OF LIFE' PROVE REAL PATRON PULLERS

Apprehensions which exhibitors may have had in connection with running pictures of an "educational" nature have been largely dispelled by the success of the Educational Film Exchanges' "Secrets of Life" series of microscopic pictures, produced by Louis H. Tollhurst for Principal Pictures Corporation.

In almost every instance these little microscopic pictures have surprised the exhibitor who booked them fearing they would go to the way of other subjects of like nature. The public has commented on them in no uncertain manner, and newspaper critics and reviewers throughout the country have supported these pictures in a manner gratifying to producers of this class of entertainment.

Typical reviews were published in Cincinnati, Ohio, papers when the first of the series, "The Ant" made its appearance at the Strand Theatre in that city. The Cincinnati Enquirer devoted over a quarter of a column to its review of this picture.

"We believe the ants have a shade the best of its at the Strand this week" said their reviewer, who states that the insect picture was the most interesting feature of the bill. "It is the sort of film that no one, either nature lover or movie fan, can afford to miss."

"The real novelty of the program at the Strand," says the Cincinnati Times-Star, "is the first of the microscopic studies of insects, 'The Ant.'"

'PLAYING HOOKEY' RETITLED

"Playing Hookey," which stars Buddy Messinger, the boy-comedian, has been changed to "Happy Days," according to information from Century's Hollywood studio. The change was made at Abe Stern's suggestion, as soon as he reached the coast. Mr. Stern believed that "playing hookey" was too broad in meaning to exploit it in the manner the Century Comedies are now being handled, and for this reason it was changed to "Happy Days."

Martha Sleeper, the twelve-year-old ingenue, whose work in "The Racing Kid" and "Trailing Trouble" won her a contract, appears opposite Buddy in this story of school-days, within and without school walls.

Al Herman wrote the story and directed the film. Others in the comedy are "Spec" O'Donnell, Arthur Trimble and Ernie Adams.

'BIRDS OF PASSAGE' SPECIAL

Pathe's program of releases for April 6 is introduced by a three-reel special, titled "Birds of Passage," which is a novelty film of striking beauty and spectacular action. The subject is a screen story of the annual migration of birds from the northern climes to the banks of the Nile, filmed by the famous Swedish ornithologist, Dr. Bengt Berg. Practically every type of European migratory bird came within range of Dr. Bergs' camera over the period of years that he was filming this portrayal of the struggle that the winged creatures of the air must wage against the merciless cold of winter.

ELVES AND SPRITES PERFORM BEFORE THE CAMERA

International News, in its current release, has exclusive pictures, made in New York City, at the first Flower Show of the season, wherein inhabitants of Fairyland are shown gambling and dancing on the petals of roses. These mysterious pictures cannot fail to be of interest, at all leading theatres exhibiting International News.

In this issue there is also a subject made at Los Angeles, of a girl dare-devil, who defies death blindfolded, 3,000 feet in the air. These pictures are real—there is no fake about it. She cannot see a thing and this proves to what length thrill seekers will go to entertain the public.

At Culver City, California, the Spring training season opens for circus monkeys.

And there are quite a few different shots, under the heading "The News of the Day," perhaps the principle subject being that of Curtis D. Wilbur, the new Secretary of the Navy.

MONTE BANKS

Popular comedian now starring in personally produced feature comedy-dramas. His initial picture was "Racing Luck." He makes 'em laugh.

THIRD FOR MCCOY

Number three for Harry McCoy. That he has made the grade as a Century Comedy star is evidenced from the fact that he will make his third appearance as a star for this company in "Traffic Jams," the title the picture bears at this printing.

Noel Smith, one of the old-timers in the producing of two-reel comedies, and for many years with Stern Brothers, is producing it from a story written by himself. Lamont, also a director of lengthy standing, is working in close unison with Smith.

Hilliard Karr, Bessie Welsh, Joe Bonner and Ernie Adams are playing leading comedy roles in support of McCoy. Several other characters the story calls for are being engaged as the action of the picture progresses. The story deals with the unharmonious life of a J-walker, and various methods used by him to avoid the never-ending traffic jams. McCoy plays the part of the sad-eyed lover and J-walker.

SENNETT COMEDY FOR PATHE

Mack Sennett's latest comedy for Pathe release, titled "The Hollywood Kid," was completed last week and appeared this week at a preview showing at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles. A dispatch from the Coast reports that the comedy was enthusiastically received and has been closed by Sid Grauman for presentation on the regular program in the near future.

CENTURY WILL RELEASE FIVE COMEDIES IN APRIL

Five Century Comedies will be released during the month of April, according to Universal's schedule of distribution of short products.

They are: "Hit Him Hard," with Jack Earle and Harry McCoy. Marjorie Marcel English ingenue, appears in the leading feminine part. "Checking Out," with Pal the dog in the star role. Noel Smith directed this fun film.

"The Racing Kid" stars Buddy Messinger. He is ably supported by Martha Sleeper, beautiful twelve-year-old leading lady for Buddy's films.

"Pretty Plungers," stars the bevy of pulchritude known as the Century Follies Girls.

The final Century two-reeler for April is "A Lofty Marriage," in which Jack Earle and Henry Murdock share honors for the leading roles.

LANGDON STARTS NEW COMEDY

Harry Langdon, who is proving a sensational success in his series of two-reel comedies being distributed by Pathe, has completed another comedy, titled "His New Mamma." This latest subject, which was directed by Roy Del Ruth, is now being edited and titled at the Mack Sennett Studios, preparatory to its shipment to New York.

The feminine honors are shared between Madeline Hurlock and Alice Day, the former appearing in her customary role of an ultra-sophisticated beauty and the latter as a sweet, demure, society girl.

HAL ROACH PRESENTS MOHAN IN FEATURED ROLES

The first of a new group of Pathe comedies featuring Earl Mohan will make its appearance on April 20 under the title of "One at a Time."

The new Earl Mohan comedies will be produced by Hal Roach. It is planned to release the Earl Mohan subjects alternately with the Charles Chase comedies, which are also produced by Hal Roach and distributed by Pathe.

"One at a Time" is built around a prize-ring story with Mohan playing the role of "Knockout Kelly" and Billy Engle appearing as his diminutive but none the less capable manager. The action is said to abound with humorous incident and laughable situations.

DOG IN TITLE ROLE

"Some Pal," with Pal the dog in the star and title role, has been placed in production by Julius Stern with Al Herman wielding the megaphone. This will be Pal's first Century Comedy since Lincoln's birthday, just passed.

An excellent supporting cast has been engaged to appear in this fun film, among whom are Fred Spencer, Ernie Shields, Earl Marsh and Tad Ross. The ingenue shall be either Bartine Burkett or Betty Young, although information concerning this has not yet been sent from the Century Hollywood studios.

The comedy is based on a series of cartoons which appeared in Northwest and Southern California papers, from the pen of Pinto Colvig. They have now been brought into screen form and under Herman's direction it is expected that another "exceptional" comedy shall be made with Pal, the clever canine.

'The Fly'—Educational

Secrets of life series

1 reel

This is a wonderful example of photography and microscopy. It shows the fly from the larva stage to the full grown germ carrier. The fly is enlarged thousands of times in all his ugliness and is a timely subject, for anyone witnessing this picture will be a confirmed "swatter." The picture shows the result of a fly's foot being placed in a small tube containing broth. In a short time the broth was contaminated by millions of wiggling bacteria which can be plainly seen in action. This picture should be shown in the schools as it plainly visualizes the dangers of the common house fly, and would encourage the destruction of the pests. It should be shown before civic organizations to awaken interest in extinction of the disease carrier. It should find a place on every program.

'Seeing Things'—Pathe

Our Gang Comedy

2 reels

Little Farina is made a star in this picture. The gang holds a barbecue and Farina loads herself to the gunwales with food. The result is a nightmare in which she performs some hectic stunts. Farina is the chief character in the picture; the gang being merely background. The little comedian does noble. This picture is a laugh producer and is up to the usual "Our Gang" standard. This one should be booked for it will be sure to please.

* * *

'Friend Husband'—Pathe

Snub Pollard comedy

1 reel

A riotous reel of matrimonial trouble. Pollard pretends insanity to escape the army routine and marries an amazon who puts him through the mill, she having had experience on three former husbands. Pollard finally rejoins the army for a rest. The picture is slap-stick but contains some good laughs and funny situations. There is nothing original but it is funny.

* * *

'Marry When Young'—Universal

Domestic battles

1 reel

Neely Edwards would be a poor risk for an insurance company after he stepped into matrimony with his young bride. A reel is devoted to little else than his being damaged physically by his better half. He spends most of his time picking himself up. He is aided and abetted by Bert Roach, who plays the valet. It is a slapstick affair but it moves fast and measures up to the average comedy.

* * *

'Hit Him Hard'—Universal

Century comedy

2 reels

Jack Earle and Harry McCoy furnish the fun in this one. The action is in the prize ring and is fast. Part of the picture reverts to the stone-age where clubs are used to great advantage. Stone-age taxis and baby carriages are shown along the "Main Street" and the prehistoric method of bootlegging is interestingly told. It is a good comedy.

'White Man Who Turned Indian'—Pathe

Indian frontier series

2 reels

This is the third of the "Indian Frontier Series" as related by Chief Yellow Horse of the Arapahoe Indian tribe. The tale rings true, there's plenty of thrilling action and the atmosphere is convincing. It is the story of a white boy who became a member of the Arapahoe tribe under dramatic circumstances. Chief Yellow Horse starts the story in the Indian sign language which is as interesting as it is novel.

LIFE OF A SPIDER

Baby Spiders do not have a soft life. Mother spider lays the eggs then goes away and dies. To show their exuberance, the young spiders devour one another. The Bray Scientific pictures are released through Educational.

'The Swift and Strong'—Pathe

Spotlight

1 reel

Grantland Rice shows the result of coordination of mind and muscle in this picture. He shows pole vaulters, broad jumpers, runners and jumpers. The slow action camera gives an excellent opportunity to study the movements necessary to break records. It is a good subject and will please any audience.

* * *

'Dusty Dollars'—Educational

Cameo comedy

1 reel

An average comedy with several new twists. It is fast moving and contains some good laughs. Sid Smith does some good acrobatics with a ladder and is a very busy person.

'Birds of Passage'—Pathe

Nature subject

3 reels

An interesting subject showing the migration of birds from the cold climates to the valley of the Nile. The picture shows the birds in their winter home and some of the close shots are remarkable. Almost every species of bird is shown on the wing and feeding and it is an educational treat. The picture also shows the crocodiles of the Nile in all their ponderous glory. The picture will fit in well with any program and could be recommended for school use or for showing before societies for preservation of wild life.

'Killing Time'—Educational

Hamilton comedy

2 reels

Lloyd Hamilton in one of his laugh makers. He undertakes to teach table manners to a sheep herder with very interesting results. The picture runs through the usual list of slapstick stunts but they are amusing. The best scene is brought about by a waiter placing a chafing dish under Hamilton's chair. It is really funny. The captions are good and the picture will make a good addition to any program.

'Runnin' Wild'—Pathe

Cartoon

1 reel

This fable shows that life is one thing after another. The characters do a number of impossible stunts that never fail to bring a laugh. The trials and tribulations of a bird trying to keep the wolf from the door furnishes the amusement. The usual chase scenes are good and the action is fast. It measures up well with the average single reel comedy.

'Lonesome'—Educational

Hamilton comedy

2 reels

Ever see a clam smoke a cigarette? You will in this Lloyd Hamilton comedy. There are three clams served Lloyd in a restaurant that defy all efforts at being caught. The story is good for lots of laughs.

ATTRACTIVE EXPLOITATION

First National's "When a Man's a Man" obtained good exploitation at the Garden Theatre, Paterson, by the use of an animated book and a huge book cut-out above the marquis. The splendid exploitation drew capacity crowds to the theatre and proved the value of telling the world.

SHOWMANSHIP

A Word On Lobby Lure and Theatre Personality

Your Theatre—Inside and Out, Through the Lobby, Down the Aisle—Is Creating an Indelible Impression in Every Mind. Is This Impression Good or Bad?

By HERBERT K. CRUIKSHANK

DURING the recent European unpleasantness the streets of these United States were thronged with marching men. Not a day passed but what our cities echoed with the muffled tramp of khaki-clad conquerors. Hundreds of them—thousands of them—an army. Well, that's all attended to. The job was well done—so far as the boys were concerned. They are all out of uniform now, but they still parade. They are still in the army—the army of casual passersby that marches daily through your thoroughfare, back and forth before your theatre. How many enter? How many pause—and turn away?

The lobby of your theatre is its face—rather an important feature. When you meet a man you scan his face, and what you read there often tells the story. If his face is dirty, unkempt and unattractive you size him up accordingly. If it is bright and interesting you want to know him better. You believe that his personality will fulfill the promise mirrored in his visage. Generally you are right. In any event you take him at his face value.

Let us take it for granted that you keep the face of your theatre washed—that your lobby shines with genial welcome. The lure of the lobby has caused many a soldier of the passing army to execute a "squads right" into your theatre. It may have been the attractiveness with which you featured your current program, a display of stills or cutouts that compelled attention. Perhaps Mr. Passerby was susceptible to atmosphere, and the cumulative effect of lighting fixtures, artistic ticket booth, decorative effects and the general air of come-on-in-and-be-entertained wafted him willingly through the entrance door. Maybe it was the combination of both that won him. Who cares? The indisputable fact is that your lobby did its duty nobly. But—

Did the far side of your lobby make good the promise with performance? Mr. P. liked your face and he was willing to be friends. Did your theatre's personality make a pal of him? Did he step through the door into an evening's enjoyment and relaxation amid surroundings that matched your lobby?

The New York Times recently quoted the opinions of a number of men well versed in the high art of public entertainment on the ever-present question "What the Public Wants." More than one of these expert analysts of human amusement desires stated that folks go to the theatre to forget their troubles, to be diverted, to get away from themselves and their drab surroundings, to leave behind for the time the colorless dullness of work-a-day existence. They seek that which, in many cases, their homes do not afford.

We are not talking here of your screen offering. Our best thought on that subject is elsewhere accessible to you. The picture is only half the story. The main half perhaps, but here and now we are chiefly concerned with the other half—the frame of your picture. And the frame is your theatre. Everything contained in it from lobby to roof. Everything conducive to make an hegira at regular intervals to that out-of-the-way little playhouse. It has charm for us—inside the entrance door.

A modest showplace—inexpensive—unpretentious. But it has atmosphere. Nothing one may lay a finger on and say: "It's this or that." It's everything combining somehow to make an almost perfect frame. Ceiling, walls, fixtures, seating equipment—even the decorative baskets—all belong together. And courtesy doesn't end with the ticket-taker. The theatre is comfortable, clean, cosy, well-lighted, well-heated, well-ventilated. We sink in the seat indicated by the smiling spick-and-span usheress (usherine or usherette whichever is the correct nomenclature for girl ushers) with a satisfied sigh and settle back for an hour of forgetfulness in a little world of our own. It's like home should be—only better.

Lobbyology

Psychology of Pleasing Patrons

Besides the show what do you offer your patrons?

The film itself is only half the attraction. Your theatre is the other half.

What of the frame in which you show your picture?

Folks go to your playhouse to forget their troubles. In order to aid them in doing so an atmosphere conducive to comfort and relaxation is essential. Do you provide it? If not, don't call your lobby an "entrance lobby." Call it an exit. For they'll never come back.

Make the theatre and everything in it a part of your program—an added attraction—and casual callers will come again.

to the comfort and convenience of your patrons combines to make that frame a perfect setting for the picture half of your program. An inexpensive wooden frame delicate of line, harmonious in color can be a thing of joy. An expensive frame encrusted in gold-leaf may be repellent because its various parts do not harmonize.

YOUR frame—your theatre—may be either unpretentious or luxurious. In either case the Casual Patron judges it in its particular class, and is influenced accordingly. He knows that a cottage may be more beautiful, cosily comfortable and satisfying than an ornate palace. He wants comfort—he wants to relax—to forget.

We were once lured into a neighborhood theatre at the other end of town by a very attractive lobby. We typified Mr. Casual Passerby. Ever since we manage

WE liked this theatre's face. It was clean and honest, appealing and utterly attractive. We made friends and found the promise fulfilled. Now we're pals. Even so your Casual Patron is lured into becoming a Regular Caller. He keeps steady company with your theatre. If not, ask yourself—

"Is my lobby an exit?"

When the Casual Visitor passed out of your entrance door after the show did it become to him the final exit? Did your theatre's personality keep the promise depicted in its face? Or was that face for him a mask of deception. Did he ever come back? If not, don't be too ready to blame the picture half of your program. Maybe—just possibly—he did not like the other half—the frame of your picture.

Go take a walk for yourself if only as far as the corner. Kiss yourself good-bye and assume the mental processes of the casual customer who typifies the army of your potential patrons. Return to the theatre and look it over carefully from stem to stern. Start with your lobby. For instance, in order to attract more than passing attention it is not necessary to plaster your entrance with a mass of display material—posters, cutouts and what not. Observe the windows of your leading merchants. You will find that the most effective, most attractive window is not the one cluttered up with numberless odds and ends, but that which creates a buying urge through the tasteful arrangement of a few articles. Attention is focused upon them, the grouping is pleasing to the eye, whereas the window containing everything but the kitchen stove is confusing and repellent.

Now pass on through the lobby into the theatre. Round out both halves of your program to form a pleasing entirety, and you'll multiply the golden burden of the box-office.

JACKIE COOGAN AS KIDS' STYLE KING

When Metro's "Long Live the King" played the Park Theatre, Bangor, Manager Arthur Pinkham turned them toward the theatre through this attractive tie-up with the Miller & Webster Clothing Company. One of these suits was given away as first prize in a popular "Jackie Coogan Contest"

CLOTHES TIE-UP ON 'BEAU BRUMMEL' IN TWO HUNDRED STORES

SELDOM in the history of motion picture exploitation has the exhibitor been presented with an opportunity to gain such sterling window tie-ups as have been effected in connection with the release of Warner Brothers' Beau Brummel." The picture is to be released at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City, on March 30, and this fact is already known to the many hundreds of thousands daily tramping Broadway. In the Times Square section alone two hundred large and prominent window displays have been secured, and in other sections covering the length and breadth of Manhattan Island the advent of the production is blazoned forth through many windows.

Even the merchants in the "roaring Forties," where space is valued by the inch, evinced unusual enthusiasm when the question of window display was broached. The title of the picture, and the splendid stills of the popular idol, John Barrymore, wearing the picturesque costumes affected by the gallants of the Beau's period, warranted the surrender of the valuable space usually used for the shops' displays for a special tie-up. Broadway sagacity was demonstrated by the fact that the confidence of the merchants in the pulling power of the stills and oil paintings, was justified by the sidewalk jamming crowds jostling to get a look.

Stores featuring a diversity of products were requisitioned for the purpose. Young's Hat Stores showed the large grey beavers popularized by the famous Beau. Dainty footwear of the type worn by Brummel was displayed to advantage by the Signet Shoe Stores. Brill Brothers had an elaborate window with a special Beau Brummel dummy constructed for the event. Aeolian Hall made its beautiful window even more attractive, and the music store tie-ups were arranged by Carl Fischer Company, publishers of a lilting composition specially prepared for the production and called "The Beau Brummel Minuet."

The widespread enthusiasm of blase Gotham augurs well for the unprecedented success of exhibitors throughout the country in securing real co-operation from merchants of all types. There are such a profusion of logical tie-ups with the picture, that it would almost seem to have been produced to order for this very purpose. The wide-awake merchant will see the possibilities with half an eye, and is certain to meet friend exhibitor more than half way.

'ON TIME' OFFERS GOOD STUNT

"On Time" has one exploitation stunt which calls for just the display of a grandfather's clock in the lobby. The clock must be one that chimes, preferably on the quarter-hour. The idea of the stunt is that anyone in the act of paying for a ticket of admission as the clock chimes will receive the ticket free.

HORSESHOE BRINGS LUCK

Manager Earl Settle, McAlester, Okla., won a bet with his cut-out of Johnny Hines, starring as the jocular jockey in Warner Brothers' racing comedy of the rider "Little Johnny Jones."

'Different' Copy Counts in Popular Appeal

A "DIFFERENT" note in amusement advertising was sounded in the newspaper campaign conducted by Balaban and Katz during the run of the First National production "Why Men Leave Home" at the Chicago Theatre. The difference lay in the stress placed upon the copy appeal, rather than big type, bold headlines and flaring mats. The four paragraphs of copy were all run in the same sized type, and read:

"For once you will learn the secrets of the second year of marriage—the danger time that lies between the first fading of romance and the finding of true sympathy—"

"For once you will see 'the other woman' with eyes of humor and understanding—she was only a human, ambitious, lonely girl, beautiful but dumb—"

"For once you will peer into the soul of a mother-in-law. Mary Carr, who made her name playing a 'mother,' now flashes forth as memorably as the most interesting mother-in-law you ever saw...."

"For once you will be instructed and entertained at the same time—instructed in the art of holding a husband's love, and entertained with a romance that is too sensational to be polished and too distinguished with cleverness to be labeled 'sensational.'"

Apparently the thought proved intriguing to feminine fancy, for folks found their way to the box office in numbers. The girls came to get the "low down" on the problem, and the men filed in to see the other fellow tempted.

At the same time a good one was arranged with County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer, whose office dispenses marriage licenses. All applicants during the showing were given special invitations to see the picture, the "bids," attractively made up, being supplied by Balaban & Katz.

OLD SONGS HAVE OLD FRIENDS BRING TEARS AND SMILES

Through popular request and avalanche of old-time favorite songs greeted and pleased the patrons of the Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Mark Strand Theatre on a recent program. There were seven selections preceded by a three minute announcement film reading: "Songs come and songs go; we hear them today and forget them tomorrow. There are, however, those which stand the test of time and cling to our memory—the songs we can't forget."

The numbers were: "Sweet Adeline," sung by a male quartette grouped center stage, without accompaniment. "Alexander's Ragtime Band," danced by a girl in silk minstrel costume, with orchestra accompaniment. "The Glow Worm," soprano solo with harp accompaniment. "The Sidewalks of New York," male quartette and four girls, Soprano and harp rendition of "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," and then "Come Back to Erin" and "The Low Backed Car" in deference to St. Patrick's day.

THEATRE CORRIDOR FAIR AN ANNUAL EVENT

A winter fair was held for a week at the Allen Theatre, London, Ontario, this being the second annual event of its kind to be conducted in the large lobby of the theatre under the direction of Manager Tom Logan. All classes of exhibits were on display in the theatre corridor from noon to 11 P. M. The booths contained everything from automobiles, radio sets, bicycles, hardware, gas stoves and washing machines to men's clothing pianos, toilet goods and other lines. Only one exhibit from each industry was in evidence. Booth space was sold on a rental basis and a great many people attended the demonstration. The London Free Press published a special four-page section to introduce and describe the trade exposition and the Allen Theatre got prominent mention.

'Chronicles' Attract Through Patriotic Civic Clubs

Pathe's "Chronicles of America" Series continues to draw complimentary comment from many sources. The patriotic theme of this group of historical dramas produced by the Yale University Press is well calculated to arouse enthusiasm among those Americans who are interested in the highlights of their nation's development.

When "Jamestown," the second Chronicle, was shown at the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, a barrage of publicity resulted from a tie-up with the Milwaukee County League of Women Voters. This prominent organization, with an impressive membership of women high in the social and civic activities of the city and state, rallied to the support of the picture with affiliated clubs and societies. Benefit performances were given, and a prize essay contest for children on the subject "The Way in Which 'Jamestown' Teaches Patriotism" attracted city-wide attention—and patronage.

Harry Browning, manager of Gordon's Olympia Theatre, New Haven, Conn., also directed his attention to the schools and churches as well as to the civic and patriotic organizations of his city. The result was an unusual demand at the box office for "Vincennes," the third Chronicle. Saturday morning performances are given for children, and tickets have been sold so far ahead as "Peter Stuyvesant," the sixth number in the series. The Olympia shows the Chronicles about once each month, and is issuing a set of five tickets at $2.25 with which go five passes for the kids. A window display with the local Winchester sport shop, and the favorable attitude of the Chamber of Commerce strengthened the campaign.

BRILLIANT BRITISH BALLYHOO SURPRISES OLD LONDON

Captain Alfred Davis, Marble Arch Pavilion, London, put across some good ones in behalf of Rin-tin-tin, the great police dog thespian and the Warner Brothers' picture "Where the North Begins." He tied up with the Dog Show, secured a dozen police dogs as lobby display, and staged a unique lecture presentation which made the box-office as busy as a bread line in a hard winter. Plenty of newspaper publicity resulted.

In addition, a special showing of the film was tendered to high officials of the police and army. Prize winning dogs were escorted with suitable publicity to the theatre and seated as though viewing the picture while busy cameramen photographed them. Human interest stuff—and the papers grabbed it. As a sort of prologue to the picture, Major Beddoes, one of England's most distinguished dog trainers, introduced a highly intelligent wolf-dog which was put through its paces.

KIDS GATHER CROWDS

A gang of kids can always block traffic. If you don't think so toss a handful of coppers to a crowd of urchins and watch the busy business men throng to watch them scramble. Milton Crandall, Rowland and Clark Theatres, knew this and procured some great publicity for his showing of Rex Beach's "Big Brother" picture, by distributing coupons for woolen stockings to newsboys of Pittsburgh from the steps of the City-County Building.

He chose a pretty girl in riding togs to do the passing out, but she proved as popular as "Big Brother" did later.

Of course, the ever-present photographer got some fine films of the nine hundred newsies who battled clamorously for the sock tickets. Thousands witnessed the distribution.

PASADENA MOTOR DEALERS PARADE FOR 'SPORTING YOUTH'

When the Universal film played the Egyptian Theatre, Manager Allen staged a pageant of sport cars filled with sporting youths, modish mannequins, dashing debutantes and society millionaires

West Coast Manager Engineers Big Stunt in Tie-up with Pasadena Jubilee

RALPH ALLAN, manager for the T. D. & L. circuit of the Egyptian Theatre at Pasadena, Calif., succeeded in putting "Sporting Youth" over in a way that made even the staid city of millionaires and of mate sit up and take notice. Not content with staging a personal appearance of the picture's star, "Keg" Denny, carrying additional advertising in the newspapers and putting on a bang-up lobby display, Allan put over an automobile parade that was the talk of the Crown City and its suburban annex, Los Angeles.

Armed with a handful of "Sporting Youth" printed matter and backed by a determination that wouldn't be denied, Allan succeeded in getting the Pasadena Motor Dealers Association to call a special meeting to consider sponsoring a parade through the principal streets of that city in connection with the showing of the picture. With what eloquence the resourceful manager worked upon the graces of the auto dealers is not known, but Pasadena woke up to the realization that there was something doing at the Egyptian house.

Official sanction was next to be secured, and this was no more difficult to negotiate. He got the Chief of Police to appoint the handsomest and bravest of his motorcycle squad, Arthur "Red" Mansell, to clear the main thoroughfare, Colorado Street, and then came the fun. Not only was this officially sanctioned, but the Firemen's band—including even the chief, himself—lead the parade, dispensing sweet strains as they went.

No less than thirty-five cars—all sport models and the latest word in motordom—participated in the Pageant of Youth which moved before the eyes of the interested public. The cars, representing a cost of about $100,000, gaily decorated with pom-poms, poly-colored balloons, banners and equipped with latest accessories and devices came in for much praise from the by-standers. Beautiful models and society belles graced the various entries and of course Manager Allan of the "King Tut" house put in several machines reminding the public what it was all about.

With a display of his usual civic pride, Manager Allan linked the parade up with Pasadena's Fiftieth Birthday. The city is now celebrating its Jubilee Year, having a wide variety of events scheduled all through the twelve months. The "Sporting Youth" parade was not the first event of this Jubilee Year sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, but it was the first in which the Motor Dealers Association participated.

As a result of the parade and the liberal publicity given in local newspapers, the Egyptian came in for wide comment and "Sporting Youth" played to capacity houses all that week. Incidentally auto dealers reported quickened interest in sales, especially sport models.

LOOKING UP 'MAIN STREET'

This clever display cut-out was used with good results by Pittsburgh's Cameraphone Theatre during the showing of Warner Brothers' production

Public Library Tie-Up

The Cleveland Public Library has selected two of Warner Brothers pictures for display in connection with books. This recently inaugurated policy was adopted because of the excellent opportunities presented to stimulate interest in history, biography and travel.

The two pictures mentioned by the library authorities are BEAU BRUMMEL, starring John Barrymore in an adaptation of the Fitch play, and WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS, featuring the trained dog Rin-tin-tin. The latter film is not taken from a book, but its nature is such that it may be tied-up with a number of stories dealing with life in the far North. "Beau Brummel" is on the study programs of the high schools.

Stills, posters and press books of both pictures are accessible in the Parents' and Teachers' Room of the Main Library, and also in Branch and High School libraries.

Minstrel Car a Success

An interesting sidelight on the merits of ballyhoo advertising comes from the "After the Ball Minstrel Car" in the form of a letter written by L. T. Lester of Columbia, South Carolina. While making for Atlanta, Ga., on the way to the coast via the F. B. O. exchanges, the minstrel car stopped long enough in Columbia to do some ballyhooing for the Ideal Theatre which is one of the L. T. Lester circuit playing AFTER THE BALL. Mr. Lester says among other things: "I am sure the exploitation put the picture over even better than it would have gone over without the minstrel boys. It is a good stunt and no showman can go wrong using it with 'After the Ball' or, for that matter, with any picture he wants to put over in a big way."

Good Exploitation Possibilities

The Sol Lesser production, WHEN A MAN'S A MAN, received a most thorough title exploitation during its world premiere at the Cameo Theatre, New York.

The entire campaign, from lobby, street, window and newspaper, was hinged on the title of the Harold Bell Wright adaptation. The co-operation of the book publishers made it a simple matter to secure window displays in book stores, department stores and drug stores handling the works of Harold Bell Wright.

One of the biggest results of employing the adaptable title was the Venida Hairnet tie-up, which brought over seven hundred choice windows within the selling range of "When a Man's a Man." In connection with banks, the idea was that "When a Man's a Man" he saves a little and spends a little.

A Boy Scout drive for Scoutmasters was conducted among New York business men. Principal Pictures came in on the campaign with extraordinary success by offering "When a Man's a Man He'll Promote American Citizenship by Directing the Steps of American Youth." This catchline was used in the crowded subways, street cars and elevated lines of New York City.

Winners Ride Taxis to 'Reno'

When RENO was being shown at the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, the management issued 8,000 tickets for a Yellow Taxi ride to the theatre and two admissions, providing the number on the ticket corresponded to one of the list of winning numbers posted in front of the theatre.

Fifty winning numbers were displayed, and the crowd around the bulletin board was sufficiently dense to require the attention of a special policeman.

NOVELTY ON 'HAPPINESS'

This doll will help popularize Metro's screen version of J. Hartley Manners' play. It represents Laurette Taylor in the role she created, and was designed by Margaret Vale, a niece of President Wilson. Each Metro program will have these doll replicas of central characters ray in spectacular gowns. Six mannequins, all good looking, displayed the frocks from the store as a sort of prologue to the picture.

Mendel and Harris advertised the fashion show and the picture in full page newspaper spreads, and all the papers chronicled the event in the news pages under various captions such as "Local Beauties in Style Show at Olympia," "Olympia Spring Fashion Revue All Week," etc. Needless to say the results were most gratifying both to the theatre and to the shop.

Matinees for Kids

The Tivoli and City Theatres at Roseville, N. J., were recently visited by John McCullough, of Will H. Hays' New York office, with a view to learning details of the special children's matinees which are featured so successfully. The percentage of youngsters at these showings average well up in the eighties, and the audience is certainly appreciative. Manager Leon O. Mumford declares that there is a noticeable increase of adult patronage on other days due to the advertising the children give the theatres in their homes.

Every precaution is taken in selecting suitable films for the last half of each week, the pictures being chosen for the family appeal, and utmost care being taken to avoid anything even hinting at a sensational subject.

Bulletin Arouses Interest

The Brooklyn, New York, Mark Strand Theatre has established a Bulletin which is being published monthly as an exploitation accessory. It contains four pages, six by nine inches in size, and is printed in black ink on white super stock of seventy pounds weight.

Starting with a list of 250 names, the Bulletin is now being mailed regularly to over 3,000 persons, and new names are coming in at the rate of 150 each week. A blank is carried in the theatre program in which patrons may write their names. In addition to the mailing list 10,000 of the bulletins are distributed to patrons as they leave the theatre, and as there is much of interest contained in the pages these are invariably carried home.

The general custom in editing this bulletin is to advertise coming attractions for the next three or four weeks. This usually gives a page each for the next three shows, and one page for miscellaneous matter.

Every Little Counts

Tod Browning, manager of the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, Conn., put over a new one. It is a savings account. The tie-up was with the Congress Bank and Trust Company. Coupons were issued under the auspices of the theatre, crediting the bearer with a two dollar account at the bank when presented at the savings account department together with one dollar.

Only one coupon was allowed to a person and it was necessary that it be presented prior to a specified date. The campaign received much favorable notice because of its stimulation to saving.

The progressive bank officials, who had seen the possibilities and lent their aid to the plan, reaped a satisfactory harvest of new depositors with coupons in addition to a noticeable increase in the number of new accounts.

Costumed Exploitation

When LITTLE OLD NEW YORK was shown at the Palace Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., the management of the theatre devised a very attractive street ballyhoo which materially increased the receipts.

Five girls were engaged, clad in the masculine evening clothes worn by Marion Davies as the masquerading Patricia in the photoplay and sent through the streets, with a very tall man who was also dressed in the garb of a century ago. The girls wore high silk hats, and each of them carried a cane.

The group of girls and the man attracted the curiosity of passersby whenever they appeared on the street and a crowd followed them about. That they stimulated attendance at the Palace was witnessed by the crowds that followed them to the theatre and then bought seats.

Paints Usher's Knees

In exploiting PAINTED PEOPLE, the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, pulled a stunt that forced its way into the newspapers, and on the front page of one having a 90,000 circulation. The management selected the prettiest of the girl ushers, and with rouge and lipstick as combined brush and palette a mannikin head was painted on each of her knees. Then the knees and the girl were photographed and the publicity put over. It packed the house.

Special Song Written

A special song number, LILY OF THE ALLEY, is being prepared for publication coincidentally with the release of the photoplay of the same name. The song, with words and music by Grossman and Donaldson, will be placed on popular sale, and the attractive melody and lyrics are expected to aid in securing heavy box office patronage for the film. The cover page is to be illustrated by a well-known artist.

THE "Beau Brummel" press sheet, is a glowing testimonial to the way Warner Brothers have put themselves out to give the screen version of Clyde Fitch's play a fitting accompaniment in lithographs, accessories and advertising material.

Besides being attractively made up, it contains an opulence of practical advertising suggestions and publicity material with driving force. "Dandies of All Days" is the title of a long six-column feature story containing a cut of John Barrymore surrounded by beaux of four different centuries.

Distinction is in every poster and oil painting, Barrymore and Carmel Myers photographing superbly. Both line and half-tone cuts are offered in scene reproductions; this is a departure, only half tones having been offered exhibitors heretofore.

Accessories consist of a stunning 10x16 herald, a "Beau Brummel Minuet" piano solo by Francis Young, published by Carl Fisher, Inc.; a 14x36, and two distinguished window cards. All in all, a precious press sheet for the exhibitor!

LEO G. GARNER, Manager of Columbia Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., reports splendid success attending the big exploitation campaign on the "Drivin' Fool" conducted along the lines laid out in the Hodkinson press book. Mr. Garner says:

"We plastered the town with stickers reading: 'Half the road is yours, stick to it—don't be a DRIVIN' FOOL,' and sniped all the country roads with half sheets: 'Slow up. It is better to be safe than sorry. The DRIVIN' FOOL is at the Columbia Theatre.'

"We co-operated with the City to launch a public safety week, and placed stickers on every automobile reading, 'The driver of this car is safe and sane. The DRIVIN' FOOL is at the Columbia Theatre.' Automobile owners asked for extra stickers. A half block away from the theatre, on the corner of the main street, we put a railroad stop sign close to a banner reading, 'The speediest picture in the world—the DRIVIN' FOOL now,' with a hand pointed toward the theatre.

"We stretched a twenty-five foot banner across our main street reading: 'Public Safety Week. One-half the road is yours, stick to it don't be a DRIVIN' FOOL. Another stunt was tying up with a taxi company, each cab bearing a sign: 'The driver of this cab is safe. The DRIVIN' FOOL is at the Columbia Theatre now.'

THE tremendous popularity in Italy of F. Marion Crawford's novel, "The White Sister," is being used as a factor in the exploitation of the picture in this country. The book is familiar to at least the last two generations in Italy. Thousands of Italians now here look upon the story as one of the great romances of their native land.

Following the example set by the Shubert-Crescent Theatre in Brooklyn when "The White Sister" played there recently, exhibitors are circularizing the Italian population with pamphlets printed in Italian. The results have been highly unusual and profitable. Theatres show-ign "The White Sister" have had their patronage boosted by a big percentage of Italians and the occasion has often been enlivened by their enthusiasm in the European manner. The Italian language papers printed in this country have been enthusiastic in their praise of "The White Sister."

ADVERTISING AIDS

BABY PEGGY is receiving unusual publicity via radio. The Radio Studio of the Los Angeles Examiner (Station KFI) is sending out a "thank you" mailing-card, 5x7 inches, to everyone writing in about radio programs broadcasted from that station. The card carries a small cut of the Examiner Building and a prominent one of the wide-eyed Baby with her ear close to a loud-speaker.

Thousands of these cards are sent out weekly, as KFI reaches all over the United States and Canada. The Baby Peggy photograph was specially made for this purpose by International News with the co-operation of Principal Pictures Corporation, under whose banner Peggy is now hard at work.

UNITED ARTISTS are making a strenuous effort to secure a higher type of poster material to help exhibitors sell their pictures to the public. In line with this policy, Anton Grot, the artist, has been retained to paint posters of Mary Pickford in her next picture, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." The result is a series of really beautiful pictures for this production which cannot help creating a deal of word-of-mouth advertising.

IN the Philadelphia Ledger Dr. Frank Crane stated: "The woman having ten children should have a free ticket for any theatre she chooses to attend." Coincident with the appearance of the editorial, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was showing at the Hamilton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa. Immediately an advertisement appeared in the Lancaster papers in which "conforming with the philosophy of Dr. Crane, and believing with him that the mother of ten children is deserving of signal honors, any such mothers in Lancaster—and their children—are cordially invited to be the guests of the Hamilton Theatre at any time during the engagement of 'The Hunchback.'"

No mother availed herself of the opportunity, but the clever and timely tie-up won front page publicity in all the Lancaster papers.

THE Frank A. Munsey Company has designed and executed an attractive herald on "The Confidence Man," the story by L. Y. Erskine and Bob Davis, now being made into a Paramount picture with Thomas Meighan. The herald, printed in colors, is a reproduction of the cover of Argosy-All-Story Weekly's issue of March 15, in which "The Confidence Man" starts as a serial.

The magazine cover, as reproduced, is adorned with a portrait of Thomas Meighan and announces the story as that of Meighan's next picture. The picture will be released during the appearance of the serial in the Munsey publication.

These heralds are now being distributed in quantities to Paramount exchanges and will be delivered on order to exhibitors free of charge. A blank space is left in the herald for the imprinting of the theatre's name and the date of the picture's engagement.

IN Detroit, the town where they manufacture "those things," many a corpulent seat hog was recently put to much embarrassment by having a fair young thing who was clinging to a car-strap hand him a card reading: "'When a Man's a Man' He Gives His Seat to a Lady." Some did and some didn't, but they all turned the card over and saw that the screen version of Harold Bell Wright's novel would be shown at the Strand Theatre during the week.

BEFORE "The Broken Wing" ever struck Nashville, Tenn., a series of advertisements appeared daily in the Nashville Banner. They all carried a picture of a falling plane with various captions as: "When Will the 'Broken Wing' Land?" Finally the Knickerbocker Theatre, which had been inserting the teasers, announced that the picture would be shown at that playhouse. From the receipts some interest must have been aroused.

STIRRING CUT-OUT OF FIRE AND FLOOD

The Mission Theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, attracted more than the casual attention of passing pedestrians with this poster cut-out depicting an exciting episode in the Vitagraph picture, full of action, adventure and human interest Making Big Money Everywhere!

PRODUCERS are continually advertising coming pictures. On this page we advertise pictures that are here now—the big, gold-medal Paramount Pictures, just released, that are drawing the capacity crowds and making the real money NOW.

Here are pictures on which you take no chances. Every one of them is an acknowledged success. Ask your fellow exhibitor. Read his experience related below.

“TO THE LADIES”

William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., says about this screaming James Cruze comedy hit: “Theodore Roberts is the star. One of his best pictures, and one especially pleasing to the ladies.”

“THE CALL OF THE CANYON”

After playing Zane Grey's “The Call of the Canyon,” with Richard Dix and Lois Wilson, at his Regent Theatre, Bogota, N. J., G. J. Ritter says: “Good all the way and worth while. Will stand up.” This picture gives you a wonderful tie-up with the book, “The Call of the Canyon,” which is the best selling novel in America today.

“WILD BILL HICKOK”

C. L. Brown, Paramount Theatre, Elizabeth, La., enthuses over Bill Hart's “Wild Bill”: “Had the largest crowd ever on Hart, and some say the best he ever made. Plenty of action all the way through.”

“BIG BROTHER”

Here's a picture that's sure cleaning up! For instance, C. F. and H. L. Kriegsbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind.: “Splendid. Play it. Liked by all. Played to a good house. Book it now and exploit it for all you're worth.”

“DON'T CALL IT LOVE”

No De Mille picture has ever made the money this flaming love-drama is getting. “A picture of unusual merit,” says the Philadelphia Bulletin.

“SPEEJACKS”

The greatest travel classic ever made! “As good an entertainment as you want. Hard to beat. Get behind it, for it will please,” says S. B. Johnson, Regent Theatre, Marianna, Ark.

Tried and Proved Pictures

Make Yours a Tried and Proved Theatre

A Whale of an Idea for Establishing Yourself as a Vital Part of The Community And Increasing Business

VARIETY is the spice of life—and the movie business. It's what gives the industry its color and its peculiar fascination. It is the constant battle in every branch to put over something different that keeps the interest at white heat. Originality is the big thing all the way down the line from production to projection. And it's the fellow with the sizzling new idea who cleans up.

What would you give for a brand new idea every few weeks—an idea that centered attention on your theatre, that got the crowds talking, that established your house as a hothouse of energy from which emerged better entertainment? Would you grab at the chance? If you were any kind of a real showman you would.

You know what Tried and Proved Pictures are—pictures that have gone through the audience mill and emerged clean from the acid test; pictures that will stand rebooking and make money in so doing. They've been tried out by the public and they have proved that they can stand up.

When it's boiled down it all comes to this—the term Tried and Proved means something on which you can lean with assurance, a staff you can depend on to carry you through.

Now apply the same term to a theatre and its meaning remains precisely the same—a theatre on which people can depend to get entertainment that will satisfy; a theatre to which they will look as the one which will reflect their tastes in motion pictures and cater to them.

This department recently exploited the idea of a Tried and Proved Night. That is the keynote of making your theatre a Tried and Proved Theatre. On these nights you will book pictures that you know are good, that you know your public wants to see again. Within a very short time you will have built up a regular patronage that will crowd your house on this special night.

But you'll do even more than that. By giving them these pictures and pleasing them you are instilling in them a personal confidence in you. You are making them feel that they can rely on your judgment to pick pictures that will please them. You are establishing a following for yourself among patrons who will stick by you as long as you maintain your high standards; an audience which will unquestioningly wait until you can get the picture it wants even if your competitor runs it several weeks before you.

FROM UNIVERSAL'S 'THE THRILL CHASER,' A SURE WINNER

To build up an audience like that is an accomplishment, but the work doesn't end with getting it. You have to keep it. And you will have to be continually on your toes to do it. You have to virtually keep in personal touch with every individual who has become a regular patron.

In the first place, get their names for a mailing list. This is not difficult to accomplish. Have a regular blank made and each night ask those patrons who have not done so before to fill in the slips. They will all do it willingly.

The object of your theatre is to reflect the public demand. Your policy is to give your patrons the pictures they want. How are you going to find out what they want? The most obvious way is the simplest. Ask them.

You might have a regular form printed which should be mailed out to your patrons at regular intervals. The form should ask what new pictures the recipient wants to see next, and what Tried and Proved Pictures he wants you to book on Tried and Proved Night.

On this blank you might list a few suggestions for the Tried and Proved pictures. Tell them what in your judgment you consider the best and ask them to name their preferences. You will find that you will get almost one hundred per cent replies, especially if the blank is printed on a self addressed post card.

YOUR list will be made up from the pictures contained in the Tried and Proved Box Office Hall of Fame which you will find on the next page of this issue and every succeeding issue, so you don't have to worry about being able to make good on your promise. You are assured of that when you make your selection.

Now you have found out what your audience wants to see, and you book those pictures. Then you boost them. You give them all the publicity and advertising you can.

Can't you just see them jamming into your house? Can't you see them boosting you and your theatre? Why you've actually transferred to them the privilege of selecting the pictures for your theatre. Are they pleased? Why they're yours for life, and your theatre is theirs forever. As far as they are concerned they will be lifelong customers. You have their complete confidence.

They have tried your pictures and they like them; they have tested your judgment and it measures up; they have tried your policy and it's just what they want. You have made yours a Tried and Proved Theatre.

Get the idea? It's a mighty good one, isn't it? Now step on the gas and start working on it right now.

TRIED AND PROVED PICTURES

'Mother O'Mine' Pulling Well

First National's "Mother O'Mine," is now doing the rounds of the small theatres with small town audiences and according to the statements of those exhibitors who are now booking it, it is just the picture for them. It pleases their audiences and brings them results at the box office.

H. H. Binions of the Cozy Theatre, Toledo, Iowa, was very much gratified with the film, his audience finding both the story and the cast very pleasing.

An exceptionally enthusiastic exhibitor is S. G. Ihde of the Photoplay Theatre, Ashland, Kansas. He also caters to a small town patronage but they seemed to fully appreciate this picture. He said:

"This old picture is far above the average of the specials coming on the market lately. I had them sitting on the edge of their chairs when they were making the record drive to save the boy's life. This mother stuff works mighty well if you do not run the type of picture too often. "You won't go wrong by boosting this one."

"Mother O'Mine" is a First National Tried and Proved Picture starring Lloyd Hughes supported by a special cast. It has been the subject of much favorable comment on the part of exhibitors.

'VILLAGE BLACKSMITH' DRAWS FAMILY PATRONAGE

"The Village Blacksmith" is Tried and Proved Fox production. The story is a picturization of Longfellow's poem of the same name and is very well done. When the picture was first made it was greeted by a shower of favorable criticism and the same good opinion persists even though hundreds of other good pictures have come on the market. It took well in the big cities, and it is meeting with the same success in the small towns.

What makes it particularly adaptable to small towns is the fact that it is an equally interesting and suitable picture for children and adults. It is a real family attraction and as such is being well received everywhere. Exhibitors note that after the showing patrons stop to tell them how they enjoyed it and how satisfying it is in every detail.

Apparently it supplied them with a necessary amount of thrills, good acting and understanding story and impressed them as a good, clean story to which they would enjoy taking their children, for the showmen who have booked it recently report it a one hundred per cent picture.

ANITA STEWART ATTRACTIVE IN 'THE LOVE PIKER'

When an exhibitor says that he believes the picture he has just run will please any audience, you can take his word for it that he knows and is basing his judgment on the fact that the film went over big with him. Goldwyn's "The Love Piker" with Anita Stewart recently played at the Cozy Theatre in Checotah, Okla., and D. A. White had this to say about it.

"This is a very good story and pleased about ninety per cent. Miss Stewart is very good in this as in all her pictures. She doesn't pose a lot like some stars. I believe that the picture will please most any audience."

Other exhibitors expressed very much the same opinion about the picture and one ventured to say that he felt that possibly one reason for the lively interest in this was the fact that Anita Stewart's name had recently been brought to the public attention by her special work in "The Great White Way," which is now playing the first run houses.

SYMPATHETIC AUDIENCE AT 'THE KINGDOM WITHIN'

High entertainment value is largely responsible for the continued popularity of Hodkinson's "Kingdom Within." Gaston Glass as the crippled boy gives a sympathetic performance which is still so simple that it gets right to the hearts of all audiences. It is particularly the sort of thing that is liked in small towns or in neighborhood houses and reports from this class of exhibitors show that it isn't missing the mark.

The picture was shown recently in Elgin, Neb., and did very well from a box office point of view. The audience was much pleased with the story and the acting and the result was that the picture was well patronized during its run.

When Ernest Torrence who plays one of the leads in this film first appeared in it, he was not so well known as he is now. His more recent roles have called him into prominence and he has a large following which will enjoy all his pictures. Exhibitors can cash in on this increased following by re-booking his old pictures which they may not yet have seen.

Mary Minter Picture Big Drawing Card

Mary Miles Minter has not made any new pictures in a long time, and the fact that patrons are anxious to see her old ones in lieu of this is its own testimonial of the star's popularity.

It is therefore quite natural that one exhibitor commenting recently on "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," a Paramount production, should wonder why she has stopped making pictures and should advise her to resume since she has an established following and there is persistent demand to see her again.

In the meantime this Tried and Proved Picture is doing unusual business. When a picture can clean up on a two nights run, both nights being unusually bad weather, nothing further has to be said about it. And this is precisely the case with "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Another unusual feature is that several exhibitors expressed the opinion that although the picture is classified as a program picture it did more for them in the way of making money and pleasing the audiences than some of the specials which they have booked from the same company.

One exhibitor even goes so far as to say that small towns are assured of a largely increased patronage when showing this picture. That is a pretty emphatic statement and he must certainly have been pleased with his results to make such a remark. Yet this seems to be the general impression and is certainly worth some consideration.

'QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER' PULLS BIG AT BOX OFFICE

When an exhibitor books a picture and is satisfied with it he should want everyone to know it. Still that is not always true. Some showmen take it merely as a matter of course and scorn to grow enthusiastic. Exhibitor White of Checotah, Okla., cannot, however, be classified with this latter group. When a picture pulls well for him, he wants everyone to know it and he takes occasion to write about it where it will get the most notice.

Recently he ran "Quincy Adams Sawyer," a Tried and Proved Metro picture, and this is his candid opinion of it:

"Here is a one hundred per cent picture. If you have not played it, don't wait any longer. Wire Metro and show your patrons just what it is. You owe it to your house. It is a good story with good moral tone. We only had one kick and he would kick if he was playing football."

Mr. White is not, however, the only man who was pleased with the results pulled for him by "Quincy Adams Sawyer." Others are of the same opinion—that it is the sort of a picture that will go well anywhere and will repay well for its booking.

A number of exhibitors have also found that the picture has a strong appeal to children and have made special effort to attract them. Special performances devoted to them and well aimed exploitation stunts which are designed to enlist their patronage have been tried in a number of houses with the result that the children have patronized the picture and have then spread interest to the adults by their interesting accounts of its worth.

Heart of Wetona Book- ed as Tried and Proved

"Here's a knockout if handled right. Played it third run and after it had played in a five and ten cent house, to more business and more satisfied patrons than a lot of the newer features. Also, it was run on Monday and Tuesday. I told my people that it was an old one and that it was one of the pictures that had made this star."

Here is a live showman who is booking Tried and Proved Pictures, advertising them as such and making new friends and real money with them. "The Heart of Wetona" is an old Selznick picture starring Norma Talmadge and marks one of her earliest successes.

Here is an exhibitor who realized the possibilities in the feature and despite its age and the fact that it had run in other houses in the town at very low prices, he booked it, featured it, spoke of its merits that he knew it held, and put it across with his audience.

This only proves further the contention that the age of a picture in no way affects its scope. If it is good the public wants to see it no matter when it was made, and any exhibitor who books such a picture and then gets behind it and lets the public know when and why he is running it, will probably do extremely well with it.

PATRONS LIKE AGNES AYRES IN 'THE HEART RAIDER'

The general consensus of opinion seems to be that Paramount's "The Heart Raider," starring Agnes Ayres very snugly fits its designated place among program pictures. The smaller exhibitors who are now booking the film find that it completely satisfies their audiences and gives ample satisfaction at the box office.

The story is light and appealing and gives the star many opportunities to do some convincing acting and to look well in clothes that especially become her. This is very important in pictures that appeal to small town audiences and neighborhood houses and is probably the reason why this one hits the bulls-eye squarely. There is nothing pretentious about the picture but its very simplicity carries it across. It is one of Paramount's sure bet Tried and Proved Pictures.

GLADYS WALTON IS POPULAR STAR IN SMALL TOWNS

Gladys Walton is a very popular star with a great many small town audiences and when one of her pictures is shown all her followers flock to see her. Recently "The Near Lady" was booked by the Auditorium in Plattsburg, New York, and at the Community in David City, Neb. At both places the Universal feature did exceptional business.

The picture is light, and highly entertaining and so it is small wonder that it took well where there are plenty of Walton admirers. Here are two reports which show precisely what the exhibitors think of the picture.

A. F. Jenkins said: "This picture is good light entertainment. It made them laugh and that's what they want. This star is very popular here and the comments on the picture from my patrons were very good."

H. C. Lee wrote: "Here is a dandy good picture. Gladys Walton takes very well here but we can't get her pictures very often."

The growing popularity of the star is largely responsible for this lively interest in her old pictures.

'POOR MEN'S WIVES' IS GOOD PROGRAM ATTRACTION

"Poor Men's Wives," a Preferred picture that has entered the Tried and Proved class came in for a share of some special boosting from W. A. Clark of the Castle Theatre, Havana, Ill. Clarke ran the picture and was delighted with the results. Here's what he had to say about it when he wrote to tell of his success with the film.

"This picture sure did draw here. Although not a big special it pleased nevertheless. It is a fair story with good acting by the whole cast."

Other exhibitors have found that as a program picture it does full justice and is well worth booking by smaller houses with general patronage.

'Her Only Way'

Marriage Drama Released by Selznick

BRIEF: Lucille marries a wealthy but unscrupulous man in order to save her father's estate. The marriage proves very unsuccessful and her husband plans to frame her and the man she had wanted to marry in order to get a divorce. After the trial in court she returns home and shoots her husband and kills herself. The noise of the revolver awakens her and she finds it is all a dream.

HERE is a good story. Apparently it is a tragedy but the fact that the entire action has been merely a dream allows for the happy ending which sends the audiences home happy. But before the conclusion is reached the audience is allowed to enjoy many minutes of tense suspense, a variety of thrills and some stirring romance.

That is one reason why the picture was so popular when it was first shown and is still capable of drawing large audiences. The other and even bigger reason is that it features Norma Talmadge co-starred with Eugene O'Brien. Norma Talmadge has been making a great many new pictures with the result that there has been a renewed interest in her. Her popularity has taken a tremendous leap forward, her audiences are becoming daily bigger and stronger.

The wise showman will now ride along on this wave of Norma Talmadge popularity. He will take this opportunity for rebooking some of her old pictures and he will find that they are very successful. This one is said to be one of her best and so it might profitably be booked by the wise exhibitor.

It is also a picture which lends itself readily to novel exploitation stunts. The title is easily adapted to almost any sort of tie-up. It is particularly good for drug stores and shops selling toilet articles, perfumes, etc. A window display should be arranged featuring a special brand of beauty cream, soap, or cosmetic and with it should appear a card reading: "If she wants to keep her skin pretty this is 'Her Only Way.' Announcement of the name and date of showing of the film should also accompany it together with stills of the star which will help convey the impression that she uses these products.

A vital point in the story is developed through the stalling of an automobile on a country road. This should provide a valuable tie-up for some automobile agency in the vicinity. In their show windows they might place pictures showing the couple seated in the car looking very distressed. A very prominent sign might read: They never would have stalled like this if they had been driving in a..... (name of car).

You might also arrange to have some small boys walking near the store handing out announcements of the showing.

THE MODERN THEATRE

THE REMODELED FENWAY THEATRE OF BOSTON

Remodeling Produces Magic Effect

Fenway of Boston Looks Better Than New

ONE of the most striking examples of theatre remodeling and renovation that has ever been seen in the New England territory was that which took place coincident with the acquisition of the Fenway in Boston by Paramount as their key city house here. Located out on Massachusetts Avenue, a district fast becoming the center of the city's night life, it had long been a popular house; some months before the change becoming a first run house.

The house was closed down for some weeks when Paramount got it, and a small army of men went to work at it. The job was put in the hands of Lehan and Weiss, contractors of Cambridge, Mass. The stage of the house was not fitted at all as stages go today, and complete modern fittings were installed, together with a modern system of stage lighting effects. During the work here, the screen which had been used in the theatre was irreparably damaged, and a new Raven screen was installed.

From the back to the very front of the house, the work of building and installing a huge name sign and a marquee was placed in the hands of the Norton Sign Company. They put in a very striking and artistic marquee with panels at sides and ends for current production announcement, all surrounded with flashers, and from the middle of this ran up a vertical sign also bordered with flasher attachment, for nearly the entire four stories of the building. It has become one of the outstanding features of the avenue at night, the more so that later a myriad of frosted globes were put in all over the under side of the marquee with flood lights at every corner.

Up in the operating room little change was found necessary, the two Motiograph projectors there being in excellent condition after a year of service. The lenses were changed from 7½ to 8 inches in diameter, and new spots were put in, to be in keeping with the other house lighting effects.

In the body of the house little change was necessary in equipment, though all seats were taken up in the process of renovation. Any changes and additional seats were left in the hands of the American Seating Company. Furniture needed came from the Paine Furniture Company of Boston, the draperies, hangings and rugs coming from the R. H. White Company. Speaking of rugs, the carpeting of the new Fenway is well worthy of description. Instead of the usual strips down aisles and between seats, a thick pile of carpet was laid on the entire auditorium, mezzanine, and foyer floors before the seats were put down. The result was a luxuriousness underfoot well in keeping with the result sought for and attained throughout the house.

We have been told to keep the best for the last, and in this case are following out our instructions. This best was the work of redecoration undertaken by Ulrich of New York City, who also had the same job at the Cosmopolitan Theatre in that city. To those who had known the Fenway in its old days the effect wrought in the auditorium was little short of amazing.

The auditorium was of the older type of

THE ALBERTINA RASCH ALL AMERICAN BALLET

Successful Hippodrome Dance Presentation Good Model for Prologue

Exhibitors Service Bureau for Prologues and Presentations Will Co-operate With Showmen

THE Hippodrome of New York has been noted for many things. Its fame as a show place has veritably reached the shores of countries too small to be seen on ordinary maps. Celebrated clowns, animals with almost human intelligence, ice-skaters from the far north, ballet dancers from the royal courts of powerful potentates have all done their share to make the Hippodrome an institution which is a household term in the various nooks, crannies and hamlets of this country and others.

Now the Hippodrome is noted for its change of personality. We speak of its adoption by the Keith interests as a super-vaudeville house. One that purports to stand as the acme of perfection in the presentation of the variety show. This assertion brings us to the picture shown at the top of this page.

Coincident with the policy of the house to present nothing but the highest class in entertainment the Hippodrome has engaged the celebrated Albertina Rasch dancers—in this case known as the All American Ballet—who nightly send audiences into rapturous thrills with their grace, their vivacious charm and skillful performance.

It is not merely to pay well deserved homage that mention of this All American Ballet is made here. Of urgent moment is the fact that the Albertina Rasch Studios Inc., which presents this artistic number, comprises what is practically an Exhibitors Service Bureau, in which the requirements of motion picture exhibitors are met, in so far as furnishing material for prologue and presentations is concerned.

Marionette numbers, with figures simulating grotesque humans gyrating in mid air on elastic strings; tableaux in which tie-ups are effected with local gown shops and costume stores; pageants, with local talent in it to stimulate community interest and good will toward the house, are some of the many forms the Rasch Studios employ in putting over a show.

Miss Rasch herself needs very little identification in these columns. She has been known for years as a celebrated dancer on both continents and carries into her work as supervisor and teacher all the natural and expert knowledge of the professional. Albertina Rasch Studios, Inc., is the result of what the pertinent needs are in the dance world and in motion picture theatre presentations. Leo De Valery, the general manager of the corporation, is a showman of wide experience and training. He knows not only what the public wants, but how to mold a program to a theatre and make it pay.

The Rasch Studios invite all exhibitors interested in the service it renders to clients to send inquiries to the New York address, at 344 West 72nd Street.

ATMOSPHERIC PROLOGUE ON 'THE MARRIAGE CIRCLE'

A particularly charming and interesting prologue was presented last week by Manager Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre, with the Warner Brothers Classic, "The Marriage Circle."

Eight dancers, nine singers and three instrumentalists were used. The number was programmed as Viennese Impressions, opening with "The Old Refrain" sung by the Mark Strand Ensemble. This was followed by "Paradise," an instrumental number by the Viennese Trio—violin, cello and accordion. "Vienna Beauties" was a dance number by eight girls. The presentation closed with "Auf Wiedersehn," sung by the ensemble with interpolated dances.

Mr. Hyman used as a setting the exterior piazza of a fashionable country home, showing a set consisting of a house, two trees and some rustic furniture, with vines twining through arbors on each side. The numbers were specially arranged and orchestrated. Mr. Hyman worked out a special color lighting harmony. This prologue lasted ten minutes.

NEVER HAD A MANUSCRIPT TURNED DOWN

"Why should we take the promises, tomorrow may not pay; when we can have the happiness that crowds our lives today?" quoted Mrs. Joseph Ball—or Jessie L. Deppen, the name she is better known by.

When told the lines were quite charming and asked whether she had written them, she replied, "No, but I almost feel as if I had made them mine. They are the keynote of a lyric by George Graff, Jr., from which I made my song "In the Garden of To-morrow" which Chappell-Harms, Inc., have just issued."

Some of Jessie Deppen's best known works include "Eleanor," published as a vocal and instrumental number; "Japanese Sunset," a big concert number; "Joli Bleu," published by Carl Fischer, Inc., for piano and for violin.

SPEEDING UP THE WAITING BOX OFFICE LINE

By Yeckim

A LONG-FELT want for a coin changing machine that is speedy, accurate and durable is filled by the Brandt Universo—a coin changing machine manufactured by the Brandt Automatic Cashier Company of Watertown, Wisconsin.

Exhibitors universally agree that a coin changing machine is an absolute necessity in any busy box office for it enables the cashier to handle a greater number of transactions within a given time and insures accuracy in these transactions. The waiting line of patrons is enabled to have access to the theatre more quickly and is not compelled to wait in line while patrons ahead are being served by the old-fashioned head and hand method. Rapid service means that all patrons in the line enter your theatre and do not become disgusted and move on to another playhouse.

Another point of universal agreement is the fact that cash shortages where they occur are almost invariably in the fractional coin. By installing a machine like the one above illustrated the theatre owner need not worry about these petty losses which eat into his profits for he has the assurance that each transaction is mechanically correct and he knows that the saving in time permits the cashier a closer contact with his patrons and an opportunity for recognizing and speaking to the ones who are habitual attenders.

The Brandt Universo may be secured for either right or left hand delivery and is equipped with an aluminum delivery chute which permits an adjustment through an arc of 180 degrees, enabling the machine to be placed at any advantageous angle for the operator. An auxiliary coin tray may be secured, if desired, which attaches to the top of the regular tray and holds the surplus stock of coins. The machine may be secured for free trial without obligation or expense by writing direct to the manufacturers. Terms can be arranged to suit the convenience of the purchaser.

NEW THEATRE FOR DENVER

Denver, Colo., is to have an innovation in motion picture theatres. The theatre known as the Highlands Garden, at West Thirty-second Avenue and Zuni Street, has been leased by a company headed by Bidwell McCormack, and is being converted into what will be known as an art motion picture theatre.

The program will be one picture a week, instead of the usual several changes, thus giving the patrons only the very best films obtainable.

LABORATORY COMBINATION

TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY:

It is my pleasure to announce an important combination, which has existed for some time, viz., the combination of a finely equipped plant and exceptional service to our customers, with greatest technical knowledge which has been effected by CLAREMONT LABORATORIES, Inc.

It is this combination which has enabled us to produce UNEXCELLED QUALITY, as demonstrated in the releases we have printed, including Mary Pickford in "Lord Fauntleroy," "Tess of the Storm Country" and "Rosita," and Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," Elliot Dexter in "By Divine Right," the Whitman Bennett production, "The Leavenworth Case," as well as scores of other big productions.

We have not sacrificed quality for cheapness; we do not evade tinting and toning, and we do not use developing machines. The price of raw stock is now so low, and the standard price for printing so cheap that producers should not encourage a cheaper product at the sacrifice of quality.

While it costs more to handle every foot of film individually and not by machine, we only charge the standard price for printing. Our profits may be less, but our satisfaction is the fact that we are recognized as AMERICA'S PREMIER LABORATORY.

We are now making prints on Douglas Fairbanks' latest achievement, acclaimed as the world's greatest motion picture in cost and magnificence, and requiring the utmost in photographic science to do justice to it, namely, continue. But another call came. This one was even more insistent than the others, and was to join B. W. Traggart of Boston in raising New England's quota of the $185,000,000 national Red Cross fund. That job was successfully accomplished.

Then, in the summer of 1918, when the war was at its height, Mr. Munroe was called to Washington. In spite of the herculean efforts of the Red Cross the scarcity of nurses in France was causing worry. The War Department determined to institute a world survey of all the nursing material available.

It was to make this survey that Mr. Munroe went to Washington, expecting to remain three or four months. Actually he remained three years, taking into account the time he afterward devoted to work in Europe.

The task involved the tabulating of 150 details developed individually in questionnaires returned from 300,000 women. A staff of fifty clerks was required to handle the vast volume of work. In August of 1918 Mr. Munroe was asked to remain as assistant to General Manager George Scott of the National Red Cross.

On March 1 of the following year Mr. Munroe was requested by the organization to become its general manager, which position he occupied until January of 1921.

Before finally retiring from his organization work, however, he was asked to proceed to Europe and facilitate the retirement of the American Red Cross.

This assignment also was accepted and for several months Mr. Munroe traveled all over the Continent, or at least over Austria, Germany, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

He was extensively entertained by the rulers of these countries, in Prague an elaborate state function being given in honor of the delegate of the Red Cross.

On his return to Washington Mr. Munroe formally retired from the Red Cross. Then, expecting to take a rest before entering business, out of the clear sky came a request to take the position of vice-president and general manager of the Hodkinson Company, with charge of operation.

On the first of the present year Mr. Munroe was elected president of the company. For three months he has been busy with his enlarged staff getting new material for the coming year. That work practically has been accomplished, and in the next six weeks the details will be announced.

with money. He must make up for his lack of financial resources by a liberal use of his own ingenuity and the experience of others. He can dress up his lobby to attract and give the atmosphere of the picture, by doing a little carpentry work and spending a few dollars. The lobby cards are always good.

There is one other source of inspiration to the showman on Main Street, and that is the trade press. With pictures and story, he is shown every week just how a fellow exhibitor put over a picture, and it is a comparatively easy matter for him to adapt such a plan to his own requirements.

motion picture house, long and narrow, and from the orchestra rear had much the appearance of a subway with a picture at the end. By carrying out a color scheme of silver grey with dark trimmings through the entire interior with the exception of that portion in the neighborhood of the proscenium, which was finished in dark shades with dark hangings, a remarkable effect of foreshortening was achieved. The stage seemed to jump forward about 20 feet, while the auditorium broadened out in similar proportion. A glance at the auditorium photograph will show that the effect still persisted to the camera's eye.

Indian Frontier Series

The white boy who became an Indian

Each Indian Frontier Series picture has a story that surely gets you and that is absolutely true.

For instance, you see how and why a white boy became an Indian chief,—and you see the man himself in the picture. Can't you imagine how such a story will appeal to your audiences?

The real Indians themselves enact their own stories. You have color, realism, educational value, thrill.

Look over these titles; just see the audience appeal: "The Man Who Would Not Die"; "The Man Who Smiled"; "The White Man Who Turned Indian"; "The Mandan's Oath"; "The Dirty Little Half-Breed"; "The Medicine Hat."

Each picture is a perfect little feature in itself.

Are you wondering why we persist in using an unusual title like chechahco?

Couldn't we have found something simpler?

Certainly we could. We might have named the picture "The Gold Rush" or "The Birth of Alaska," or what-not, but these would have classified it as an ordinary movie. And that's just what this picture isn't.

WARNER BROS.
Classics of the Screen

NATURAL

"Time may eventually wipe out the memory of John Barrymore as the young Captain George Brummel, but we intend to have an awfully good time thinking about it before that happens. It doesn't seem fair to the other young fellows on the screen like Rudolph Valentino, Ramon Navarro and Dick Barthelmess, who are doing the best they can and trying to get along, that John Barrymore should be allowed to compete. 'Peter Ibbetson' is the only other love story we know which is so beautiful, and we enjoyed 'Beau Brummel' much more. It is beautifully produced and is played by a cast that is perfect. Long live Warner Brothers!"

—Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Herald.

"I want to commend Warner Brothers for the worthy ambition that induced them to bring a fine play like 'Beau Brummel' to the screen. That they have given their best to the making of this classic there can be no doubt and that John Barrymore is an inspired choice, no one will dispute. 'Beau Brummel' is a credit to the house of Warner."

—Louella O. Parsons, N. Y. American.

"Barrymore has given to the screen a picture worthy to stand at the side of the classic Richard Mansfield gave to the stage. . . . He has made a picture which must survive as one of the splendid achievements of silent drama. An unusually large audience came for the first presentation at 12:35. By 2 o'clock there was not a seat left."

—Thos. B. Hanley, N. Y. Telegraph.

"A large audience attended the first showing of 'Beau Brummel' at the Strand yesterday and found that it was one of the most enjoyable pictures of the season. It also found that John Barrymore had by his wholly delightful performance as the famous Beau become the screen's most capable actor. Don't miss 'Beau Brummel' if you want to keep up with the best in movies."

—N. Y. Evening Sun.

"One of those artistic celluloid efforts that come along none too frequently. John Barrymore delivers a performance that is a delight to the eye. . . . A stirring picture, not merely for the 'upper ten,' but also for O. Henry's four million and several other millions."

—F. W. M. Hall, N. Y. Times.

"Devastating is the proper word for Mr. Barrymore's 'Beau Brummel.' Think, if you can, of any actor who could do this role better justice. I cannot. It is a polished and flawless performance. You'll be quite right to put your money on 'Beau Brummel.'" —McELLIOTT, N. Y. Daily News.

"The most fascinating motion picture play of the year, a veritable screen comedy of manners, and of morals, too. Mr. Barrymore wins new laurels as the audacious Beau Brummel."

WHAT'S IN THE AIR

STAND BY for this week's Special T. N. T. Program, A sizzling, sparkling "air-ful" on the great revel of revels.

Reveling played a great part in last Saturday's amazing affair. But there were other important elements, pleasurable in essence, and profoundly serious in import to showmen.

For this reason Exhibitors Trade Review had its faithful band of representatives, armed with the pens of the mighty, getting a first-hand grip on the 92 karat truths which emanated from the minds of men whose names are household words on almost every continent in the world.

It was the great occasion for the Naked Truth. Sponsored by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, an organization of irrepressibles who help sell your pictures to the public.

The memory of this affair still filters through our mind with the cordial reminiscent effect of aged, mellow wine. The words of Arthur Brisbane, of D. W. Griffith, of Rupert Hughes, "Roxy" Rothafel, Dr. Giannini, and others continue to electrify, inspire, and thrill us like truths sent down from Heaven.

Keep in mind the importance of getting the truth—the naked truth. Men have died for it. Institutions have established themselves on it. Thrones have fallen on its account. The Review has left no stone unturned to give it you in its entirety.

STAND BY for next week's Special Tried and Proved Number. Something to which the whole motion picture industry looks forward with interest. The only thing of its kind in the industry, fathered and developed by the Review.

If you have any regard for your position in the showmanship world, you'll polish up a new pair of goggles for a close-up of the complete contents of this Special Tried and Proved Number. Out next week. Don't miss it.

Trade REVIEW

The Business Paper of the Motion Picture Industry

Eastern Filmdom Takes a Night Off

EVERY industry is entitled to a day off once a year. That of the motion picture selected Saturday, March 29, as its holiday so far as the territory centering about New York is concerned. Those who were present at the Hotel Astor on the evening of that day will agree that the motion picture men and women cut loose on that occasion.

They did not forget business. Rather they satirized it, on the principle that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. Nevertheless there were serious moments, which were emphasized in the speeches of several men, among these being those of Messrs. Griffith and Hays.

Through the tie-up with the Film Clubs of the country for simultaneous gatherings in many exchange cities and by reason of the fact that the speeches were broadcasted the fourth annual celebration of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers took on the size of a function of national rather than sectional interest.

It is from this point of view among others that EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW this week devotes considerable space to telling the story of what occurred at the "party."

We believe that exhibitors throughout the country will be interested in the sayings of these men of national prominence in the trade and out of it as well as in a brief recital of the stunts that were put on for the entertainment of the guests, of which there were a full thousand, the number being limited by a rigid rule and strictly adhered to.

IN attendance were practically all of the producing and distributing executives in the East and a goodly number of directors and players. The rank and file were on parade, a battalion of them. Present, too, were noted a number of exhibitors.

The stated purpose of the dinner was to give circulation to the Naked Truth about the industry. Will H. Hays accepted the challenge and declared there is no finer, more earnest, more sincere and more striving group of men and women engaged in any business in the world.

It was to a showman the Associated Advertisers turned for a toastmaster of the evening—Samuel Rothafel, one whose voice is familiar on the air.

It was a strong array of speakers on whom he called in the course of a program composed of short talks. "Bedtime Stories" they were to be as we were told in advance.

ONE of these and one of the most effective and one more nearly approaching the bedtime category was that of David W. Griffith, who in his fine and bell-like voice spoke of his mother—in those days he called her "Maw," a way they have down South, he explained—and told of how with childish inquisitiveness he made her weary with his uncounted questions.

It was a fine touch and told with touching fineness and must have gone to the hearts of the men as well as to those of the women.

So as the industry has its play dates every day it is well to have a play day once in the year. That the sponsors for the celebration of March 29 in large measure are ranked perhaps rather as necessary than as "important" executives gave the occasion all the more of a democratic interest.

The advertising director of today is the sales manager of tomorrow—and among the duties of the latter is knowledge of how to entertain. The advertising men have demonstrated that already they are qualified for that phase of the next step on the ladder.

Beauty and Brains of Censored Celluloid Gather at T N T Revel

Press Agents Spring Surprise by Fulfilling Promises

THERE were just about one thousand more motor vehicles than usual trying to manœuvre into strategic positions at the three entrances of Hotel Astor last Saturday night around six bells for the "fourth annual" of the A. M. P. A. Six bells is the way a sailor says seven o'clock. The term is used here to indicate right off the reel there was a rough sea ahead.

There were the stately limousines of stars manned by uniformed lackeys, the no less opulent cars of famous producers and directors, machines slightly less aristocratic for those frugal ones who prefer to carry their excess profits in eight per cent bonds or first mortgages. There were "Baby Lincolns" for the poor publicity men who struggle along on paltry stipends scarce exceeding Mr. Coolidge's salary, and a crawling mass of taxis scurrying in and out like so many black and yellow potato bugs.

These had been commandeered by the alleged gentry of the press, poor but proud, so that they might drive from the nearest subway exit and arrive in style at the scene of the big doings. Everything in New York knew it was Naked Truth night except the meters on those cabs. As some wise-cracker once said: "The truth is not in them."

The Grand Ball Room

All one had to do was to loiter in the lobby of the Astor, and traffic

T. N. T. DAVID W. GRIFFITH

The Master Builder thrilled his audience in a flight of dramatic oratory which proved that the "speakers" lost a great actor when pictures won him

T. N. T. WILL HAYS

The Chief told some encouraging Naked Truths regarding the future of the Motion Picture Industry over which he waxed enthusiastic would sweep him along down the corridor marked "Grand Ball Room" to the prologue of the T. N. T. show. One spacious room had been designated as the place in which to cast ballots for the King and Queen of Flimdumb. It was lined with large posters of prominent players drawn by real artists.

We paused to cast our vote for any two of the three chimpanzees that do all the monkey business in the two-reelers. The fellow ahead was already casting his third vote for "Johnnie Walker," who, he declared, was going strong. This chap got sore because they wouldn't let him vote for both the Haig boys for Queen.

Then the mellow music of a great gong intoned the glad tidings that the banquet was prepared, and the beauty and chivalry of the motion picture industry filed in for food. The Grand Ball Room of the Astor might well be a prince's playground. A lofty room flanked on three sides with galleries and boxes, gold incrustated and ornamented with immense shimmering chandeliers. At one end a stage, and at one side, on a raised platform, the speakers' table. More than a hundred tables filled the floor. Each, its complement of flowers, lilylike linen, sparkling silver service.

"Special Wuxtry!"

In addition to the Bulletin, a program of the Fourth Naked Truth Revel, there was at each place a copy of a sheet newly arrived in the field of motion picture publication. It was announced as an "Extraordinary Editorial Excursion of Expert Expression Emanating Entirely from the Six Wise Men of the East." In other words it was a combination of the journalistic brains of the industry all under one top. George Blaisdell was Financial Editor; Bob Welsh took care of the sporting columns; Martin Quigley had "Drammer" at his mercy; Joe Dannenberg wrote with much edification on "Women"; Tom Hanly handled "News," and Bill Johnson went to the mat with "Ballyhoo." Bill Yearsley was billed as "Wet Nurse," and Jack Alicoate gave conclusive evidence of his misspent youth as "Profanity Editor."

Pictures of the editors and other celebrities crowded the paper, but unfortunately the printer had sadly scrambled the cuts and captions so that Vic Shapiro was labelled Sam Goldwyn, William C. De Mille was Charles Chaplin, and other big names appeared below cuts of Hollywood's best known gag men. This idea was good for many a laugh, and the wise cracks and nifties that appeared on every page had the readers chuckling.

The Guests

The speakers' table: Centre stage—our own Will Hays, smiling proudly on the crowd, as a fond father on a favorite child; David W. Griffith, the great story-builder, six feet of distinction; the keen alertness of Dr. A. H.

T. N. T. SAMUEL ROTHAFEL

Alias "Roxy" who, like Britannia, ruled the waves—the air waves of the radio over which Naked Truths were broadcasted to a scattered mighty audience

T. N. T. GLENDON ALLVINE

Paramount's member of the A. M. P. A. Naked Truth Committee, who was partially responsible for the unusual performance of press agents' promises

Giannini, the banker and financial physician extraordinary to the industry; Victor Shapiro, president of the A. M. P. A., whose brilliance entitled him to a place in this company despite his almost boyish appearance; A. M. Botsford, he of the pleasing personality, the piercing eyes and the silver tongue; the greatest editor in all the world, Arthur Brisbane, who writes each day for almost fourscore newspapers read by some twelve or fifteen millions of people; Rupert Hughes, the author, reflecting in his face the flashing wit with which he entertains nations; Samuel Rothafel, the kindly showman, who is in danger of losing his name and becoming celebrated simply as "Roxy."

There was one vacant chair. It was for Mae Murray, who exercised her prerogative of coming late. But when "Marvellous Mae" did come she was well worth waiting for.

Before each place at the speakers' table was the microphone through which the Bedtime Stories were broadcasted, and over the table was a traffic signal arrangement of red, white and green lights. The red light meant "Stop," and it was flashed when the speaker consumed the five minutes allowed for self-expression.

Spotlighting Personalities

Paul Whiteman's orchestra played, and the party was on. There were hosts of good things to eat. The "carte du nuit," which we are advised is French for "menu," was printed in that language. Our knowledge is limited to the signs we used to see about "chevaux ou hommes" on the French box-cars, so we don't know just what it was all about. But the food was fine.

From the balcony above, a spot-light played about the room, pausing for a moment to illuminate the features of "Glorious Gloria" Swanson, "Beautiful Bebe" Daniels, "Charming Carol" Dempster, "Daring Dagmar" Godowsky, "Sweet Seena" Owen, the dashing Italian heartbreaker, Mimi Palmeri, Jean Tolley, the most photographed girl in the world, and others, no less famous or beautiful. The "spot" caught Senator Jimmie Walker with a bottle of White Rock in one hand. He received an ovation—and blushed like a boy. Harry Houdini, the wizard, took his bow. So did Raoul Walsh, Richard Dix, Ernest Torrence, Hugo Riesenfeld and Eddie Polo. The light might have stopped anywhere at any of the hundred tables and shown the features of some celebrity. The whole world was there.

Bedtime Stories

Coffee-cigars-cigarettes, and everyone settled back to listen to Vic Shapiro speak about what the program called "Usual Opening Hokum." He spoke well, and set a good example by completing his remarks just as the "Stop" signal flashed over his head.

Sam Rothafel was next. The program read "Roxy takes the Air." As a matter of fact the air took "Roxy," for his remarks, and those of every other speaker, were heard by hundreds of thousands via radio.

David W. Griffith, proved himself as fine an actor as he is a director. His impressive presence, his finely modulated voice and his dramatic address penetrated the armor of his sophisticated audience, and played upon its heartstrings. He was thrilling.

Arthur Brisbane spoke as he writes—clearly, concisely, with many refer-

T. N. T. ARTHUR BRILANT

Pathe's energetic treasurer of the A. M. P. A. who was still busy counting up a record house long after his usual breakfast time Sunday morning ences to the classics, the worth-while things of life. His remarks were truly words of wisdom, food for thought for many hours.

Dr. Giannini spoke of the financial aspect of the industry, a subject which he is eminently qualified to discuss. He complained that the industry seemed willing to allow him only five minutes of its time, whereas he was always willing to place a much larger quantity of that valuable commodity at the disposal of the members. The Doctor crowded a wealth of information into his allotted time, and also spoke some naked truths about those in the business known as "excess bonus hounds."

Mae Murray's Bedtime Story was brief, but marvellously effective. Mae arose in all her glory and speeded her message straight and true. Not the least fascinating thing about her speech was the kiss she blew from her slender fingers at its termination. That kiss came right in our direction too. It had a personal touch, so to speak.

A. M. Botsford ran true to form and did just what was expected of him. He is one of the most scintillating speakers in the industry. Striking a light note he carried his hearers with him, and round after round of laughter and applause were radioed to listeners-in from Hell Gate to the Golden Gate.

Rupert Hughes was fine. His ready wit made of his speech a thing of joy. For five minutes he poked fun at both hosts and guests, and also "kidded" himself mercilessly.

Then came Will Hays; the man with the slight body and the sturdy brain, who is devoting his energy to the interests of the industry. He could have spoken interestingly for a longer period, but no favorites were played, and he had to curb the quantity, but not the quality, of his enthusiasm to conform with the five minute "wave lengths."

'Passionate Italians'

Now the boxes and galleries were filled, and the A. M. P. A. presented "Passionate Italians," adapted from some play called "Romeo and Juliet" by a fellow named William Shakespeare. One could see that the original skit may have had some small merit, but the play-doctors, Morris Ryskind and Ernest Torrence, had fixed it up to make a sure-fire hit. Young Shakespeare would do well to submit some more stuff, although it will be a long time before he is in the Harold Bell Wright class.

The cast: Juliet, Bebe Daniels; Romeo, Richard Dix; Friar Laurence, Ernest Torrence. There were four episodes. The first was "As the Author Wrote It," followed by "As the Producer Filmed It," "As the Press Agent Saw It" and "As the Censor Finished It." Needless to say the final scene showed the act entirely robbed of its "punch."

The 'Flim' Is Released

Then came the A. M. P. A. "Newsance Reel." Some of the titles read: "This Reel Passed and Censored by Will Hays," "Like Hell It Was!" "Rowland Picks New Star With Most Beautiful Eyes in World," "Press Agents Who Worked for Hearst Last Year Hold Meeting," "Complete Cast of Black Oxen," "The Fiery Pola Arrives," "A group of Hollywood Camilles," "Heads of Film Companies Coming to Work. (Jesse Lasky, third from left, Marcus Loew in front), but again there must have been a mix-up somewhere with the usual result—laughter—oodles of it.

Just for instance, the picture of that newly discovered Venus who is to be made a star because of her wonderful eyes was flashed for an all-too-brief moment upon the screen. Somehow or other her eyes didn't show. But who cared. If she is a blind woman she still has enough-er-talent to be a star, or anyway a bathing girl.

The Hearst press agents were a flock of goats; the "Black Oxen" cast monkeys, "Fiery Pola" a polar bear, the "Hollywood Camilles" a pack of camels—animals, not cigarettes; the film heads an indistinguishable mass of factory workers making the dinner-hour exit. And so it went.

'Crowning' Royalty

A comedy crowning of a preposterous King and Queen of Flimdumb, in which both royalties were "crowned" sweet and pretty with a stuffed club, closed this part of the program. Then the great room was stripped of its carpeting, tables and chairs and prepared for the "Dancing Till Dawn" part of the entertainment.

Jazz De Luxe

Sobbing saxaphones, the din of kettle-drums, throbbing cellos, horns, violins—jazz!

ERNEST TORRENCE, celebrated Paramount star, gave a characteristic performance in the T. N. T. sketch, "Passionate Italians"

AND, oh, how easy on the eyes was Bebe Daniels, in the role of Juliet—all versions, past, present, filmed and censored. M-m-m

Shadow dances, all lights out except the spots playing over a medley of gorgeous color. Henna-haired houris in green spangled gowns, pallid passionate brunettes robed in lip-stick red, blonde babies in burnt orange creations, and sweet little girls draped in the most recent vogue of extravagantly simple white frocks.

Dashing cavaliers—fat ones, thin ones, tall ones, bow-legged ones, all looking like tie-ups for "Beau Brummel." Rupert Hughes had one of the few long-tailed soup-and-fish outfits. Some dapper youth in the universal dinner jacket endeavored to spoof him. "Never mind," quoth Rupert, "I own this suit." But that was unkind. Those habiliments could never have been hired.

Along about breakfast time, when the sparrows were coming into Times Square and the cuckoos leaving it, the early-to-bed brigade took on coffee and cakes at some adjacent hostelry and hied them hence. But the regulars, gluttons for punishment, were still in the ring. Some telephoned for business suits so they wouldn't be late for work Monday morning.

Ho-hum! "T.N.T. it's a party!" We'll say it was! You don't know the half of it!

What the Speakers Said

"I believe that the public want more education," said Mr. Brisbane in speaking of motion pictures from the public viewpoint. "The moving picture is one of the methods, one of the best and greatest of all, for doing what every human being who works is striving for, and that is to get an idea of his own mind into another mind."

The speaker referred to the great changes that came with the printing press and of the expansion of facilities for conveying information, putting in the background the former importance of public assemblage as a means of transmitting news of events.

He described the microphone in front of him as representing the culminating miracle "in this century of miracles, an instrument which actually makes it possible for one human being standing on this earth to talk to the entire population of the globe."

"This will have many effects on the human race. It will make for the unification of language. When the sixteen or seventeen hundred million human beings on the earth become sufficiently civilized they will demand that language."

Never Lost a Nickle

"I have been pleased to do business with the motion picture industry for over fifteen years," said Dr. Giannini. "During that time I have met the humblest and the mightiest. My relations have been most satisfactory, more pleasant than they have been with any other legitimate industry."

"In these fifteen years I have engaged in transactions that have entered the millions, and as yet I have to register the loss of a five-cent piece with anybody in the motion picture business. (Applause.)

RICHARD DIX, another Paramount star, was the boy who four times in a row saved the heroine from the ghastly villain's clutches

"I am going to disregard the traffic signal before I close, Mr. Chairman, as a penalty for asking me to speak here in this splendid company. I am going to request the privilege of being permitted to refer to a hobby."

"That hobby is to take every opportunity and to seize every occasion to administer a rebuke to certain people engaged in the business who prey upon the business and who are known as the excess bonus men."

Drawing the parallel of the prosperous bootlegger who passes the house of a customer when he sees crape upon the door, the doctor declared when he saw the bonus men creeping into the business he regarded it as a symbol of crape upon the door of their customers and he wanted none of that kind of business.

Magnificent Mae Quotes

"Ladies and gentlemen, kind audience, have no fear about the five minutes being exceeded so far as I am concerned," said Miss Murray. "This line was written by a very marvelous man, 'If we do not please we are not heard at all.'"

"That just takes in every tiny thing that we try to do. This business, this profession, means service. With us as it is when standing before the microphone, we must please or else we are not heard at all."

D. W. Griffith Thrills Listeners

In introducing Mr. Griffith, Mr. Rothafel referred to some of the more famous of his productions and also to the recent "inspiring work of this great genius, an episode in the history of our country. It will give me great pleasure to ask him to stand up and tell the naked truth."

"Ladies and gentlemen and all the poor people who have to listen," began the producer, "I think one of the great not-to-be-understood things of the world is that institution known as the public dinner."

"My goodness, we come here scared out of our lives. You must be bored when we talk. How you ladies are talked to! You know every man is such an egotist."

"You know I began talking ladies to death with my mother. I used to say to her, 'Maw'—I used to call her 'Maw,' a way we have down South—'Maw, who made the moon? Maw, who made the stars? Maw, what is the thing you mean when you say you love me? Maw, who made the sun?'"

"She would say 'God.' Then with the persistence of childhood I would say 'Who made God?'"

"I would wear her out and then I would talk my poor sister to death. I had a school teacher when very young and very poor. I remember one day when spring had just appeared, when the road was lined with violets and other flowers, of asking her the old questions, every question, of talking her to distraction."

"Ladies, you have been talked to death listening to men, mostly talking about themselves. That is the only story men understand when talking about themselves. So now we are talking again, mostly about ourselves."

Light of the Universe

"I heard it said today by one of the greatest lawyers in the world—talking about the power of the motion picture—not even of the press was he talking, but he said something more radical, more far fetched, but bound to be the truth:

"The motion picture is the hope of the world." (Applause.)

"Even as I make this radical statement I am a cynic myself and look into cynical faces. You think it is bunk. Just as folks would have said of Gutenberg and his press. Just as the people who at first ran that press would have been tried as witches and perhaps burned at the stake."

"Just as people who were engaged in pic-

Old Lady Astor Says

WELL, good folks, now that the Night is a matter of history and we are getting settled back into the rut again—by that meaning in working togs—we can survey the situation on the evening in question—some of it in public and more of it otherwise. The great majority of it reached the air in corners where two were company or between two heads close together over a table. One of these latter instances was where Arthur Brisbane left the speakers' table and paid a visit to Adolph Zukor seated at a table out front. Probably more business was done in the course of the dinner-dance than was transacted in the hours ordinarily devoted to that pursuit on the following Monday. You can't stop the workers from working when workers meet.

JUDGING from the steadily punctuated laughter in the talk of A. M. Botsford there must have been a string of real jokes on the fire in the five minutes he held the boards. It just happened we were so placed we could not catch them, but we envied the fellows who did. The vice president of the Ampas is developing a well founded reputation as a wit.

WELLS HAWKS was among those present at the Astor. In the course of a conversation the representatives of Miss Pickford uncovered the reason for the absence of that player and Mr. Fairbanks. There was a quiet "at home" celebration of the fourth wedding anniversary. Miss Pickford will miss the New York opening of her production, although prior to her departure for the other side she is giving much personal attention to the arrangements for the local showing.

BEBE DANIELS proved in the death scene of "Romeo and Juliet" that if she restricts a majority of her work to comedy or lighter subjects it is not from necessity. Her interpretation afforded gratification to her friends and surprised those of her admirers who did not know she possessed the voice and the capacity of the serious stage player. The remainder of the cast, Ernest Torrence and Richard Dix, rounded out an excellent trio.

HIRAM ABRAMS looked very much the opposite of the disturbed man he recently has been represented to be. Perhaps he still was chuckling over the allusion to him in the T. N. T. News Reel, "Hiram Abrams embarks on his first trip to Europe to unite his artists." The ensuing shot, like practically all the reel, had little to do with the actual title—in this case being a fishing schooner getting under way. It just happened the artist never had been disunited, only in the minds of the overalert news hunters, or manufacturers, but the diners laughed, and H. A. laughed with them.

AND while on the United Artists we may as well go down the line and finish that part of the story. The second member of the company in evidence was D. W. Griffith, at the speaker's table. Why does not the producer some time declare a vacation from the screen, for a month or so, and give his friends a sample of his quality in a great role on the stage? It is approximately fifteen years since he bade farewell to the footlights. In that time he has acquired much, of art surely and of life probably. To the stage he would bring much that he has acquired around and about the camera. It would be certainly a highly novel enterprise and we believe a successful one commercially as well as artistically.

ONE of those who made the most of the evening was Captain A. E. Lathrop, who for the past twenty-eight years has written Alaska after his name when on occasional visits to the States. The captain, who is the theatre owner of the big territory, had planned his departure from New York for twenty-four hours after the party. He has been in town two and a half months, and after a trip to the west coast intends a return visit. Incidentally he remarks that in future when he finds it necessary to take a run down to the states he will bring along a little more money and pass right on through Seattle to New York, which he thinks as a vacation ground is not so bad.

ARTHUR BRISBANE for the second time within a few weeks has appeared as one of the speakers at a film function—to the gratification and still better to the profit of his fellow-diners. The editor is a fluent speaker; not only does he talk rapidly but always may he be depended upon to leave something with his hearers to think about.

RUPERT HUGHES is one man who may with a perfectly clear conscience plead not guilty to the charge of taking himself seriously. How many directors will give utterance to a sentiment such as "Actors know also I am not a director, which makes it unanimous?" That is picking a sentence out of its context, the immediate antecedent reference being a jocular one to Mr. Griffith, who was described as taking the "Paul Jones" ride in his directing costume, "as I did in mine."

WHICH recalls to memory that Mr. Hughes, who in his recent public appearances in New York has given us an insight into the lighter side of his personality, wrote Mr. Griffith a letter after witnessing the initial performance of "America." Perhaps some time the later producer will permit its printing. Then will we get a reflection of the serious side of the Hollywood creator of photodramas, one that will do credit to his head and his heart. It is a gem.

GEORGE KLEINE, who was chairman of the Edison luncheon committee, was on hand to observe how the young fellows perform. The survivor of many functions held under the auspices of the old guard was in his best form.

THE large number present at the dinner who had occasions pleasant as well as stormy heard first-class examples of the oratory of Senator Jimmy Walker must have regretted that one of the happiest speakers in the industry, or out of it for that matter, was permitted to sit on the outskirts of a gathering, to the enjoyment of which he could have added so much. But these here radio programs are arbitrary things, and they are not elastic like the ordinary function where a few minutes makes no difference one way or another.

HERBERT BRENON, to whom has just been given the assignment for the director of "Peter Pan" for Famous Players, picked up a lot of fun in watching the unfolding of the "news reel."

THERE was a goodly gathering of exhibitors present at the revel, from all over the territory of Uncle Sam, including Alaska. There was a delegation from up York State and from the city. Guy Wonders came from Baltimore, and Sam Katz and Abe Blank from the Middle West. Beyond any question the party was the most representative of any ever held in the industry's history.

Hiram Abrams Re-elected President of United Artists at Fifth Annual Meeting

Stars Renew Contracts and Extend Them for Three Years

WHEN the announcement appeared that Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, David Wark Griffith and Mary Pickford had formed a company known as the United Artists, and the object of which was the distribution of pictures which they would make, the president of one of the large companies uttered a remark which in a way reflected the general skepticism with which the trade as a whole looked upon the remarkable innovation:

"The lunatics have taken over the asylum."

The formal organization of United Artists was completed April 7, 1919. That was five years ago. Just to indicate how far astray was the judgment of the executive whose cryptic remark we have just quoted we print an announcement issued last week by the United Artists:

The annual meeting of the stockholders and owners of United Artists Corporation was held at the offices of United Artists Corporation, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, on Friday, March 28.

There were present Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, the owners and their representatives, and it was unanimously decided not only to carry out their existing contracts, but to renew and extend their contracts for a period of three years, except Charles Chaplin, who has eight pictures still to deliver to the Corporation.

It was the unanimous sentiment expressed by the owners and stockholders of United Artists Corporation that they were perfectly satisfied with the executive and personnel of their organization, which resulted in the re-election of all the officers of the corporation.

MARY PICKFORD,
DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS,
D. W. GRIFFITH,
CHARLES CHAPLIN,
United Artists Corporation,
By HIRAM ABRAMS, President.

Strong Financial Statement

It is stated that the forecast as to the approximate financial status of the company printed in EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW in its issue of March 22 was confirmed by the official reports submitted by President Hiram Abrams.

It will be noted that instead of there being any substantial basis for the rumors of dissension among the directors and officers of the company there is complete harmony of purpose in the directorate and in the official board.

This feeling was reflected in the cordiality that prevailed during the annual meeting and in the satisfaction that was expressed by the contributing artists as to past performances of the distributing company and its present financial standing.

As to the latter it is betraying no confidence when we say it is reliably stated that while the company began business five years ago without large capital it possesses today assets approximating $1,000,000.

As was announced in the exclusive story in this journal three weeks ago the company in the last year showed an operation profit of nearly $100,000 at a distribution cost in the United States of less than 22 per cent and in its foreign offices, which extend throughout the world and all of which are owned outright by the company, at a rate of 25 per cent.

While it is understood that as a result of the meeting there will be no change in the

HIRAM ABRAMS

Who has been re-elected president of United Artists Corporation at the fifth annual meeting of its owners fundamental policy of the company, there also will be, as was indicated by Miss Pickford in a statement printed in EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW March 22, "a readjustment to new conditions."

Look for Expansion

That this readjustment will take the form of an expansion of the company's activities there is strong reason to believe. If that expansion take the form of enlarging the group of contributing artists it goes without saying that these will be of the first rank, players who may be admitted to full partnership with those now composing the backbone of the corporation's products.

The career of the United Artists has been without precedent in the history of the industry. It is the first time that any group of players have been able to form a distributing organization for their product.

That they have been able to carry their organization through and over the pitfalls that beset all similar companies and to do it with financial success has demonstrated that for once the wisecracks were wrong and that the possession of artistic and creative endowments on the part of the contributors did not automatically prevent them from being good business men and women.

During the past week a story has come out of California which indicates that the successful co-operation displayed in the management of United Artists has led to a number of conferences looking to the acquisition by leading stars of a chain of theatres in about fifteen first-run towns.

The players mentioned in the report are Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Charles Chaplin, Harold Lloyd and D. W. Griffith.

Contracts Delay Action

Several factors would operate to delay any immediate carrying out of the plan, among these being the fact that some of the artists named already are under contract and furthermore that much time would be required to finance such a company and to erect or acquire theatres.

The outright ownership of these theatres, it is pointed out, would obviate the necessity of the present system of road showing employed by some of the players' representatives.

The Egyptian and the Hollywood are cited as typical of the houses the group has in mind as models in size and appointments.

It will be noted that among the players mentioned are all four of those composing the United Artists group.

There is every reason to believe that the United Artists will continue to be a large factor in the making and distribution of high-class motion pictures.

Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford, it is announced, will sail for a world tour on April 12. As a consequence Miss Pickford will not be able to attend the New York showing of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," set for the Criterion May 5.

Will Hays Again Chosen to Lead Large Motion Picture Group

AT the conclusion of the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, held April 1, the board of directors entered into a three year contract with Will H. Hays, president of the organization. This contract will run to March 5, 1928. The association, which originally consisted of nine large producing and distributing companies, now has a membership of twenty-one. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was elected to membership at the meeting.

Mr. Hays' contract does not expire until next March, but the organization took this occasion to renew the contract, which is a great compliment to the work Mr. Hays has accomplished during his term of office.

At the time Mr. Hays took over the office there was considerable dissension in the motion picture industry and there was a hard road ahead of the former Postmaster General, but with his usual dominant and aggressive spirit he tackled the problems and developed an organization that in influence is without precedent in the industry.

It is understood the salary of the president will be as before $150,000 a year.

Since taking office Mr. Hays has devoted no little time to effecting a more cordial relation and understanding between motion picture producers and the public. His work along this line has been one of the outstanding features of his tenure of office and has proved invaluable to the industry as a whole.

There had been several occasions when the public was aroused by incidents relating to motion pictures, and it was largely through the efforts of Mr. Hays that resentment has been removed.

The signing of the contract by Mr. Hays for what amounts to another four years will set at rest any talk that the president of the producers and distributors would resign his office to re-enter the presidential campaign. The action is a mark of the confidence existing between the parties of the first and second part.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY WIN DISPUTE

Chief Justice Schmuck Decides on Breach of Contract Suit

IN a decision just announced, Chief Justice Schmuck of the New York City Court, sitting as final Arbitrator, broke a deadlock in a case brought by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation against Small, Strassberg Circuit, Inc. This case was originally tried before the Joint Arbitration Board of the F. I. L. M. Club and T. O. C. C. and resulted in a tie vote.

Chief Justice Schmuck was thereupon chosen by the Arbitration Board as the final Arbitrator. His decision is final and by it Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will recover $4,385 for breach of contract by Small, Strassberg Circuit, Inc., which operates the Kismet, Summer and State Theatres, Brooklyn.

It is said that the decision is of great importance in that it decides that the provision in the Standard Uniform contract which provides that an application for contract is automatically revoked if not approved by distributor within seven days after it is signed by the exhibitor, may be extended by exhibitor orally or by conduct showing that he intends that his application shall be kept alive beyond this seven day period.

Austin Keogh appeared on behalf of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Mrs. Levy of Hartman & Levy, appeared for Small, Strassberg Circuit, Inc.

'LURE OF THE YUKON' MADE IN HEART OF ALASKA

Within the very near future Norman Dawn, producer and director, will realize his fondest wishes in the releasing of a production he has dreamed of and long since planned for. It was always his desire to some day make his own picture in the open spaces of the far north; believing that neither the mountains of California nor any other place could provide the true Alaskan atmosphere. "Lure of the Yukon" is probably the first and only picture that was ever made on the river bearing that name.

Mr. Dawn set out for Alaska over a year ago, accompanied by his wife and a cameraman; they traveled through Alaska seeking a proper location.

Spending his time in learning the ways of the Eskimos and natives, and studying the country from the standpoint of its adaptability for shooting a picture, soon convinced Mr. Dawn there would have to be several changes in his plans. The shining of the sun for only two hours a day made it apparent that the picture would be a long time in the making. He then sent to Hollywood for a cast of well-known stars.

Eight thousand miles from Broadway, enduring privations in an almost barren land with nothing but ice and snow, in the dead of winter when the thermometer registered as low as eighty-six degrees below zero, Mr. Dawn patiently worked and labored to produce a picture of that romantic country. Negotiations are now in the course of proceedings with a large distributing corporation, and as soon as they shall have been completed a further announcement will be made.

MISSISSIPPI KILLS CENSORSHIP

Censorship in Mississippi is dead. The Committee on Education has unanimously reported against the proposed censorship bill for the state. This makes it impossible for passage. The fight was one of the most bitterly contested in the history of the state and exhibitors are elated at the hard fought victory.

PRODUCTION COMPANY ORGANIZED WITH DENVER CAPITAL

With the incorporation recently of the Non-theatrical Photoplay Productions Company, which was organized to make accurate educational photoplays, Denver, Colo., will see the actual work of a motion picture outfit in operation.

A site near Inspiration Point, Denver, having twenty acres of land, has been purchased and it is the intention of the organizers of the company to build a small city that will have in it the various kinds of architecture of the different parts of the world.

The organizers of the company are said to include such men as ex-Governor E. M. Ammons, Otis B. Thayer, Judge Samuel Johnson, Albert F. Sittloh, John L. Maim, Dr. David H. Foote, Halsted L. Ritter, Dr. Allen Moore and C. W. Runnell.

Dr. Allen Moore, who is a noted Orientalist and a Fellow of the Royal Geological society of Great Britain, is already working toward building the educational pictures. Otis B. Thayer will act as director general. The company has received the indorsement of many prominent organizations including women's clubs of Denver.

ALTOONA THEATRE WINS 'GOING UP' LOBBY PRIZE

Douglas MacLean Productions announced this week the results of the contest for best decorated theatre fronts, in connection with showings of Douglas MacLean's "Going Up." Mr. MacLean offered five prizes. There were many entries and competition was keen.

The judges—the exploitation editors—L. H. Moens of Motion Picture News; Epes W. Sargent, Moving Picture World and L. A. Morgan, EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, selected the five winners, as follows:

First—Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa.; second—Strand Theatre, Independence, Kan.; third—Barclay, Schenectady, N. Y.; fourth—Capitol, Oklahoma City; fifth—Colonial, Tacoma, Wash.

FRIENDS HONOR CLOAKEY ON EVE OF DEPARTURE

Prominent Canadian Showman Leaves to Take Up New Duties

WITH the enthusiastic good wishes of over 200 friends and admirers ringing in their ears, Mr. and Mrs. Oral D. Cloakey, the former being the recent manager of the Ottawa Regent Theatre, bade a formal farewell to Ottawa, at a good cheer party in their honor in the Elks club rooms at the Loew Theatre Building on March 26. On behalf of those present, Sam Roy, assistant manager of the Regent who acted as master of ceremonies for the lively function, presented Mr. and Mrs. Cloakey with suitable gifts, the former receiving a steamer wardrobe trunk and Mrs. Cloakey a beautiful lady's tray club bag. A great dance followed, Mr. Cloakey played the xylophone in a farewell appearance before his many friends and various acts from other theatres provided a splendid programme until an early hour. Representatives of the Elks, Rotary, Lions, Kiwanis, One Hundred and other community clubs were present as well as the staffs of all local theatres. The Regent Theatre orchestra played the music for the dancing.

Mr. and Mrs. Cloakey left the Canadian Capital on March 28, for Los Angeles, where he is taking the position of director of theatres and exploitation for the Universal Pictures Corporation. Their departure from the city was the occasion for another demonstration of friendship on the part of local associates, the couple being given a noisy send-off at the depot.

RESOLUTIONS PRAISE SHOWMEN FOR CO-OPERATION

At the regular meeting of the F. I. L. M. Club, on March 19, a resolution was drawn up and unanimously passed thanking E. F. Albee, J. J. Murdock, B. S. Moss and A. G. Whyte for their broadminded spirit of co-operation in accepting contracts drawn up by theatres which have passed into the hands of these men. In many cases when a theatre is sold, the new owners refuse the film contract signed by the former owners. This results in a big loss of distributors and makes it necessary to resell the films and results in delays to the regular customers.

Cancellation of contracts has heretofore been a thorn in the side of distributors and has caused no end of trouble but it is thought the action of several leading showmen in accepting obligations will go far to relieving the situation.

'AFTER SIX DAYS' SCHEDULED FOR FOUR NEW RUNS

Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation announces that it has placed "After Six Days," the biblical spectacle, for four more indefinite runs in various cities.

Starting in Pittsburg, the photoplay will open at the Nixon Theatre on March 31. Norfolk, Va., will gaze upon it next when it opens at the Wells Theatre on April 14. On April 21 it will be presented simultaneously at the Castle Theatre in the famous theatrical "Loop" district of Chicago and at the Bijou Theatre in Richmond, Va.

Allen Moritz has returned to New York from a business trip which included Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit. As special representative for Preferred Pictures Corporation Mr. Moritz attended a series of sales conferences held by Harry Charnas in these cities.

Four Eastern Film Laboratories Combine to Form $6,000,000 Company

THE consolidation of the important film laboratories of the east is now an accomplished fact. Announcement has been made of the formation of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., with a capitalization of $6,000,000. Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., have taken over all the assets and the businesses of Craftsman Film Laboratories, Erbograph Company, Republic Laboratories and Commercial Traders Cinema Corporation.

L. James San will head the new organization as president and general manager. Mr. San will immediately take up the task of co-ordinating the work of the various companies.

Herbert J. Yates, vice-president, will take charge of sales and advertising. Associated with him as special representatives will be Messrs. Benjamin Goetz and J. Brophy. Messrs. W. H. Evarts and A. Cantor will continue in the Consolidated sales force.

Harry M. Goetz and Leonard Abrahams, vice-presidents, will have charge of the management of all of the plants taken over, and associated with them will be the complete technical staffs formerly with the various companies.

Benjamin Goetz has been elected treasurer, and Rubert E. Witmer, secretary. Ludwig E. B. Erb, Morris San, Edmund C. Dearstyne, Joseph San will together with the officers named in the foregoing make up the Board of Directors. The general offices of the Consolidated will be established at the earliest possible date at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

The Title Department for all plants will be in charge of Louis Meyers. This department will be considerably enlarged to bring it up in scope and operation to the requirements of the combined plants, with provision made for the translations to all languages and to the preparation of titles suited to the different countries of the world.

The organization of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., marks the retirement from active business of Ludwig G. B. Erb, who welcomes the opportunity to take a much needed rest from the arduous duties which have occupied him so successfully for so many years. Mr. Erb, however, has consented to continue on the board of directors as chief technical advisor.

Insects To Take Their Place as Stars In Scientific Feature

FOR the first time in the history of motion pictures an "educational" is to be made on the same elaborate scale as any of the big super-productions and "road-showed" at top prices.

Word of this radical departure in film progress has just come from Principal Pictures, where, for the past few months Sol Lesser, and Louis H. Tolhurst, scientist and maker of the "Secrets of Life" series, have been working quietly on a scenario which, when filmed, is destined to prove one of the most astounding creations that have yet come out of picture-land.

The task of serving educational films in delectable form is not new to Lesser and Tolhurst. Their series of short subjects known as "The Secrets of Life," treating of the life of the ant, the doodlebug, the spider, the fly and other insects, have taken the country by storm and have proved to be the most successful series of short reel subjects released this year.

Notwithstanding their authenticity from an educational standpoint these films, with their abundance of humor, have proved that a picture may contain a maximum of entertainment value and yet serve as excellent educational material.

Although the exact nature of the big production has not yet been made public, it is understood that it will treat of the development of life from its earliest stages, encompassing in its scope a field that would take many volumes to describe in book form.

An undertaking, such as the vast one contemplated, would be looked upon skeptically by practical picture men were it undertaken by any but Lesser.

But this producer, with his almost uncanny knowledge of "what will prove successful at the box office," commands the respect of all picturedom through his record of achievement.

Speaking of Sol Lesser and the contemplated project of the "super-educational," Mr. Tolhurst says: "It is not alone Mr. Lesser's knowledge of the practical side of producing that will make this picture a success. It is his sense of responsibility to the public which he always feels, and his desire to give to the world only creations that render a service—films that make folks happy, that make them think, and both."

NEW COMPANY ENTERS MOTION PICTURE FIELD

Albany, N. Y.—After a slump which has existed for some time in the number of companies incorporating to enter the motion picture business in New York state, brought the formation and filing of papers on March 31, with the secretary of state of a company capitalized at $6,200,000. The company has assumed the name of the Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., maintaining its principal office in New York city.

'CYTHEREA' MEASURES UP TO EXPECTATION

Samuel Goldwyn Brings Print East for Executive Preview

SAMUEL GOLDWYN returned from the coast last week, bringing with him the first print of "Cytherea—Goddess of Love," his latest First National picture which was pre-viewed by the Home Office executives of that organization.

The production, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, was created by Mr. Goldwyn with one idea—to make it the outstanding box office attraction of his entire career as a producer. Judging from every angle, it is pointed out that the producer has employed every element to accomplish his purpose.

"The results on the screen can only be judged when the picture reaches the public," says Mr. Goldwyn. "However, I believe Mr. Fitzmaurice has been successful in injecting into this production the factors that go to make up a box office picture of extraordinary strength.

"The novel itself by Joseph Hergesheimer is one of the biggest sellers in years. It is one of the most discussed of modern fiction. Its theme is humanity itself.

"George Fitzmaurice is the ideal director for 'Cytherea.' It is the exact type of story in which he excels. Mr. Fitzmaurice has directed the production with sympathetic understanding and keen perception of commercial values and so developed the love theme that it becomes a beautiful study of a woman's soul.

"On par with the popularity of the book itself is that of the cast—Lewis Stone, Alma Rubens, Irene Rich, Charles Wellesly, Norman Kerry, Constance Bennett. These are only some of the big names that make up perhaps the best box office cast I have ever assembled.

"'Cytherea—Goddess of Love,' is fundamentally a story that demands artistic treatment. For that reason we have used color in the three most important love sequences."

MANNING LEAVES PRINCIPAL FOR NEW FIELD

Norman Manning, for the past year and a half, studio manager of Principal Pictures Corporation, will shortly sever his connections with that organization.

Manning plans to delve into the picture world in other channels. His resignation was tendered the Principal officials this week.

He is one of the best known studio heads on the coast. He built the old Balboa studios and was general manager of that plant for some years. He has been in the production end of the business as well as studio management.

When Principal Pictures Corporation took over the old King Vidor studios in Hollywood, Manning supervised the rebuilding of the plant which today is one of the most up-to-date and thorough picture organizations in the West.

Albany, N. FOUR NEW DIRECTORS FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS

Men Elevated to Directorship for Outstanding Performances

THE injection of new blood and new ideas into the making of motion pictures became a reality rather than a phrase when Jesse L. Lasky, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced March 28, at Hollywood the elevation by his organization of Paul Bern, Paul Sloane, R. H. Burnside and Frank Tuttle to the post of director.

"In making these four men directors," said Mr. Lasky, "we are following our policy of striving to keep the quality of our product steadily advancing by incorporation of new ideas and encouraging new blood. All four are exceptionally well equipped through years of training to take over their new directorial duties and already have made their marks in the screen and stage world.

"Paul Bern, who recently became associated with our organization and wrote the scenario for the next Pola Negri picture, 'Men,' has had a wealth of experience in his chosen field," said Mr. Lasky. "Three years of intensive study of film cutting, titling and scenario construction followed a brief experience as an actor on the legitimate stage. Then he became assistant to Hugo Ballin, and later editor-in-charge for Goldwyn, during which period he wrote the scenario for 'The Christian.' More recent productions of his pen are 'Name the Man' and 'The Marriage Circle.'

"Paul Sloane is possessed of equally valuable experience. He it was who wrote 'Over the Hill' and the adaptation of 'If Winter Comes,' and more recently wrote the scenario of 'Big Brother' and the latest Thomas Meighan picture, 'The Conference Man.'

"Our opportunity of availing ourselves of the talent of Mr. Burnside is particularly gratifying. Known far and wide and for his wonderful spectacular presentations at the New York Hippodrome and as stage director for Charles Dillingham, he knows the mechanics of lighting and scenic effects as few men do. For the past two months he has been at our Long Island studio learning the technique of screen production.

"Frank Tuttle, one of the organizers of the Film Guild and a keen student of the drama as well as the photoplay, has been associated with us for some time at the Long Island studio, his first work for us being the adaptation of 'The Conquest of Canaan.' He recently wrote the adaptation of 'Man-hand'ed' for Gloria Swanson."

SCHULBERG PLANS EARLY WORK ON BALMER NOVEL

Preliminary plans are under way for the production of Edwin Balmer's novel, "The Breath of Scandal," which will soon be filmed at the B. P. Schulberg Studios for release by Preferred Pictures.

Olga Printzlau, whose recent adaptations have included "Daughters of the Rich" and "Maytime," is now writing the screen version of this popular story which was first published serially by Cosmopolitan Magazine and subsequently became a best-seller when issued in book form by Little, Brown and Company.

Mr. Schulberg is now casting for the players to enact this society story which calls for elaborate production. The complete list of names has not yet been announced but it is understood that one of the principal parts will be given to Ethel Shannon. Since her exceptionally fine work in "Daughters of the Rich" and "Maytime," Miss Shannon has become a real box-office asset.

PRODUCTION STARTED ON FIRST CHRISTIE SPECIAL

Production is well under way on the first of the Al Christie Special features which were announced a few weeks ago for Hodkinson release. About nine or ten weeks time will be consumed in the making of this feature, and with favorable weather conditions and keeping on schedule director Scott Sidney states that the production will be ready for release late in May.

All of the space in the Christie studios which is not devoted to covered stages has been utilized in the building of a city street with tall buildings, subway entrances and other details which will make an effective appearance for the exterior scenes of the production.

FAMOUS PLAYERS STUDIOS WILL OPERATE AT CAPACITY

Within two months eighteen production units will be actively at work in the studios of Paramount. Thirteen of these companies will be engaged at the Lasky studio in Hollywood and the remaining five at the Eastern studio at Long Island City. Early in the summer three more units will be added at the Long Island studio.

This announcement was embodied in a statement issued at Hollywood by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who recently returned to the West Coast after a two months' sojourn in New York where, in conference with Adolph Zukor and Sidney R. Kent, Mr. Lasky completed the details of the big production program which is now being launched and which will provide the Paramount releases for the coming Fall and Winter season.

MILWAUKEE OPENS NEW MODERN THEATRE

Two Million Dollar Picture Palace Among Finest in World

WITH the opening, March 28, of the Wisconsin theatre, Milwaukee, takes its place alongside New York and Chicago in the matter of fine motion picture theatres.

Built at a cost of $2,000,000 by J. E. and Thomas Saxe, the theatre is not only one of the most beautiful in the world, but also one of the largest, having a seating capacity of 3500.

City and State officials, as well as society leaders and prominent figures in the picture industry, will join with the owners in the dedication of this newest addition to the chain of First National houses Friday night.

"Why Men Leave Home," the Louis B. Mayer-John M. Stahl production has been selected as the inaugural attraction.

One of the distinguishing features is the great electric sign, the largest theatre illuminating device in the world. It is 75 feet high, each letter being taller than the average man. Inside the theatre is a special lighting system, arranged so that colored light, in keeping with the thematic stage lighting, may be used to carry picture atmosphere to every part of the auditorium.

Music will be provided by two orchestras and a $50,000 organ, one of the two double-concoled instruments in existence. One orchestra will be stationed on the mezzanine promenade surrounding the lobby.

E. J. Weisfeldt, who has been managing director of Saxe's Strand, will be in control of the new theatre. As director of productions at the Wisconsin, Mr. Weisfeldt is responsible for the type of pictures shown, as well as prologues and presentations. He has established a fine record as the director of the Strand.

Pictures World Language

"Let the book say what it will, it speaks only in one language. The word you speak, my friends, my brothers and sisters, speaks in the only universal language that has been invented since the beginning of time, because it speaks to all people and speaks clearly to all nations of the earth. That is the motion picture.

"When it speaks great truths then will the motion picture wipe out the great absurdity of war. It is one power that can do it."

Hughes Joshes Everyone

Mr. Hughes spoke in satirical vein throughout. To the editor of the Hearst newspapers he alluded as "this young reporter on the left who writes for the Munsey publications." He desired to call the attention of his producers, "if they still are my producers," to the statement of Dr. Giannini that he had never lost a five-cent piece in a motion picture transaction. "They have utterly overlooked him," he remarked amid laughter.

When he declared he was impressed by being in the only long-tailed coat at the table "except that worn by Mr. David J. Griffin, who I am told is also a director," D. W. led the applause.

The diners laughed again when the speaker said that "Mr. Griffin has just finished taking a scene in his great and marvelous success of 'The Golem.'"

"Mr. Griffin has just taken the Paul Jones ride, taken in his directing costume, as I did in mine. Actors know also I am not a director, which makes it unanimous.

"This appears in the ads in large letters.

"An exhibitor writes in 'We have had rotten pictures, but not in respect to patronage.'

"I have never yet seen a picture that didn't break a record, in Skaneateles or somewhere.

"I wish to thank the advertisers and to say that no blow will drive me even more completely out of business than now, not yet having entered it."

Mr. Hays Enthuses

"I will tell the naked truth," said Mr. Hays. "For two years I have given thought to that matter. I accept the challenge and will tell the naked truth about those of us who are here and of the industry and to that innumerable audience frequently spoken of as not here—to us for a moment about them and to them for a moment about us.

"It has been suggested that this instrument (indicating the microphone) is sensitive, and so those of us here may well bear in mind is the public sensitive. I wish that that public might see as that public hears this audience tonight.

"This program may well be an answer to their query: 'Just what and how does the motion picture industry and its personnel perform?'"

"We of the industry must not forget that we are the servants of that public just outside this instrument, that it is for them our service is conducted.

Pictures an Essential

"And to this public whose servant this industry is I give this naked truth: After two years of careful study of the situation I would that they might hear this from down stairs to Los Angeles, where they are listening in—The motion picture industry which you men and women compose is an essential business in this country and in the world.

"And there is no finer, more earnest, more sincere and striving group of men and women engaged in any business in the world. (Applause.)

"From the studios created by your energy go men and women to every corner of the earth to bring to the Main Streets of this country that instruction and entertainment which have now become second to nothing in importance as social and commercial factors of the nation.

"Every success is a shadow of an individual. Men and women have striven to bring about that which now obtains in this business.

"This may very well be called tonight the New Year's Eve in the motion picture industry because of the future that is ahead for the business."

The speaker here alluded to those who had preceded him and to the variety of interests represented by them, declaring on the part of the industry a rededication to the service of the public.

JACK HOXIE SIGNS FIVE YEAR UNIVERSAL CONTRACT

Coincident with the arrival in New York early this week of Jack Hoxie's latest Universal feature, "Ridgeway of Montana," comes word from Universal City that the popular western star has been signed by Universal for a period of five years. He will make a series of high class western dramas, of a special super-feature variety, which are planned to surpass by far the box-office success he has turned out for Universal during the past year.

The new contract, negotiated following conferences between Carl Laemmle, president of the corporation, Julius Bernheim, general manager of the studio, and the star, is based on one of the new "sliding scale" arrangements put into force at the larger studios. This calls for increase in salary at stated periods, and the first pictures under the new contract will be staged on a more elaborate scale than before and at a higher figure.

Under the new contract Hoxie will be starred in some very important plays. Clifford Smith, former director of William S. Hart, will direct, and Isadore Bernstein, veteran scenarist, will be supervising editor of the Hoxie scripts.

M. P. T. O. CONVENTION PLANS COMPLETED

Railroads Offer Rate Reductions to Theatre Owners

THE National Headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America during the Boston Convention, May 27, 28 and 29 will be at the Copley-Plaza Hotel and the convention banquet will be held there on the evening of Wednesday, May 28.

President Sydney S. Cohen and other members of the convention committee will meet in Boston this week to conclude all arrangements. The local committees, under the direction of Ernest Horstmann and Jacob Lourie, have secured the complete co-operation of all the Theatre Owners of Massachusetts in helping to make the convention a pronounced success and the stay of the delegates there pleasant and agreeable.

Theatre Owners are especially urged to bring the women members of their households to the convention, as the elements of entertainment in and around Boston are so varied as to keep interest at a keen pitch during the entire convention time.

Large delegations will be present from the different states and the Canadian division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will have at least a hundred Dominion Exhibitors there. J. C. Brady and H. Alexander of Toronto made a special trip to National Headquarters to complete arrangements for this delegation. The entire area of North America will be represented in what gives promise of being the greatest convention in point of numbers, activity and influence yet held under the auspices of the Exhibitors division of the Motion Picture Industry.

Fare and one-half concessions have been obtained from all the Trunk Line railroads, and this will favor Theatre Owners very much in saving transportation costs. Entire state delegations have already made hotel reservations and it is advisable that Theatre Owners move along this line of preparation as soon as practicable.

New Orleans Chosen as Meeting Place for Annual Congress

THE annual congress of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will be held this year in New Orleans beginning April 23. The meeting will be in session for a week.

Selection of stories for the screen, action on reports submitted in a nation-wide check up on the public taste and the formulation of plans in an attempt to co-operate that the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures shall be on a higher plane, are among the chief objects of the meeting, according to Robert Lieber, president of First National.

The New York delegation to the convention will be headed by Robert Lieber, president; H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer; R. A. Rowland, production manager; and E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution. E. Bruce Johnson, chief of the First National foreign department, will report on his activities during the past year.

PARAMOUNT MAKES MANY EXPLOITATION SHIFTS

Big Releasing Program Calls for Complete Reorganization

IN anticipation of the big releasing program to be launched by Paramount for the coming Fall and Winter season, the company's exploitation department, under the direction of Claud Saunders, has been completely reorganized. In addition to the five men who have been handling the field work of the department since last Fall, sixteen more exploiters have been added during the past two weeks.

Russell B. Moon, who has been handling the New England territory, is transferred from Boston to Chicago; Leslie F. Whelan has been transferred from Cleveland to Philadelphia and will also handle the Wilkes-Barre territory; Kenneth Renaud, who has been operating in the Southern territory with headquarters in Atlanta, is transferred to Detroit, and Harry C. Eagles and Rick Ricketson remain at San Francisco and Denver-Salt Lake City respectively.

The other assignments are as follows: Bob Gary, Kansas City; George Gambrill, St. Louis; Vernon Gray, Washington; Jack Hellman, Minneapolis; Gavin C. Hawn, Atlanta; William Bender, Cleveland; John Callahan, New Haven; Curtis Dunham, Dallas; John P. McConville, Boston and Portland, Me.; William Mendelssohn, Buffalo; Maurice Ridge, Cincinnati; William Robson, Pittsburgh; Harry Swift, Los Angeles; Charles E. Wagner, Columbus; Irvin A. ROBERT VIGNOLA WILL PRODUCE FOR METRO

Well Known Director to Start Work at Hollywood Next Month

METRO announces that an arrangement has been made with Robert G. Vignola whereby the well known director will produce a series of Robert G. Vignola Productions for them.

Officials of the Metro organization feel that the association will be a particularly happy one. In obtaining Mr. Vignola's productions, they believe, it will further the policy of Metro to give exhibitors the finest possible motion picture entertainment.

Robert G. Vignola is one of the foremost directors in the business and his achievements are too well known to require dwelling on in detail. Undoubtedly he is one of the half dozen most experienced, constructive and fearless directors making box office successes. He was responsible for the Marion Davies' successes, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Enchantment" and "Yolanda." Practically every star in the business has, at one time or another, appeared under his direction.

Mr. Vignola has but recently returned from a tour of the world, taken in order to add to his store of experience and gather data for his future productions. He will have his first opportunity to employ the results of this trip in his initial production for Metro on which he will begin work at the Metro studios next month.

The Metro announcement also contains the information that the first of Mr. Vignola's productions under his new arrangement will be from an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon. This is now being put into shape for production and plans are being made for Mr. Vignola's arrival at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

HARRY DAVIS TAKES ACTION AGAINST INSURGENTS

H. Harry Meyers, personal representative of Harry Davis, theatre owner of Pittsburgh, has entered suit against the newly organized Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation of New York and the case will be heard within a short time in New York courts.

An injunction against the use of the name of the new company will be asked for. The Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation of Delaware is licensed to transact business in every state, and it is felt it has the exclusive right to the title.

The controversy between the Delaware and New York corporations has been given considerable publicity and on the surface looks like a momentous affair, but delving under the surface reveals little material for the ballyhoo. It is quite possible the whole affair will be adjusted with little difficulty, and what now appears to be a hurricane will show itself to be a tempest in a teapot.

SIDNEY OLCOTT WILL DIRECT NORMA TALMADGE

Although the Joseph M. Schenck Productions have not yet verified the report, it is almost a certainty that Sidney Olcott will direct a picture for Norma Talmadge. The official announcement is expected within a few days.

Sidney Olcott has long since attained full height as a director, but by his skillful guidance of Rudolph Valentino and Bebe Daniels through "Monsieur Beaucaire" he has added cubits to his directorial stature. Those who praised his accomplishments in "The Green Goddess," "Little Old New York" and "The Humming Bird," may prepare to do some real raving over this latest triumph, it is said.

RETIREMENT OF SYDNEY COHEN ABSOLUTE CERTAINTY

Reports have been circulated within the past week to the effect that Sydney Cohen, president of M. P. T. O. of America, would reconsider his previous announcement to resign at the coming National Convention to be held in Boston in May. This rumor has been spiked by one of Mr. Cohen's associates, who stated that the president has given much of his time to the affairs of the organization and through his untiring efforts has built up an organization that is of great benefit to the exhibitor, but the work is now accomplished and he wishes to step out and devote his time to personal business.

This lays at rest the rumor. Mr. Cohen has neglected his own affairs in order to attend to organization work, but he feels called upon to relinquish the reins of office and devote his time to his more urgent business.

A Fountain of Youth

ONE of the long-standing shortcomings in the distribution of motion pictures has been the lack of reasonable circulation for many of the really worthwhile productions. It is not to be expected that all subjects rated at least as good will register a 100 per cent return. The industry has a right to expect that they will measurably approach that figure, nevertheless.

The problem is one that directly affects every person in the trade. No one of the three principal factors is exempt from its influence. The margin between a 50 per cent and a 75 per cent circulation of a given subject means in many instances to a producer the difference between shutting up shop and going ahead on the production of another picture under heartening circumstances.

To the distributor the difference means dividends not only in money but in satisfied customers. For human nature is much the same the world around, and as a rule a picture that gives pleasure in one community will do the same in another.

To the producer-distributor the difference is far greater than can possibly be the case with either individually.

Assuming that the prints are in good shape—and by all means they should be—and that the production is out of the red ink the product may be merchandized at an exceedingly low selling cost. It is a cost that is based not on overhead as that term ordinarily may be understood.

OVERHEAD, it will be conceded, is divided originally into three principal factors: Negative, prints and advertising and exploitation.

In the case of the particular problem under discussion the two major elements are not present. On the debit side appear only the advertising or exploitation charges, which are not heavy, and the ordinary expenses of selling.

To the exhibitor the Tried and Proved Picture is of importance, from several points of view.

For the more fortunately situated from a monetary standpoint it means by reason of longer life a reduction in charges on the earlier runs.

For those theatre owners whose property has a lower visibility when seen through the financial spyglass the Tried and Proved Picture is one with a spreading background.

It is standardized merchandise. It has a record, showing what has been achieved in competition with and without competition from other successful productions.

There is a stack of ready-made exploitation material available for any conceivable circumstance or surrounding—and it might be said that few houses in the same general neighborhood have to face identical handicaps in selling their wares.

In the range of an exchange territory, however, there are exhibitors situated similarly to one another.

IN any community of any size, are many motion picture patrons who have heard of a Tried and Proved Picture, have heard good reports of it, but never have been able to "catch" it.

And don't forget that any picture, whether on the market one year or two years, is a first run subject in any locality where it has not been shown previously.

If you are one of those having trouble in making ends meet—and by this we mean genuinely so, not camouflage for the benefit of salesmen—a properly exploited Tried and Proved Picture once a week should turn out to be a good tonic for your box office and please your patrons at the same time.

The extension of the life of the Tried and Proved Picture contains no menace for the good production of today or tomorrow.

It gives courage to the maker of the good picture, demonstrating what may be done in the way of enhancing returns for a subject that is worthy.

And just a word as to what constitutes a Tried and Proved Picture. It is not one in which the garb worn by the women is so antiquated as to precipitate screams of derision from the feminine portion of any house when the characters appear on the screen. Not at all.

A Tried and Proved Picture is one which may be shown by any exhibitor not only without apology but with surety in its appeal and with pride in its merit.

The Exhibitors' Round Table

Verdict Not Very Favorable

What you want and what you get are often two very different things. The Overland Amusement Company has just had a very pointed example of this when it filed suit for $13,463.65 and was awarded a verdict of $309.33. A jury of the Federal court at Kansas City was responsible for the verdict. The suit was started against the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company and the Insurance Society of Canton, Ohio, following a fire in the Doric Theatre, Kansas City, which was insured against fire by these two companies. A leak in the gas main is believed to have been responsible for the explosion from which the fire resulted and the decision was based on the fact that the greater part of the damage was caused by the explosion against which the theatre was not insured, and not by the fire itself.

The effect that local radio broadcasting has on theatre attendance is indicated at Ottawa, Ontario, in connection with the fluctuations in patronage at the Loew Theatre. Since the opening of the new Station at Ottawa, which is the most powerful station in Canada, it is claimed, the weak night of the week is Wednesday at Loew's Ottawa Theatre, according to Manager Frank Goodale. This is the evening on which the radio station sends out its most attractive programme. Previously, Friday night was the poorest evening at the theatre box office but Friday night has pulled up stronger than before, with Wednesday down. This fact indicates that the people are taking in both the radio and the theatre.

'BEAU BRUMMEL' FINDS NEW YORK WELCOME

Distinguished Audience Greet Warner Feature at Strand

ALL New York roads last Sunday led to the Mark Strand Theatre, where was presented the eastern premiere of Warner Brothers' "Beau Brummel," adapted from the sparkling play of Clyde Fitch, and with John Barrymore in the title role. So resolved were the amusement seekers not to miss this performance, that an unusually large audience came for the first presentation at 12:35; by 2 o'clock not a seat could be had for love or money. Throughout this and successive showing, during the day, the theatre assumed the appearance of a regular first-night of a picture at a regular theatre house.

It was attended by many headliners of the stage, drawn hither by the reports of the brilliant performance of John Barrymore, and by the distinguished direction of Harry Beaumont.

After beholding this spirited performance, one can see that Warner Brothers were right when they felt the production deserved a presentation in a regular theatre. The way the audiences responded is guarantee of its box-office future throughout the remainder of the country. There is no doubt that the companies now road-showing the picture in the east and middle west will reap a harvest of profit for exhibitors.

In addition to lavish praise on "Beau Brummel," newspaper reviewers went out of their way to laud Warner Brothers for having chosen this play, and having gone through with it so consummately. "Long live Warner Brothers!" exclaimed the critic of the Herald Tribune, while Louella Parsons in the American declared "Beau Brummel" to be a credit to the house of Warner.

The picture is true to the famous story and loses nothing of the author's fine touch. It combines every element for success and will live long after many other features are forgotten.

VALENTINO SHORT SUBJECT PROVING A WINNER

Al Lichtman, Universal sales chief, reports that "A Society Sensation," Universal's re-edited Rudolph Valentino picture, is proving the most remarkable sales proposition Universal has handled in many months. Made several years ago as a five-reeler, it has been cut down to two-reels and snapped up with up-to-date titles. And it is selling better than many present day pictures.

A number of unusual records have been made by the Universal sales force with this picture. It was sold to the Loew circuit for 106 days, and now is playing in Loew's houses throughout New York City. In addition to the New York circuit, the picture is booked to appear in the Loew houses in the following cities, Washington, D. C., Nashville, Memphis, New Orleans, Birmingham, Atlanta, Dayton, Toledo and Toronto.

It is of especial interest that many theatres are featuring the Valentino re-issue over their long length bookings. At Loew's State Theatre, New York City, Valentino's name is featured in lights along with the vaudeville headliners, by reason of the showing of "A Society Sensation."

At the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, "A Society Sensation" was billed as big as the feature on 24-sheet stands and in the trolley car ads.

One of the novel bookings of the Valentino picture is reported to Universal from Hamilton, Ont. Cliff A. Schaufele, manager of the Lyric Theatre, a straight vaudeville house, broke all precedents and replaced one of his vaudeville acts with "A Society Sensation," paying the same price for the picture as he is accustomed to pay for a first class vaudeville act.

"My business has been beyond expectations," he reported. "It is not only a good buy for a picture house, but for a straight vaudeville house such as I manage."

As a result of Schaufele's success with "A Society Sensation," Universal salesmen are

ST. LOUIS FANS STRONG FOR 'THY NAME IS WOMAN'

A representative letter, one of many others that are beginning to come into the Metro offices here is this communication from Spyros P. Skouras, president of the Skouras Brothers Circuit of St. Louis, on their engagements to date of Fred Niblo's latest production, "Thy Name Is Woman." Mr. Skouras wrote to Charles Werner, Manager of Metro's St. Louis Exchange as follows:

ENTHUSIASTIC PREVIEW FOR 'GIRL SHY'

Remarkable Reception for Lloyd's Feature at Trade Showing

WHAT undoubtedly was one of the most remarkable trade-showings in point of numbers and enthusiasm ever held in New York was staged last week when Harold Lloyd's latest comedy for Pathe, "Girl Shy," was shown on Friday, March 28, at Loew's New York Roof. By the beginning of the performance at two o'clock every seat in the big auditorium had been taken and the standing space had become so overtaxed that it was found necessary in the interests of safety to refuse admission to the waiting hundreds that filled the lobby and overflowed the street in front of the theatre.

The picture itself received an ovation, the great crowd at times being moved to a pitch of frenzied excitement and laughter. "Harold Lloyd's greatest!" was the comment heard on all sides amid the acclaim accorded the production at its close. Exhibitors and critics, who have been attending trade showings in the Metropolitan district within the past decade, declared that no picture within their memory had been given so wholehearted and enthusiastic reception on similar occasions.

A special program was presented in conjunction with the showing, leading off with Pathe's forthcoming "Sport-lights" release, "Sun and Snow." The new Will Nigh Miniature for Pathe, titled "The Guest," followed. This single-reeler with its swift, dramatic punch and semi-tragic rote contrasted pleasingly with the comedy feature of the program, which followed immediately. Ernest Luz's orchestra furnished the music, including a special score arranged for "Girl Shy."

The Harold Lloyd comedy will make its next appearance in New York when it opens Easter Sunday, April 20, at the Mark Strand Theatre.

'COVERED WAGON' MAKES DEBUT IN HAVANA, CUBA

Havana, Cuba, paid a glowing tribute to "The Covered Wagon" at the Fausto Theatre, on Thursday evening, March 27, when the Paramount production began an indefinite engagement before one of the largest and most distinguished audiences which has ever greeted a motion picture in that city. A cabled report of the premiere received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, indicated an unprecedented demand for seats, all previous box-office records of the Fausto being shattered by a wide margin. Critics declared the picture to be the greatest production ever presented in Cuba.

The Cuban premiere marks the first presentation of "The Covered Wagon" in a Latin-American country. The Caribbean Film Company, Paramount distributors in Cuba, conducted a most aggressive campaign on behalf of the James Cruze special, and predicts a record-breaking engagement at the Fausto, which it owns and operates.

The next Latin-American country to see "The Covered Wagon" will be Argentina, Mr. Shauer having concluded arrangements with Max-Glucksmann for its presentation at the Capitol theatre in Buenos Aires.

'WHEN A MAN'S A MAN' CROWDS THEATRES

Reports from Many Cities Claim Record Breaking Business

ACCORDING to reports received this week by Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of Principal Pictures Corporation, Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man," a First National attraction, did a record breaking business at Loew's Victoria Theatre, New York City, last week; has established itself as a box-office sensation at the Orpheum, Chicago, where it is in the second week of an indefinite engagement; opened to remarkable attendances at Loew's Palace in Washington and the Circle Theatre Indianapolis, and continues to create a furore throughout the United States.

At Loew's Victoria in New York, "When a Man's a Man," according to Mr. Lesser's reports, played to some of the biggest attendance and receipts ever registered by a photoplay attraction at that theatre. The picture opened to capacity on Thursday night and for the ensuing four days of its run standing room was at a premium for both matinee and evening performances.

In Chicago, "When a Man's a Man" did phenomenal business at the Orpheum in its first week. According to reports received by Mr. Lesser from Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, the picture is holding up to big business in its second week and has done so exceptionally well that its run is indefinite.

"When a Man's a Man" opened at Loew's Palace in Washington, D. C., last Sunday to capacity houses and did so well in the first few days of the week that it gives indications of registering a new record for that playhouse.

At the Circle, Indianapolis, "When a Man's a Man" also opened on Sunday night to record-breaking business. At the Melba Theatre, Dallas, Texas it broke all records last week and in other cities throughout the country the picture is also playing to phenomenal business.

'WHITE SISTER' CONTINUES TO BREAK HOUSE RECORDS

Breaking their house records is still an event with exhibitors—one that arouses their enthusiasm. Stan Brown, who used to manage the Garrick Theatre in Minneapolis and who now manages the Strand at Green Bay, Wisconsin, wrote in to L. A. Rozelle, Manager of Metro's office in Chicago, anent "The White Sister":

"Last week we have shattered all records for this theatre with 'The White Sister.'"

Anticipating his engagement of Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," Mr. Brown wrote in the same letter:

"I had the pleasure of managing the Garrick Theatre in Minneapolis while 'Scaramouche' played there last Fall. I am anxious to duplicate or better the Garrick success with 'Scaramouche' here at Green Bay."

IN Preferred's picture, "Poisoned Paradise" the value of a good prologue is demonstrated. It gives a clear insight to the story and prepares one for the big events to follow. Barbara Tennant and Frankie Lee are shown in a scene from the prologue of the play

TUCSON LEADERS BOOST 'SCARAMOUCHE'

Picture Acclaimed by Patrons and Press as Masterpiece

FOLLOWING a special presentation at the Opera House in Tucson, Arizona, Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" evoked the liveliest enthusiasm from prominent people of the city. Subsequently "Scaramouche" played a record engagement at this theatre, winning the hearty support of the newspapers and the general public. Metro officials received letters from Tucson leaders complimenting them on possessing such a great production.

Miss Marion Burroughs Rhea, society and dramatic editor of the Tucson Citizen wrote: "I feel it a privilege to say that it is one of the best presented and the most interesting photoplays it has been my good fortune to see. 'Scaramouche' truly portrays my own mental picture of the book."

Kate B. Reynolds, County School Superintendent wrote: "I recommend 'Scaramouche' as a picture of unusual educational merit. I can truthfully say that I enjoyed every minute of the production and I hope that every one in Tucson will avail him or herself of the opportunity of seeing it."

Charles D. Anderson, who is on the staff of the University of Arizona, declared that he was sure that he was not extravagant "in declaring 'Scaramouche' one of the best pictures I have ever seen. It is a pleasure to me to give my hearty endorsement."

PATHE SCORES VICTORY IN THE 'LEATHERSTOCKING' SERIAL

The Patheserial scored another distinctive victory last week with the opening of "Leatherstocking" at the Newman Theatre, leading first-run house of Kansas City and recognized as one of the foremost motion picture theatres of the country.

This is the first time in the history of the house that a chapter production has been presented at the Newman, and Pathe officials point to the engagement as a definite mark of approval on the part of a high-class theatre of Pathe's policy of "bigger and better serials," a policy which was launched in January with the release of "The Way of a Man" and which is being maintained in the current release of "Leatherstocking."

The new serial, the first episode of which was released generally on March 23, is adapted from James Fenimore Cooper's famous "Leatherstocking Tales."

George Bryan Brummel, officer in the Tenth Hussars sees his sweetheart, Lady Margery, forced to wed Lord Alvanley. Brummel wins the favor of hte Prince of Wales, leaves the regiment, becomes a social lion and England's arbiter of fashion. His love affairs are numerous, but his heart is true to Margery. He quarrels with the Prince, is compelled to flee from his creditors, and finally dies in a French madhouse, with only a faithful servant to witness his passing.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

ENTITLED to rank among the really great productions of the screen, "Beau Brummel," must be listed as a triumph not only for its celebrated star, John Barrymore, but for all concerned in its making. Since opening at the Strand Theatre, New York, that commodious house has been jammed to overflowing night and day. Judging by the enthusiastic reception given the picture, it seems destined to prove as big a commercial success as it is an artistic hit.

The costly settings, beautiful photography, dazzling costumes and glowing society life of the Georgian era combine to make this a de luxe attraction of gorgeous proportions. But fine a spectacle as it is, the real drawing power of "Beau Brummel" lies in the story's wistful pathos and the marvelous acting of John Barrymore.

Lavish backgrounds and brilliant accessories provided with utter disregard of expense have frequently failed to achieve their purpose when associated with films where the human interest note was lacking. But here we have the colorful atmosphere and luxurious display, plus the warm outpouring of sympathy which carries away an audience on a veritable tidal wave of emotion.

At the beginning a mournful chord is struck, when the two young lovers are forced apart. Then the comedy current takes control, as the Beau, basking in the sunshine of royal favor, becomes the supreme arbiter of fashion, treats Prince, acquaintances and creditors with an air of languid, polite irony, reigns as society's recognized leader—and plays lightly with women's hearts while his own is breaking.

For despite the atmosphere of gaiety and humorous interludes, sorrow lurks behind it all, the secret sorrow of a man who smiles disdainfully on the world and hoards bitter memories within the temple of his soul. Only for fleeting instants does he drop the mask of indifference, and it is on these occasions that the superb art of John Barrymore asserts itself.

It was the writer's good fortune many years ago to see the late Richard Mansfield impersonate Beau Brummel on the stage. It is a wise old saw which avers that "comparisons are od'ous," yet, like most profound adages, it fails to fit some occasions, and this is one of them. For, in justice to Mr. Barrymore, one can confidently assert that his conception and execution of the role does not suffer by contrast with the Mansfield tradition.

There is the same keen understanding of dramatic values, the subtle movements and apparently unconscious attention to the development of minor details, seemingly unimportant in themselves, but of such vital consequence in rounding off and perfecting a characterization, which made Richard Mansfield's work immortal.

Mr. Barrymore's exquisite pantomime is a lasting joy to the observer, whether he is engaged in flirting, loosing sharp-edged shafts of sarcasm at the bulky prince, fighting a duel, lovemaking or posing as the glass of fashion. Of the last scene, with its cruelly realistic, savage outbreak of wild insanity and the death of the weary, old shattered dandy, it is only necessary to say that Barrymore is the one actor of today who could play it with such tremendous force and poignant appeal.

The dissolving views by means of which the spirits of the unhappy lovers are shown arising from their bodies, young and beautiful, as in the lost hours of the distant past, to unite at last, are mercifully effective.

Mary Astor is a sweetly charming heroine, Willard Louis struts imposingly and makes a worthy foil to Barrymore in the role of the rotund Prince George. Irene Rich fills the part of the Duchess of York with quiet dignity, and every member of the talented cast in support contributes to the feature's success.

Reference to Richard Mansfield's impersonation of the stage character is in order when exploiting the film. Fashion displays can probably be arranged with leading stores, showing the contrasting styles of Beau Brummel's times and the present day.

Play up John Barrymore as appearing in the greatest screen hit of his career and mention the other well-known members of the cast. Above all, don't be afraid to praise the story to the limit, or the production's general magnificence and artistic lure.

Jack Wainwright	Jack Perrin
Janet Carroll	Helen Ferguson
Rodney Strong	Bernard Randall
James B. Allen	Max Constant
Mr. Carroll	William H. Turner
Mrs. Carroll	Orpha Alba
John Strong	Edwin B. Tilton

Marcia Wainwright, a young married woman, works in the Robert Strong offices. Janet Carroll, another employee, leaves when she weds James Allen. Jack Wainwright, Marcia's husband, meets with misfortune and becomes a freight handler. Marcia is promoted and a breach widens between her and Jack. Rodney Strong pays attention to Marcia and writes anonymous letters which injure the Allens. Jack Wainwright makes good, discovers Rodney's plot, thrashes him and wins back his wife. Marcia quits her position. The Allens are reconciled.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

It is well directed, handsomely photographed and presents a familiar but always attractive theme, that of the business woman who finds herself compelled to choose between a career and domestic happiness with her husband. As this is a problem frequently presented for solution in the lives of many people, the film may be said to possess a universal appeal. It should prove a paying investment for smaller or neighborhood theatres.

As the story works out, it becomes evident that the author is a firm believer in the theory that a married woman's place is in her home, and he demonstrates this to his own satisfaction by a fairly logical chain of events and happy climax. Plenty of folks won't agree with him, of course, but when a picture is constructed so as to afford lots of material for argument, it puts across a good selling point right there, and "Why Get Married" will certainly start a large percentage of spectators talking for and against its propaganda.

As a contrast to the business activities and husband troubles of Marcia Wainwright, we are shown the pleasant home life of Janet Allen, who quits her job when she weds. But the Allens are not without their trials, caused by a scheming gent who writes Janet an anonymous letter, hinting at a liaison between Marcia and Jim Allen, who are employed in the same establishment. Whereupon Janet takes her baby and herself to her parents' residence.

Everything is straightened out in the end, however, the Allens being reconciled and Marcia throwing aside her business worries in favor of household duties. A bit of melodrama is injected into the proceedings, when Jack Wainwright puts up a successful battle with the thieves who try to rob the freight warehouse where he works, and again, when he administers a thrashing to Rodney Strong, the chap who attempts to steal Marcia's affection and libels Jim Allen.

The action throughout is fairly fast and exteriors and interiors are skillfully filmed.

Such catch phrases as—"Should a Married Woman Work?"—"Is Marriage a Bar to Advancement in Business?"—"Can True Love Survive the Handicap of Outside Interests?"—are suggested as advertising aids. You can exploit this as a strong domestic drama and play up Andree Lafayette as a foreign star of unusual beauty and international reputation, the player who scored such a notable success in "Trilby."

The Queen of Sardalia leaves her dissipated husband for a trip to Switzerland. There Paul Verdayne, a young Englishman, becomes her lover. The King sends men to kill Paul, but he escapes them. The Queen bids him farewell, without revealing her identity. Three years later she sends for him. The lovers meet again, but she is slain by the King, who in turn dies at the hand of a servant. As time passes Paul becomes a great British statesman. Visiting Sardalia, he sees his son reigning as monarch of that country.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

IT looks as though Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan studios have turned out a real box office hummer in "Three Weeks." The picture has all the properties which hit the public fancy, a story of romantic passion, jealousy and revenge, melodramatic thrills and suspense; the whole outlined against magnificent backgrounds and lavish settings, both exteriors and interiors beautifully lighted and filmed. It will fill the bill satisfactorily at any theatre, large or small.

Not the least surprising thing about this feature is that Director Alan Crosland managed to develop it from a novel notorious for sensual urge and astonishing frankness, and yet kept the picture free from unpleasant sexual suggestion. Not that "Three Weeks" is likely to disappoint readers of the book from which it is adapted by handing them a cold storage edition of Elinor Glyn's celebrated narrative. On the contrary the famous love scenes are depicted with realistic warmth, but—and here lies the crux of the matter—there isn't a hint of coarseness or touch of vulgarity in the entire production.

Of course, it would be a difficult job to dope out any kind of a moral out of a tale which has for its main theme an illicit love affair, but seekers for amusement are not usually in search of a moral, anyway. "Three Weeks" isn't designed to appeal to the juvenile trade, but adult patrons will find it alluringly artistic and so delicately handled that even a hard-boiled censor would be puzzled where to slash it.

Take one instance—the big debauch of that royal rake, King Constantine, and his merry crew of roisterers. This court revel is a marvel of riot and splendor, full of ginger and alive with color, but thanks to Mr. Crosland's craft, it fascinates without repelling the spectator. There are some mighty fine mob scenes at the beginning, and the tiger-skin and bed of roses episodes which develop in the love affair between Paul Verdayne and the queen are remarkably effective.

It's an unusual thing for a heroine to be killed off in a picture without hurting its commercial value, but in this particular case, the passing of Constantine's queen isn't apt to work out adversely. In a sense, it atones for whatever she may have done unethically. And when the first-night audience at the Capitol Theatre, New York, witnessed her death, its members were clearly affected by the pathos of the scene, the tragedy struck home, but did not arouse opposition. Maybe, if the story finished there, a different result might have been achieved. But Paul is shown as making a great name for himself in after years, even as the dead woman would have wished, and returning to Sardalia to see his son occupying the throne, a clever bit of plot-manipulation which clears away the gloom considerably.

Dramatic honors go to Aileen Pringle for her splendid work in the role of Sardalia's queen. In fact much of the picture's success must be attributed to Miss Pringle's life-like and appealing impersonation of the stately lady who wears a crown yet falls a victim to her passion for the young Briton. Conrad Nagel portrays Paul with his usual polish and finished art, but his performance lacks the intense fire and spirit which distinguishes the leading woman's characterization. Nigel De Brulrier, Stuart Holmes, Mitchell Lewis and John Sainpolis and others in the large cast give excellent support.

The title is a big factor in exploiting this feature. A tie-up with book stores on the novel ought to bring good results, as it is still a favorite in the fiction market, although written sixteen years ago. You can safely praise the story as a sensational love romance, aglow with thrills and passionate color, beautifully photographed and elaborately produced. Aileen Pringle should be featured in your advertising. Conrad Nagel, Mitchell Lewis, John Sainpolis and Stuart Holmes are worth mentioning.

FEATURES MONTY BANKS

'Racing Luck' Stars Short Subject Comedian in Lively Five Reeler

RACING LUCK. Associated Exhibitors Photoplay. Authors, Lex Neal and Gene Havez. Director, Herman C. Raymaker. Length, 4,819 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

The Boy	Monty Banks
The Girl	Helen Ferguson
The Mother	Martha Franklin
The Father	D. Mitzoras
The Uncle	Lionel Belmore
Tony Mora	Francis MacDonald
Cafe Proprietor	William Blaisdell

A young Italian immigrant comes to New York and falls in love with a girl. They become dancing partners in a cafe. Tony Mora, gang leader, is jealous of him and gives him some rough moments, but he whips several of Tony's crowd and knocks out the leader. Having learned to drive a Ford, he is induced to enter a road race. Conspirators lock his racing car in high gear and it has no brakes. He finds himself in serious difficulties but wins the girl and all ends well.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

RACING LUCK provides another favored comedian of the two-reeler circuit with the means of making his debut in the feature field. This time it is Monty Banks, and there is every reason for believing that he has hooked up with an attraction which will make the chaps who check the receipts grin contentedly.

The picture is a deftly constructed, uncommonly well directed blend of effective melodrama and crisp, clean comedy, with a seasoning of pathos; prettily photographed and presented by a capable cast of players. It should win favor with any kind of an audience, containing as it does all the elements of popular appeal.

As given above in synopsis form there doesn't seem to be much to the plot, but it is surprising how this simple tale of an immigrant lad and his adventures, amusing and otherwise, in the New World, shoots over the thrill wallops and radiates breezy humor from the screen. There's five reels of it, and never an inch of padding in the lot.

From the moment the Italian lad starts across the water for Uncle Sam's domain you are interested, because he somehow impresses one as a regular fellow, if he is a foreigner, and you feel that you are going to like him. Even in the film's early stages the comedy stuff develops, as when the hero is about to drink to the Statue of Liberty, then in sight, and his glass is snatched away ere it touches the lips by a uniformed official enforcing the all-powerful Volstead law.

But the most sensational and at the same time mirthful episode develops when the hero, knowing nothing about auto mechanics excepting what he has learned in propelling a flivver, enters a road race and finds himself perched at the wheel of a racer locked in high gear and minus brakes. As the machine cuts circles, hops out into fields and performs all sorts of incredible antics, the fun grows fast and furious and the onlookers alternately rock with laughter and gasp in sympathy with the amateur driver in his hairbreadth escapes from sudden death.

Monty Banks, as might be expected, is immense in the comedy bits which fall to his share as the lead, but much may also be said in praise of the dramatic strength of his work in impersonating the immigrant lad. Helen Ferguson is a charming heroine. Francis MacDonald takes off the rowdy gang leader to the very life and the support is adequate. Exteriors and interiors are well filmed and trick shots are utilized with good effect.

Tell the fans that this picture marks the entry of Monty Banks into feature starring prominence. They are well acquainted with his comedy stuff in "shorts" and are sure to like him in his new vehicle. Play up the big road race and difficulties encountered by an amateur under such conditions, praise the picture as a unique combination of melodrama, pathos and comedy, and give Francis MacDonald and Lionel Belmore, as well as Helen Ferguson, a boost in your exploitation.

HAROLD ROLLS UP BIG LAUGH SCORE

'Girl Shy' Rollicking Comedy With Many New Gags and Stunts

GIRL SHY. Harold Lloyd Photoplay. Released by Pathe. Story by Sam Taylor. Assisted by Ted Wilde, Tim Whelan and Tommy Gray. Directed by Fred Newmeyer and Sam Taylor. Length, 7,600 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

The Poor Boy	Harold Lloyd
The Rich Girl	Jobyna Ralston
The Poor Man	Richard Daniels
The Rich Man	Carlton Griffith

Harold Meadows, a timid stammering young apprentice to a small town tailor, is about as comfortable in the presence of a girl as an Eskimo in the tropics. His knowledge of the fair sex is appallingly slight, but this does not restrain him from writing a book. One which purports to stand as an epic on the secret of winning the heart of the wily, evasive female. He finishes the masterpiece and forthwith leaves for the big city to make some publisher happy. On the train he meets a pretty girl, who falls in love with him at first sight. The two meet later in the country, and pledge their troth. Subsequently Harold's literary masterpiece is returned to him, with a curt rejection by the ungrateful publisher. Harold immediately calls off his engagement, and the girl accepts the proposal of a former suitor. Later, a change of heart on the part of the publisher brings an acceptance and a good-sized check to Harold, upon which he makes desperate efforts to reach his forsaken sweetheart before the ill-fated wedding takes place. He is successful, but not before he has thrown a whole city into a panic by his ruthless violation of traffic, police rules and other sundries within a radius of twenty miles of his fair damsel's home. However, all's well that ends well, and in this case, particularly so.

By MICHAEL L. SIMMONS

HAROLD LLOYD at his "acrobatingest." Harold in a tender, lilting love affair. One involving all the emotional fluctuations found in serious drama. Finally, Harold winning his lady fair after defying law, order and fate with the aid of various mediums of locomotion, which might well stand as an exhibit on the evolution of vehicles, primitive and modern.

Loew's New York Roof was the scene of this showing, and if ever a film was put to the acid test by a highly critical audience "Girl Shy" is the picture. Fifteen hundred exhibitors, (a rough guess) turned out to see the screening. Case-hardened showmen—old-timers, ostensibly versed in the devices of the movie gagster, joined unrestrainedly with their children, with reviewers and critics, in giving vent to one long symphony of laughs. Need one say more as a tribute to a picture that purports to be funny!

Like good wine Harold Lloyd improves with age. The acquisition of the years seems to have brought him a more thoughtful attentiveness and regard for the story part of a film. In "Girl Shy," this is particularly noticeable, with the consequence of a logical plot and perfectly coherent continuity keeping pace with every inch of the action. There is a satisfaction to this that leaves the observer with no lack of pleasurable thrills.

The picture starts placidly enough with the hero, Harold Meadows, apprenticed to a tank-town tailor, and running to cover like a rabbit, if he but sees the hem of a feminine dress in any part of his field of vision. Naturally his experience with the members of the fair sex is nil and his knowledge of them less so, but this does not restrain him from aspiring to literary authorship, with the subject, "How to Win Women," or words to that effect serving as the vehicle for his pen.

The fun begins when Harold starts for the big city, with his finished brain child, there to enlist a publisher's aid in startling a gaping world with his masterpiece. A gag which touched a mirthful chord that resounded like the rattling crack of musketry was that in which Harold helps a sweet, young, poor little rich girl outwit a railroad conductor, by hiding her doggie under the profuse beard of a sleeping passenger. Throughout the trip, Harold is perfectly delightful with his distinctly individual portrayal of the shy, stammering youth made to enjoy the young woman's company despite his afflictions. So much so, that he finally gets up spunk enough to buy her a box of Cracker Jacks.

This love-at-first-sight has the usual complications, and later meetings lead to a pledge of troth. The situation develops a subsequent dismal climax when Harold receives word of the publisher's rejection of his manuscript, and motivated by a spirit of self-sacrifice he sends her word that their engagement is off. The darkest hour arrives when he learns that out of pure pique she has accepted the proposal of a former suitor. True to proverbial form, at the very darkest moment, fate takes a hand and sends down some hectic shafts of bright shimmering dawn.

Wow! Things begin to hum. The plot commences to hit on all six as Harold discovers a check in the next mail, running into four figures, from the publisher, who on second thought decides to publish the manuscript as a joke book. The figures are not the only things that run. Harold, for a starter, hits the high spots in a desperate attempt to get to his girl, who is that day slated to don the bridal veil.

The gag, in which our hero misses the train, by stammering just a few syllables too long in buying his ticket brought its just reward. However, trains are not the only thing that "locomote." So Harold proceeds to set the whole town loco in his spirited attempt to beat the law of gravitation and traffic. In fact he succeeds, if one is to judge by the antics of the various vehicles which he conscripts in each case with never so much as a "by your leave"! When the flivver flops, he uses a bike. When the bike bends, he grabs a traffic policeman's motorcycle. When this gives out, he purloins—actually purloins—a trolley car. The trolley comes to grief, but not Harold, for he quickly maneuvers a team of dashing-mad truck horses in his chase against time.

Zam-Powie-Biff! How folks do take for cover as our hero punishes territory, until with an additional crunch, slam and a bang, he goes right through a window, just in time to interrupt the preachers "Do you take—!" In true cave-man style Harold throws the girl over his shoulder, and to the accompaniment of terrific handclapping and cheers from the spectators—the ones at the theatre, not at the wedding—carries her away for himself. Satisfying, rollicking entertainment.
